Now, I want to assure gentlemen that it is not any captious opposition to this provision which prompts me to take the position I do in reference to it. I believe that it is wrong to appropriate this money for this purpose, and I believe that if I could get members to understand the proposition as it really is they would agree with me in reference to it, and the only fear I have of failure in this case is because of my inability to get the matter properly before the committee.

The grounds upon which this provision is opposed are briefly stated in the views of the minority. I will read them, and will ask the attention of members while I do so:

We, the undersigned, members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, respectfully dissent from the report made by the majority of said committee on the "Post-Office appropriation bill," wherein it proposes to appropriate $196,614.22, as said bill indicates, "for necessary and special mail facilities on trunk lines."

First. Because we think the principle that recognizes the right of the Government through any of its departments or agents to discriminate in favor of one individual or enterprise, and not all alike, as indefensible upon any line of fairness or justice, and demoralizing to the whole system.

Now, gentlemen, take that proposition and revolve it in your minds, consider it carefully and make up your own verdict, and then I will ask you if you do not agree with me and my associates who have made this minority report. If you do not agree with me, I want the reason why, and the country will want to know, too, when the result of your action is understood.

Let me now call your attention to another portion of the views of the minority. There is nothing contained in this that is not susceptible of demonstration by the record, and when I say that, I know what I am talking about.

Second. The Postmaster-General, whose duty it is to give attention to postal matters, after a careful consideration of the subject, does not recommend the continuance of appropriations for this purpose; but on the contrary, shows by his report that the railroad lines which have heretofore been the beneficiaries of this fund, and are not now receiving any part of it, are to-day rendering equally as good if not better service than was rendered by them during the time they participated in the distribution of this appropriation. We desire also to call attention to the many railroad lines, particularly in the western portion of this country, which pass through sparsely settled sections, and do not receive any extra compensation.

Gentlemen, bear that in mind, for it is true that the railroad lines which have heretofore participated in the distribution of this fund, according to the Postmaster-General's report, although they are not receiving one penny of it now, are to-day rendering equally as good service, if not better, than they rendered when they did receive a part of it. Now, if that is true, what excuse have you got for making this appropriation? Ask yourselves the question. If that proposition is true, what excuse can be rendered to the country for this appropriation? Gentlemen, you can not excuse it. You may vote to keep it in the bill, but if you do you can not give any reason that will stand the test of reason and good common sense.

Now, I want to call your attention to some other statements contained in the minority report. We further say here:

Postmaster-General Dickinson, during his administration, condemned the principle involved in this appropriation as demoralizing to the service. No Postmaster-General, so far as we are advised, has ever recommended an appropriation of this character, and Postmaster-General Wanamaker, in his last annual report made in 1892 in relation to this subject, uses the following language:

"The special facility allowance has for some years past been the source of much annoyance to the Department, and has hampered the best interests of the mail service."

Gentlemen, do you suppose the Postmaster-General is telling the truth about that? If you say he is not, you ought to be able to give some reason why he is not. When the Postmaster-General, whose duty it is to give attention to these matters, tells you that this appropriation is not only unnecessary, but is detrimental to the best interests of the postal service, what excuse are you going to give to the people for making it?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KYLE. Yes, sir; though I would rather get a little further along first.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, before this debate progresses further, I would like to have some agreement as to when general debate shall terminate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not take the gentleman from Mississippi off the floor at this time for that purpose.

Mr. KYLE. We will agree later on. Now, Mr. Chairman, the views of the minority, as set out in this report, briefly state the reasons why we oppose this appropriation, and all I ask of the members of this committee is to take those reasons and put by the side of them the facts as they exist, and then, if they find that this minority report does not state the truth, I am willing that they shall vote against the proposition to strike this appropriation out of the bill. But, on the other hand, if, after they have taken these views and placed them by the side of the facts, they find that they are right, then I say they ought to vote to strike out this appropriation. Why? In the first place, because it will appear that it is a useless appropriation. It accomplishes no good. On the contrary, if the Postmaster-General is to be believed, it is not only useless but it is injurious to the service, and therefore it ought to be stricken out of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a matter of history with which some gentlemen on this floor are familiar. At the last session of Congress, when Mr. Blount, Mr. WILSON, Mr. LOUD, myself, and others attempted in this House to prevent the perpetration of this wrong, as we regarded it, we were met with a statement that on the Coast Line, which carries the mail between New York and Florida, there has been secured by reason of this appropriation an expedition of the mails. Now, as a matter of fact that railroad to-day does not receive one cent of this appropriation, and it has not received a cent of it since the last Congress. Yet, taking the Postmaster-General's report, it will be found that that line is rendering as good service to-day as it rendered when it received a part of this appropriation. This is no idle statement of mine; it is not a statement made without reason. I state the fact as it exists. I say this road is carrying the mail as rapidly as it did before.

When it became manifest at the last session of Congress that this road would not participate any longer in this distribution, the Richmond and Danville system came here with the determination to participate in this fund; and that company went to work in every way they could to secure the putting into this appropriation bill of a clause which would enable it to do so. And the same provision is in this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the facts in regard to the Richmond and Danville Railroad. Bear in mind, gentlemen (for it is a fact that can not be controverted), that this railroad company never participated in this fund at all until Congress fixed the law as I have stated and since the appropriation was fixed as it is to-day. There is not a man on this floor who will deny that proposition. The Richmond and Danville road never got any part of this appropriation until it got it after the adjournment of the last Congress.

Now, let me call attention in this connection to the fact that before this fund was given to the Richmond and Danville Railroad, which is a part of the system carrying the mails from New York to New Orleans, the mail left New York at 4:30 p. m.; it passed Atlanta at 4:10, and it arrived at New Orleans at 7:35—precisely the same schedule that it is running upon to-day.

Mr. LOUD. They are making ten minutes slower time now than they made before they received any part of this fund.

Mr. KYLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly manifest that so far as this line is concerned, this fund has not had the effect of expediting the mail—if my figures are correct—one second; and if my colleague on the committee [Mr. LOUD] is right, the service is ten minutes slower than it was before the company received this fund.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest that the gentleman may be mistaken. He is making a comparison with the time made by the vestibule train before the company received this money.

Mr. KYLE. I am speaking of the mail schedules as I get them from the Postmaster-General. There is no vestibule train concerned in this matter. I have taken the schedule which was in operation before the company received this fund and the schedule in operation now since this fund is paid to this railroad.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say to the gentleman that the time on the fast mail train has been shortened six hours and thirty minutes.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, we will see about that. I will furnish the time tables and the report of the Postmaster-General covering every point.

Mr. KYLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been appealed to not to oppose the expenditure of this money because it goes to the South; I have been taken to task by many newspapers for opposing it, because that section of country which they know I love so well is to be the beneficiary. It makes no difference with me, however, as to what part of our great country this money may go. In my humble judgment, this expenditure is a wrong and one which ought to be prevented if possible, and I will show later on who really does get the money, when it will appear that the South is not the beneficiary.

Now, I will call attention to what the late Postmaster-General says on this subject; and I trust gentlemen will listen to it, because it states this case better than I can put it. And this statement comes from a man who has had an opportunity to know the facts better than any of us. I read from the report of Postmaster-General Wanamaker, made to the last Congress. It will be remembered that he declined to make any recommendation for the continuation of this appropriation, and gave as his reason, as I stated a while ago, that this expenditure was detrimental to the service, that it did not expedite the mails, but merely created a feeling of jealousy and discontent among the railroad companies who were not the beneficiaries of this fund. Mr. Wanamaker says:

> The amount estimated as necessary for the current fiscal year is $196,614.16.
> In the report of a year ago I stated my reasons for declining to recommend further appropriations for so-called "special facilities," and I feel it to be a duty both to the Government and as well to the service to again decline making such a recommendation. I believe that the granting to a few and refusing to extend like compensation to the many who are performing as good or better mail schedules is a source of injury to the mail service. The preferential method should cease or all who expedite the mails should be granted the same benefit.
> The impression that the special facility compensation allowed the lines extending to Port Tampa, Fla.—
> This is the coast line about which I spoke a while ago—
> advances the Cuba mails is incorrect. It pratically retards those mails because it prevents the enforcement by the Department of the twenty-five hour schedule provided for in the contract for the ocean service between Port Tampa and Havana.

Now, I invite the attention of the committee especially to the Richmond and Danville system, and to what the Postmaster-General said of that system before it began to put its arm into the public Treasury and get part of this $200,000:

> The Richmond and Danville Railroad, operating south and southwest by Atlanta: the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad system, operating south and southwest from Cincinnati; the Norfolk and Western Railroad in conjunction with the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia line, operating west and south from Washington, D. C., and Norfolk via Bristol and Chattanooga, Tenn., and the Illinois Central Railroad, operating south from Chicago via Cairo, Ill., have each created an extent of expedited mail schedules within the past year that is much superior to those termed "special facility" trains by Jacksonville, Fla., to Port Tampa.

Now mind you, Mr. Chairman, the Richmond and Danville system is to-day getting $81,286.25 of this fund, according to the report of the Postmaster-General, and here in his report of a year ago he said that the same road was one of those that were rendering better service to the Government than those roads which were receiving the special-facilities fund. I suppose that is true. If it is not true how are you going to prove that it is not? Here is the Postmaster-General, whose duty it is to look into these matters and inform the public on this question, who says that the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company was rendering better service when it got none of the special facilities fund than those roads rendered which were getting it.

What did you do in the last Congress when you voted this appropriation? Did you do the mail service any good? Did you advance the interests of the country to any extent?

No, not at all; but according to the report of the Postmaster-General you gave away $81,000 of the money of the nation to a railroad company to expedite the mails, as you say, that is running upon exactly the same schedule now that it ran upon before it got it, and making the same time, as far as the mail service is concerned, that it made before. If that is true, are you not perpetrating a wrong when you take the money from the Treasury and give it to these companies for such a purpose?

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask this question: Whether there was any showing before the committee of the necessity of the appropriation of this fund?

Mr. KYLE. None earthly. There has been no man, Mr. Chairman, connected with the Post-Office Department that has had the hardihood to come before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to advocate the continuance of this appropriation.

Mr. COX. Who does advocate it, and how does it get here?

Mr. KYLE. Nobody. There were eight members of the committee altogether present when it was decided to report the bill in its present shape; six were in favor of the proposition and voted for it, and two dissented. That is as much information as I have in my possession as to who advocates it and how it gets here.

Mr. COOMBS. From what source comes the demand for special facilities?

Mr. KYLE. I can not say unless from the railroads, for nobody else demands it. This Richmond and Danville system was very anxious for it last session, and I suppose they are yet.

Mr. COX. Did the railroads appear before the committee and make a demand for it?

Mr. KYLE. Not that I know of this session.

Mr. COOMBS. I understand the Postmaster-General disapproves of this appropriation.

Mr. KYLE. He does not recommend it. He does not say anything; but his report shows that the Coast Line, which formerly received this benefit, is now rendering possibly better service than it ever did. As a matter of fact it does not participate in this fund.

Mr. COX. I understand my friend to say that the railroads that get no part of this fund are rendering equally as good service or better service than those which do get it.

Mr. KYLE. I do; and the Postmaster-General names some roads that rendered as good service before they got the fund as any railroads in the country.

Mr. COX. Then what in the world do they want with the money?

Mr. KYLE. I certainly do not know. I contended all the time and contend now that if this proposition is understood by the House they would vote the proposition out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is very much more that I wanted to call the attention of the committee to, but I do not want to weary the members present with these recitals. I only want to go far enough to enlist the interest of gentlemen on this floor to the extent that it will make them investigate this question, and when they do I have no doubt of the result, because I believe you wish to do what is right.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman permit me now to present a schedule of the mail time on this road? He does not want to be wrong. I am sure, on such a question.

Mr. KYLE. I have no time to submit to interruptions. I have stated my proposition, and if the gentleman can deny it let him reply to me in his own time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. All right; I shall certainly do it.

Mr. KYLE. I have my information from the Post-Office Department. I have not been attempting to give anything that is not authentic, and I do not intend to.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, I have the schedule of time here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi declines to yield, and the gentleman from Georgia is not in order to interrupt without his consent.

Mr. KYLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, in this report he says further:

No recommendation has been made for the customary special mail facility allowance—

A MEMBER. Whose report is that?

Mr. KYLE. Ex-Postmaster-General Wanamaker's—

because I do not believe there exists any occasion for perpetuating the preferential methods whereby a limited number of railroads would be paid both ordinary and extraordinary compensation, while other railroads performing precisely the same character of service can be allowed nothing more than the compensation which we are by statute permitted to pay for ordinary transportation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is a fair statement. All of these railroad companies ought to be treated alike. These people receive as much under this statute as any other railroad, in proportion to the amount of mail matter they carry. And mind you, this bill is so constructed, it is fixed in such a way, that no railroad can participate in the distribution of this fund except such as are indicated in this provision in this appropriation bill.

A MEMBER. What provision are you referring to now?

Mr. KYLE. The provis on on pages 4 and 5.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I should like to ask my colleague how long has this appropriation for expediting the mail service been in existence, and what were the reasons given for its original enactment?

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, it was put into the bill first in 1879; ex-Postmaster-General Wanamaker states that he is unable to give the reason that existed especially for the inauguration of this practice. Further than that I have no information upon the subject. I sought information alone that line, and that is all I was able to obtain. It is not what the reason was for it when it had its inception, but it is the reason which exists today that we are looking for. The reason might have been good in the beginning, but if the reason has failed the appropriation itself should fail. If the reason for the appropriation that existed in days gone by is gone, then it ought not to be voted unless some other new reason is presented for it.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WISE. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to this paragraph in the clause which he is now discussing:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Now, the question I want to ask is, if the Postmaster-General does not think it necessary, why has he been expending this sum, because it is within his discretion to discontinue it whenever he thinks it does not promote the postal service?

Mr. KYLE. Are you through?

Mr. WISE. That is all.

Mr. KYLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reply to that, that in the first place Congress itself ought to appropriate the money for the necessary expenses of the Government, and not leave it to a Department any more than can be avoided.

Mr. WISE. That is not a satisfactory answer.

Mr. KYLE. And in the next place, when this money is appropriated in this way the Postmaster-General believes that it is an expression on the part of Congress that something is necessary along this line, and he lets the money go in that direction. And now I want to say furthermore, these Postmasters-General, Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Wanamaker, both inveighed against this idea. They said that it was wrong; that it was injurious to the service; that it was detrimental to every interest so far as the mail service of this country was concerned. And yet they went on and expended the money in this way. Mr. Bissell has refused to recommend a continuation of this appropriation, and yet he has expended this same amount of money and given it to these railroads, thereby showing what I said a while ago, that these gentlemen feel that when this appropriation is made in this way it an expression on the part of Congress and the country at large that this money ought to be used in this direction. So it is no answer to this question to meet me with the proposition that it is left to the discretion of the Postmaster General as to whether this money shall be used or not.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I understood the gentleman to state that this sum was expended by the late Postmaster-General, Mr. Wanamaker?

Mr. KYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Is that the fact?

Mr. KYLE. I think so, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I understood that he was against it and did not use it after it was appropriated. If I am misinformed I desire to be corrected.

Mr. KYLE. My understanding is that he used it.

Mr. LOUD. This proviso was not in the appropriation bill at that time.

Mr. MALLORY. It was in the last bill, however. It is in the existing law.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Does the present Postmaster-General recommend this?

Mr. KYLE. No; he does not.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman state if he had not declined to make any recommendation?

Mr. KYLE. He declined to make any recommendation about it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Pro or con?

Mr. KYLE. Pro or con.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Ought he not to have made some expression of his judgment?

Mr. KYLE. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. KYLE. Yes.

Mr. WISE. Was the proviso I have just read in the former appropriation bill?

Mr. KYLE. In which law?

Mr. WISE. In the one the gentleman was then speaking of.

Mr. KYLE. It was in the bill passed by the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. WISE. But not in the bill prior thereto.

Mr. KYLE. It was not in the one prior thereto.

Mr. WISE. So Mr. Wanamaker did not have the discretion given to the Postmaster subsequently; and Wanamaker said he regarded it as mandatory.

Mr. KYLE. That, I suppose, is true.

Mr. WISE. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that this paragraph I read was a direct expression by Congress that the Postmaster-General should not expend it unless he deemed it necessary.

Mr. KYLE. I do not want my amiable friend to consume all my time.

Mr. WISE. I beg pardon; you gave me liberty.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to some other matters. Now, I have been quoting from Postmaster-General Wanamaker's report. That is a Republican authority. I want to quote some Democratic authority to these gentlemen. I read an extract from the report of Mr. Dickinson when he was Postmaster-General. It reads as follows:

I do not venture an opinion as to whether or not the rate of compensation allowed by law is sufficiently liberal to secure for the Government adequate and the best service. It is certain, however—that the dissatisfaction caused by extra compensation to some and not to others has prevented, in some instances, cordial coöperation with the Department to secure much-needed improvement.

There is the point about it—

Now, then, Mr. Wanamaker goes on to say:

In order that you may appreciate the extent to which the ordinary compensation of the railroads interested in the transportation of the West India mails has grown, I call your attention to the following table, showing their payments by adjustment periods.

Now, I will not go through these. This is in connection with the Coast Line that he was especially combatting when this report was made. He did not believe in a continuation of the appropriation to that. He goes on to say of the increase of the compensation for carrying the mails since the system was put in practice that the mail has increased in some instances 29 per cent, some 25 per cent, some 29 per cent, some 36 per cent, and all over the country, Mr. Chairman, this increase has gone on until the Postmaster-General states to-day of these railroads, many of them are receiving, when they get the regular pay, more than double as much as they did when this system was inaugurated. They are receiving more to-day without this extra compensation than they received formerly with it.

Now, there is another reason why this practice is bad, and I want to call attention to it; and I think it is our duty to legislate for all sections of the country alike, without reference to any particular section.

The principal railroads—

Says Mr. Wanamaker—

have learned to value the liberality of the ordinary compensation for mail transportation, and praiseworthy consideration is being given to the adjustment of schedules that shall expedite, primarily, the most important of commercial mails. The distance between Washington and New Orleans, via Atlanta, is 1,143 miles. The time for the most important mail train averages 35 miles per hour. Between Cincinnati and Jacksonville, via Chattanooga, the most important mail service requires less than twenty-nine hours, the distance being close to 800 miles. Between Chicago and New Orleans the fast mail occupies less than twenty-nine hours; the distance is 915 miles. These and many other expedited schedules have been the result of conference with the Department, and the railroads will be content to continue them for the ordinary compensation if they have the assurance of the Department that they are being paid upon as favorable a basis as is allowed other lines.

The fast-mail system over the Iron Mountain system between St. Louis, via Little Rock and Texarkana, and thence throughout Texas, from the Texarkana standpoint, is not what it ought to be; nor is the continuous fast-mail service deflecting at Sedalia, Mo., through Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, the Indian Nation, and Texas, via the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas system, what it should be. Again, the fast-mail service from a Louisville, Ky., standpoint, into Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, and Alabama, is not as complete as the Department aims to have it; but we can not look for hearty coöperation from all the railroads operating north and south, so long as they can point to the special payments made to a few roads; and to many of our applications for expedited schedules the reply comes back that upon the promise of the Government that they shall be paid in like manner as the most favored, they will cheerfully respond to requests for improved schedules.

Now you see, Mr. Chairman, how this fund is used; and as this paragraph provides "for necessary special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., via New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, etc., $100,000," it confines the Postmaster-General to the use of this money in one particular locality. Suppose my friend here [Mr. CLARK of Missouri] wants the mail expedited to St. Louis; suppose our friends out in California want an expedited mail; suppose some other sections of this country want expedited mails, can they get them under the provisions of this bill? Most assuredly not. This fund has got to go in one direction and in one direction alone. The sparsely settled sections through the western portions of our country, where it may be said there is not business enough to justify the running of fast trains, can they get any part of this appropriation? Not a dollar. It goes to these railroads, which before this allowance was made were rendering as good service as they render to-day.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I understand my colleague to say that Postmaster-General Wanamaker was opposed to this appropriation; I will ask him whether Mr. Wanamaker used any portion of the money thus appropriated for expediting the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. KYLE. He used it all, sir.

Mr. COOMBS. I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE] whether the fact that this money is at the disposal of the Postmaster-General does not subject him to a pressure to spend it?

Mr. KYLE. I think so. I do not think there can be any question about that, and the pressure is pretty successful, as has been suggested to me.

Now, I want to call attention to the railroad companies that are receiving this money; and, mind you, they are all compensated under the law just as other railroads in other parts of the country are compensated. The mails are weighed and they receive so much pay for carrying so much weight of mail. The first railroad that participates in this allowance is the Pennsylvania road; the Ponnsylvania, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad receives a part, and the Richmond and Danville Company gets about half of it. The other roads are the Atlanta and West Point, the Western and Alabama, and the Louisville and Nashville. In discussing this question with a gentleman the other day he made the point that by this means we could get our daily papers from New York down to Atlanta and New Orleans and Memphis, and other places, more expeditiously than if we did not have this expedited mail service.

Suppose that is true, what are you doing in the meantime with your papers published at St. Louis and at New Orleans and at Memphis and at other points? You are not providing for those papers to be transported expeditiously. The whole idea with this gentleman who was talking with me was to get the New York daily papers quickly, ignoring the fact that there were daily papers in the capital of his own State, and that they were being crowded out by this legislation. Mr. Chairman, take this proposition in any way you please, turn it over and contemplate it in any light you please, from any conceivable standpoint, and it presents no face that is not a bad one.

Mr. KILGORE. Is it not a fact that the trains which carry this last mail also carry passengers and baggage and express matter?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, is not the competition for the passenger traffic a sufficient inspiration to secure swift trains, and in fact is not that the main inspiration generally?

Mr. KYLE. I think so; but there is no occasion to predicate this case upon that ground, for it stands upon a higher plane than that. In the first place, according to all the proof that we can get upon the subject, there is no use for this appropriation. I know that gentlemen are going to reply to me and are going to advocate this appropriation, but I want you gentlemen to hold them down and require them to give you good reasons for it when they advocate it, and to show you wherein Postmasters-General Wanamaker and Dickinson were mistaken on this subject.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman tell me what proportion of that fund the Louisville and Nashville system gets?

Mr. KYLE. The Louisville and Nashville system gets $39,840. Now, Mr. Chairman, considering the depressed condition of this country generally and the present condition of our exchequer, when the Secretary of the Treasury is called upon to issue bonds and create a debt for future generations to meet, in order to meet the current liabilities of the Government, I think it would come with very bad grace from this House to let these railroads which are without it, compensated as others are, come in and put their hands into the Treasury and take out about $200,000; and I submit in all candor that when gentlemen who are the friends and advocates of this measure propose to argue for it they ought to be called upon to give good and satisfactory reasons why the appropriation should be made. When a gentleman says that this appropriation ought to be made, make him give his reasons for saying so. If he gives a reason, see if it is a good one. Weigh this question, consider it carefully, and, Mr. Chairman, as I said in the outset, when the facts are fairly considered, when the proposition is well digested, I do not believe the members of this House will vote to let this provision remain in this bill. The granting of subsidies is contrary to the traditions of the fathers and the teachings of good plain Democracy. I thank the gentlemen of the committee for the attention they have given me. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it will be seen by the report of the committee that this bill carries $3,125,500 less than the estimates. This, of course, upon its face demonstrates to the country that the great Democratic party is still in pursuit of "economy and reform." But when you come to scrutinize the bill and ascertain the items which have been reduced, I think you can come to no other conclusion than that the "economy" here is simply what might be termed buncombe economy—simply playing to the galleries for effect—because the reduction has been made upon items as to which the service must necessarily continue at the rate of expenditure now provided by law. If this bill did not carry a single dollar, the mail would still continue to be carried upon the railroads; your postmasters throughout the country would continue to receive their salaries, or at least receive the promise of the Government to pay, which in the end would have to be made good by means of a deficiency bill.

Now it is not sufficient for this Congress to say that some previous Congresses have made reductions upon the two or three items mentioned. What this Congress should contemplate is, first, do the needs of the service demand the appropriation recommended by the Postmaster-General? I do not believe that the majority of the committee can claim or can successfully show to this House that the amount called for in the Postmaster-General's estimates will not in the main be demanded, and not alone demanded but received in a deficiency bill after the next election shall have passed.

Now, if your committee had been in pursuit of economy, it seems to me the reduction should have been made in items where a reduction could have had some effect. As an illustration, we might have taken off $100,000 from that item for post-office inspectors. And, by the way, I will add that this year under a full Democratic administration your committee recommends the appropriation for this item of the full amount called for by the Postmaster-General, which is a larger amount than was ever appropriated before.

Now, it looks to my mind like folly to take $1,250,000 out of the appropriations for compensation of postmasters when the committee know full well that this money will be required and appropriated, as I have said, after the elections shall have taken place. The chairman of the committee and the members of the committee know well that there has always been a deficiency in this appropriation, and the committee well know that there will be a deficiency in this appropriation which will be made up; but I suppose the committee, in pursuit of that line of economy, thought it best to make a reduction upon those items in the bill which would not be affected by the action of the committee. They have taken, as I have said, $1,250,000 from the compensation of postmasters; they have taken $1,400,000 from pay of transportation on railroads; they have taken $278,000 from ocean mail service, and $94,000 from the car service. Now, all of this service is contract service, and outside of these items there is a reduction of $103,000 upon other items of the bill. I am free to admit that possibly a portion of the reduction on ocean mail service was reasonably made. There have been one or two contracts annulled since this appropriation was submitted to the committee.

I had at first intended to allow this report to pass without saying a word upon it; for having been a member of the committee in the Fifty-second Congress, when a Democratic House was making appropriations to be expended by a Republican Postmaster-General, and remembering how in the work of this committee at that time the slaughter continued from the first paragraph in the bill to the last, I thought on looking at this bill prepared for the purpose of expending money under a Democratic Postmaster-General that the committee had presented a pretty good bill to this House.

In the Fifty-second Congress the committee proceeded in this manner: In the Postmaster-General's Office $1,000 was called for on account of miscellaneous items; the committee reduced that to $500. On the item of compensation of postmasters there was a reduction of $115,000; compensation of clerks, a reduction of $300,000; rent, light, and fuel, $15,500; expenses of third-class offices, $110,000; free delivery, $304,943. Running on in this way (I will not weary the committee with details) the committee made a reduction upon every item in the bill from the beginning to the end.

The report of the committee will show the deficiencies that have developed in the items upon which such reduction was made. The chairman of the committee can truthfully tell you that for transportation there is a deficiency appropriation now before this House, or will be in a very short time, of $1,200,000; that is for the transportation of the mails last year. And in deciding upon this reduction this year, the question is simply whether you will meet this appropriation fairly and squarely now, or whether you will cut off $1,250,000, to be put on after the election shall have taken place.

Mr. Chairman, I prefer at this time not to discuss this bill further. There is one item—the item discussed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE]—which I should like to discuss when it is reached. If that agreement can not be reached, of course I should be compelled to discuss it before the general debate is closed. I wish also to correct one possible misapprehension that might arise because of the answer by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE], when he occupied the floor, to a question propounded by his colleague [Mr. HOOKER], "If the Postmaster-General preceding Gen. Bissell had not used this money for necessary special facilities?" He replied that he had.

I desire therefore to correct a possible misconstruction of the meaning of that answer in order to exonerate both Postmasters-General Dickinson and Wanamaker, in this, that they found Congress making an appropriation of a stipulated sum year by year without naming a service or without any qualification whatever, and both these officers found that the money had been used for a certain purpose by their predecessors and consequently they felt that they had no discretion in the matter. I am free to confess that in my opinion the present Postmaster-General, under the provision in the last appropriation bill where it gave him discretion that the money should not be used unless it could be shown that it would be for the benefit of the service, I hold that he should not have used that money this year, because the Postmaster-General himself I do not think will claim, at least there can not be one line presented to show that he so held, that it is for the benefit of the general service.

I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if nobody else wishes to address the committee now, I will ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will agree to that, if it can be now understood, by unanimous consent, that when the item of necessary and special facilities is reached in the bill we may have unlimited time to debate it or such time as we can then agree upon.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Can not we agree upon the time now? How much time would you suggest?

Mr. LOUD. I desire to say to the chairman that there is no desire on my part to take any more time than is actually necessary. I shall probably want not more than a half or three-quarters of an hour myself; but it is impossible to determine who may desire to be heard upon the question. I can only assure him that there is no wish to prolong the debate for the purpose merely of consuming time.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed, leaving that matter, to which the gentleman refers, open.

Mr. LOUD. It is understood when that item is reached that the debate may proceed without limit?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky). But the Chairman can not make an agreement that will bind the House.

Mr. LOUD. It can go into the RECORD as a matter of record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that an agreement can be reached now which will be binding on the House if it be made a matter of record, that the general debate on this item of special facilities, as embodied in this bill, may continue without limit; in other words, leaving that matter open, so that the time for debate upon it may be settled when it is reached. I can not agree to closing general debate unless there is such an understanding or agreement.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I am perfectly willing to agree that there shall be time for debate on that proposition. But I do not think there is any reason why we should not close general debate on the rest of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is about the only item in the Post-Office appropriation bill that is going to be debated——

Mr. DUNPHY. That may not be the case.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, there may be one or two other items which will lead to some discussion; but as I understand it, from a partial agreement with the chairman of the committee, there will be ample time to debate these other items. I ask consent, then, that general debate be closed.

Mr. LOUD. I can not agree to that unless time be given for discussion of the item to which I have referred.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I hardly expected my friend from California, after his statement, to agree; and therefore unless the gentleman from North Carolina will agree, when we reach the item of special mail facilities, to give additional time we will have to go on with the debate now.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. I ask that general debate be closed on the entire bill except the paragraph named by the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I would like to ask a question of the chairman before this agreement is made. I would like to hear from him, as representing the majority of the committee that reported the clause in the bill that my colleague [Mr. KYLE] has offered a motion to strike out, why this clause was inserted, and why the act was originally passed in 1879?

Mr. LOUD. We propose to discuss that item when we reach it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We are arranging for unlimited debate upon that now.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. When we reach that paragraph I will explain it fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed, except on the paragraph on page 4, beginning with line 23.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We had better include also the item relative to the printing of postage stamps.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. We will have time enough under the five-minute debate for that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, so far as that is concerned, we have plenty of time now. We are far in advance of the other body. What is the hurry, let me ask, on this Post-Office appropriation bill, all of a sudden?

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman asks that as a conundrum I give it up. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from New York says if I ask that as a conundrum he gives it up. Now, here is a change in the bill from the old rule of law as to the printing of postage stamps.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not at all; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. All right; if I am mistaken I will sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition is that general debate be considered as closed, except on this paragraph in relation to necessary and special facilities on trunk lines.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Chairman, I ask the chairman of the committee to also include the paragraph in relation to rural free delivery. We want to say something about that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We can do that under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to speak on the star-route cases.

Mr. DUNPHY. You can get all the time you want under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Suppose some amendments of a radical nature are offered to this bill?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I will raise the point of order against them.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Suppose they are in order?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. If they are in order they will be debated under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They might be of a nature that would require general debate. I suppose, if general debate is apt, there is no intention to cut it off?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Oh, no; there will be plenty of time on any item that is contested.

Mr. PICKLER. Is there any provision in this bill for postal telegraphing?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. None.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] a question, if he will permit me. Is there anything in this bill that gives special mail facilities to the West?

A MEMBER. The whole bill does that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask for this reason: We are running a postal car from Mandan through into Montana, without any pay whatever, in order to get a little extra mail service for our section of country, while we are going forward to appropriate for extra mail facilities for these Southern trunk lines.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman remember what the postal deficit is for that part of the country?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I do not forget anything. I know what the deficit is in that section of the country, and I know that the excess of expenditures over receipts from the sale of postage stamps, etc., in the Southern States is $5,053,760.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I can tell you the reason why.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I will tell you why; it is because you do not write.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. It is that general debate on this bill be considered as closed, except with regard to the one item of special facilities on trunk lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that it will be difficult for the Chair to determine, when a gentleman is recognized for general debate, whether he is speaking to the one paragraph of the bill. The Chair thinks it would be impossible for the Chair to execute such an order if it was made by consent of the House. The Chair would have to give every gentleman latitude in debate under the rule.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me for one moment. The suggestion is that general debate be now closed upon all propositions except that paragraph, and that general debate shall proceed when we reach that.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the object is to have the bill read by paragraphs, and let us agree to such items as are uncontested. There does not seem to be more than one item contested; and as gentlemen seem to be unwilling to name the time for general debate on that one item, I am perfectly willing to leave the matter open, so that when we reach it there may be a fair and reasonable amount of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] asks unanimous consent that all general debate upon the pending bill be closed, except as to the paragraph indicated by him. The Clerk will report that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., via New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. When that paragraph is reached, what will be done?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be open to general debate.

Mr. PICKLER. On the whole bill, or on that paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the exact proposition that the Chair has already made. There will be difficulty in executing any such order; but if the committee makes it, the Chair will do his best to execute it.

Mr. PICKLER. I am inquiring of the Chair, as a parliamentary inquiry, what the Chair will hold?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not undertake to decide any question of that kind until the question arises.

Mr. PICKLER. It is quite material whether we will be confined to that single proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already pointed out the difficulty. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all general debate upon the bill except this paragraph shall be considered as closed. Is there objection?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to a section which I think is equally important, and I ask that it be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires this matter to be determined first. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of postmasters, $16,000,000.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the words "sixteen million dollars" and insert "seventeen million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I stated in my preliminary remarks on the bill, I do not think that there is any person upon this floor who can successfully contend that the amount specified in my amendment will not be needed for the payment of salaries of postmasters during the year 1894-'95.

And further, as I said before, the only object that can be obtained by cutting this appropriation down $1,250,000 is that the aggregate or lump sum of our appropriations bills shall be just so much smaller, and it will become necessary for this Congress at its next session, after the election shall have passed, to appropriate substantially $1,250,000 as a deficiency on this item. I believe that the time has arrived, if it ever is to arrive, when Congress should honestly meet the cost of the postal service. Now, then, the chairman of the committee will not contend but what this amount of $17,000,000 is required to pay the salaries of postmasters. I believe the time has arrived for us to act honestly and sincerely and to appropriate to-day what the appropriation bill ought to carry.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be voted down. It is impossible to carry on this Government by making appropriations exactly equal to the amount that will be needed in any one year. This is an item on which there have always been deficiencies, and it is an item——

Mr. LOUD. Because you cut it down there is a deficiency.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina (continuing). And it is an item that can afford to wait. The $16,000,000 that we propose to appropriate here is many millions of dollars more in money than the postmasters will need to settle their accounts during the year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It will carry us beyond the 4th of March next.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Why should we appropriate more money than will be necessary to settle all the accounts?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why not appropriate $5,000,000 less then? We could go on the same.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I understand that, and our committee do not think that we ought to depart from the precedents so far as to cut it down beyond the amount proposed.

Mr. LOUD. That is a larger cut than has ever been made.

Mr. REED. Is not this a larger cut than ever?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. It is somewhat larger. The deficiency on the item in 1888 was $908,521.20; in 1889 there was a deficiency of $600,000; in 1891 there was a deficiency of $593,538.66; in 1892 there was a deficiency of $389,074.73. The deficiency for 1893 has not yet been presented to Congress, and we do not know what it will be.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion——

Mr. COOMBS. What was the amount appropriated for 1893?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Fifteen million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will allow me a suggestion?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. I would suggest that even the economical Fifty-second Congress only cut it $115,000, while you propose to cut it $1,250,000.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Oh, we learn by experience, and we find that the Post-Office Department does not need the money, and why should we give it in advance, while the Treasury is nearly bankrupt?

Mr. LOUD. You have not to pay in advance.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Well, it will not be expended and can not be used. There is no need why the money should lie idle in the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman is entirely candid with the House.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I am entirely candid. That is exactly what I desire to be.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (continuing). In this. He says why expend the money when the Treasury is nearly bankrupt?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I say why appropriate the money?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, then, my friend certainly knows this, that of the postage collected the law with reference to this allows the postmasters to retain their salaries, whether it is $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 or $30,000,000; and yet this reduction of this appropriation does not affect them getting their pay in the slightest.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. It does not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And that the postmasters would get their pay if we did not appropriate one cent, and that the cutting of this appropriation is merely to have an opportunity to say that the appropriation is so much less and to square the books; the appropriation can be made in the deficiency bill a year from now; hence it was that I asked my friend, why be satisfied with cutting this appropriation $1,200,000 when he might as well, as long as he was going into the cutting business, cut it twelve millions or leave it out altogether?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Not at all. I do not understand why the gentleman should say that.

Mr. DUNPHY. Would it not reduce the salaries of the postmasters to that extent?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not in the slightest. I will put the question to my friend from North Carolina again: Is it not true that under the general law, without reference to appropriation, if you did not appropriate one cent for postmasters' salaries, they would retain the amount of their salaries from the postage collected?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that would be exactly true, provided there was always sufficient funds in the hands of every postmaster to pay his entire salary, but there are a great many postmasters that have to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would be glad to see that law.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Is not that so?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think not.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Do you say that every post-office in the country is self supporting?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; so far as the postmaster's salary is concerned. The salary is based upon the amount of postage collected. Up to a certain amount the postmaster retains all the postage; up to a certain other amount he retains a certain percentage, and the salary is made exclusively from the revenues of the office. That is true as far as the salaries are concerned, and the postmasters get their pay because, up to what the law allows, they never send the money to the Government, but simply render an account and retain so much under the general law.

Mr. COOMBS. Then, according to the gentleman, we need not make any appropriation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If we did not make any appropriation in this bill for postmasters' salaries the result would be that the postmasters would get their pay precisely as they do now, but when they sent in their accounts for settlement the accounts would be suspended and there could be no settlement until an appropriation was made. In other words, it is a matter of bookkeeping.

Hence, I ask the gentleman, as long as he is going to cut this appropriation so as to be able to say that we have not appropriated within $1,200,000 of the estimates, or within $1,200,000 of what the salaries may be, and thereby to claim credit for economy, why stop at $1,200,000? Why not cut it ten millions?

Mr. COOMBS. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to suggest that we cut it still further?

Mr CANNON of Illinois. You might just as well cut it further as cut it this much.

Mr. COOMBS. I will ask the chairman of the committee whether this is not an approximation to the estimate of the amount required?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. It is $125,000 less than the amount asked for, but the amount appropriated is a great deal more money than will be needed during the year. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he knows that when they make this appropriation for a deficiency, it is not an appropriation of money but is simply to cover the difference in the accounts. It is, as the gentleman himself says, a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Precisely.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Now, I say that in my opinion we have been doing wrong heretofore in appropriating the entire amount asked for, but I do not say that there ought to be a very great reduction. The appropriation proposed is about right.

Mr. REED. Has it not all been used heretofore?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. It is all used when all the accounts are settled, but it takes longer than a year to settle the accounts of the postmasters.

Mr. REED. Can any more of it be used whether it is appropriated or not?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. No; no more can be used than is contracted for under the law.

Mr. REED. Consequently there is no harm in making an appropriation which exceeds the amount actually needed; while there is harm in appropriating less than is needed, because it obliges us to bring in a deficiency bill and causes a stoppage of accounts.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Oh, no; it does not cause any stoppage of accounts; nobody is injured by it; I never heard any complaint in regard to the matter.

Mr. REED. Then it is a little harmless device for reducing apparently the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. No; I will state——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. It is a part of the next Democratic stump speech plan; is it?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first and second class post-offices, $345,000.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "eight," in line 6, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the word "four," so as to read:

"For rent, light, and fuel for first and second class post-offices, $445,000."

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I propose to show this committee in the five minutes allowed me how the Government can make a very large saving on this item—at least $400,000. In the city in California in which I reside—a city of about 20,000 inhabitants—the post office was fitted up by the citizens there at an expense of $3,000. The rent of the building was given free to the Government, upon the condition that it would simply heat and light the building. Everything else was furnished by the property owners. The receipts of that office were about $44,000, the expenses about $16,000; so that the net profit to the United States was about $28,000. When that lease expired, the Department, in the interest of "economy," sent its post-office inspectors to that town and asked for bids for the rent of a building for another term.

It was known that this was a growing town, and a great many people were interested in building up certain portions of it. Various persons made their offers to the Government to furnish the post-office rent free. One gentleman who had some property idle made the proposition that he would fit up a fine room at his own expense (and it is an excellent room); that he would light it and heat it and furnish everything at the extremely low price of $1 per year. That is the total rent which the Post-Office Department pays in the city of San Diego for the fine post-office that it uses to-day, and the fitting up of which cost the proprietor of the building $3,000.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this "skin game" (because it is "a skin game") of the Department can not be worked in the effete and dead cities of the East. [Laughter.] But it can be worked in the great booming towns of the West. It has been worked. I think the business is contemptible; but since the Government of the United States has started in upon that kind of business, I think it should work it for all that it is worth. It should work it wherever it is possible; for it is no more contemptible and no meaner in one place than in another.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Does the gentleman blame the Department——

Mr. BOWERS of California. Not at all.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Or the citizens?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Not at all. I am not blaming anybody; I am simply blaming the Department for not working this game whenever it can be worked.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. As I understand, it was the people of your city who worked the game.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I understand all about that. Now, I am finding no fault. But "economy" is what we are after; and a little farther on I am going to show another specimen of economy on the part of the Department. I only want to show this Committee of the Whole how this Administration, which is carrying the study of economy to a fine point, can reduce its expenditures still further. The game which I have described can be played all over the West—in every growing community.

Mr. ENLOE. Does not the gentleman think the Government might make still more by letting the location of the post-office in each city to the highest bidder?

Mr. BOWERS of California. That is precisely what your Department does. And I say it can be done everywhere in the West. Our towns there are young and growing—not like some of your old towns in the East, where you have no speculative enterprise—no interest in building up a particular part of the city.

But I say this business, contemptible as it is, can be extended.

The same system which enables the Government in our town to carry on its postal business at a profit of $25,000 a year, because it expends only $1 a year for rent of post-office, can be applied elsewhere, if you can get the right kind of inspectors, and I understand the bill makes a larger appropriation for post-office inspectors than any previous bill. In view of what can be accomplished in this way, my amendment proposes to strike out from this appropriation $100,000.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BOWERS of California, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with first and second class post-offices, including furniture, $140,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, may authorize any of the postmasters of said offices to expend the fund he may allow them for such purposes, without the written consent of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I move to amend by striking out in line 15, on page 2, the words "one hundred and," so as to appropriate only $40,000 for "necessary miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with first and second class post-offices, including furniture." This amendment in effect makes a reduction of $100,000 in this appropriation.

Now, this is for miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with the first and second class post-offices, for repairs and things of that kind, and I have a couple of letters here which I wish to read to the committee, showing how money is saved, and that this proposition which I have submitted, to save the hundred thousand dollars, is exactly in line with the broad principle of Democratic economy that we hear so much about on this floor.

Mr. LOUD. If my colleague will allow me, he might have said also that the committee in all of these miscellaneous items recommend the full amounts of the estimates asked for by the Department where there is a discretion in the expenditure of the fund and cut it off in all other cases.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Yes, and I thank my colleague for the suggestion. They have reduced the salaries of postmasters about a million of dollars. Now, I am only proposing to reduce this item a hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of aiding our friends in their own efforts.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Certainly.

Mr. COOMBS. Are you not afraid that you are injuring the reputation of the Republican party for generosity by these suggestions?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Not at all, sir; not the slightest danger of it. The Republican party is not afraid. It has a record, and it can stand on it. Its reputation is entirely safe. But here is a letter I wish to read from one of my constituents to show exactly how this thing works.

SAN DIEGO POST-OFFICE, OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
San Diego, Cal., March 15, 1894.

DEAR BOWERS: The inclosed letter is a sample of Democratic economy that beats anything which has ever come to my attention.

The safe that was repaired, mind you, belongs to the Department; it is the only place where I can keep the funds—often several thousand dollars—and it was liable to close up on me and lock me out at any time; the regulations specifically provide for expenditures without special authority in any such emergency. And yet the great Government of the United States coolly repudiates this just claim, and proposes to make me pay for the necessary repairs on its own property, which had to be made to protect its own interests. More than that, it does not affect any appropriation, large or small. The sum is only $2.50, but the principle is just the same as though it were thousands.

Yours, truly,

H. M. KUTCHIN.

Now, I send a letter from the Department on this question to the Clerk's desk and ask to have that read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, SALARY AND ALLOWANCE DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1894.

SIR: Referring to your request for an allowance for repairing safe, you are informed that on account of the limited appropriation available for the purpose it is not deemed advisable to allow the same.

Your request is therefore declined.

Very respectfully,

E. C. FOWLER,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

POSTMASTER, San Diego, Cal.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, I desire to submit to the committee that in this view of these appropriations, as taken by the Department, and as shown by the letter I have just had read, it is certainly competent to save at least a hundred thousand dollars on this other item.

Here is an item appropriated for in the general appropriation bill, and provision made that the postmasters generally shall be allowed for certain expenditures in this direction. But it is refused. No attention is paid to it. Now, when we are considering a provision for expenditures of that sort on the part of the Government, and when the Democratic party is pursuing the same line of policy, the same old spirit of Democratic economy in all other Departments, I wish to come in and lend them a helping hand by this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you want them to accept it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Certainly. It is in the line of economy. That is the reason I offer it.

I ask a vote upon it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For free-delivery service, including existing experimental free-delivery offices, $12,327,685.33.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 28, on page 2, add the words "of which the sum of $20,000 shall be applied under the direction of the Postmaster-General to experimental free delivery in rural communities, other than towns and villages."

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Chairman, in the last appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department provision was made, setting aside $10,000 for this purpose. I understand that part of the law has been nullified, and that no such experiment has been made.

The bill as reported in the last Congress had this amendment added to this section:

Of which the sum of $10,000 shall be applied under the direction of the Postmaster-General to experimental free delivery in rural communities other than towns and villages.

The law said it "shall be applied." I notice that the Postmaster-General in his report says that this "$10,000 should be devoted, at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, to testing the feasibility of establishing a system of free delivery in rural districts."

If Congress can not make a law mandatory by saying that a certain amount "shall" be expended for a specific purpose, how can we take it out of the discretion of the Postmaster-General? It was not left to the discretion of the executive department.

The reason given for not continuing this experiment is that they had not the time to do it, that the time of the Department was taken up in the consideration of "more important questions." There are thousands of people in this country who think this an "important question," and Congress said that $10,000 "shall be applied" to the solution of it. What executive authority was there to nullify the law?

You appropriate eleven millions for free delivery in the cities and towns. It is expended. But they can not find time to expend $10,000 to test the feasibility of rural delivery. What are we to say to those farmers who are demanding that the experiment inaugurated by Mr. Wanamaker shall be continued until it is determined whether it is practicable or not?

I make no captious attack upon the administration of the Post-office Department; I have urged them to execute this law. Those of us representing rural districts will not be put off with the excuse that it is impossible to give this question study and consideration. The Postmaster-General in the report previous to the one before us to-day stated that the $10,000 appropriated by the Fifty-first Congress "yielded net proceeds of over $3,600, due to the increase of business that was caused." Does not that report authorize at least a continuation of the experiment?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. May I interrupt the gentleman for a question?

Mr. MOSES. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's remarks; but if I understand him, he wishes to extend this free-delivery system to the rural districts?

Mr. MOSES. I wish the Department to continue the experiment inaugurated in 1890.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. How many post-offices are there in the United States? I believe there are about 68,000. Now, of course, if we establish this free-delivery system in one section of the country we must establish it all over the country, and give free delivery at each one of these 68,000 post-offices, which at a rough calculation would cost $2,000 apiece, or in round numbers $113,000,000 to $115,000,000. Now, it seems to me it is impracticable.

Mr. MOSES. In reply to the gentleman from Washington, I will say that Mr. Wanamaker's report shows that the $10,000 expended in these forty-six post-offices yielded net proceeds of $3,600—a far better return than we get from the star-route service in his section of the country.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will present the report of the Postmaster-General, to substantiate that fully.

Mr. MOSES. I will read from the report, on page 11.

The $10,000 appropriated yielded net proceeds of over $3,600, due to the increase of business that was caused, and the salaries of the postmasters of the offices experimented with were raised in the aggregate to over $1,900.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will find if he reads that report fully that those offices did not meet the expenditure, notwithstanding the statement which has been read. He will find that the $10,000 never came back to the Government in increased postal receipts.

Mr. MOSES. I have read the report, and it says that the net proceeds were $3,600.

[The time of Mr. MOSES having expired, by unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. MORSE, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. MOSES. I know the objection to this is, that in partially settled sections of the country it is not practicable; but I say we can extend it gradually with reference to the population; and that is what we want to find out, what the population must be per square mile to make the increased service pay for itself. That is the object of this appropriaton and experiment; and when these new States acquire sufficient population, they can come in just as the cities are now accorded free delivery when they reach a population of 10,000 inhabitants.

Let us not leave the question unsettled. The millions who live in the rural districts will be satisfied with nothing less than a fair test as to its feasibility.

Mr. Wanamaker said that it was practicable, and that the appropriation ought to be continued. We appropriated the money to continue it under the present Administration, but it has not been done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will agree to give us $20,000 out of the eleven millions proposed for the cities, we will not complain, even if the large cities do get fourteen or sixteen daily deliveries. I know the Department has been busy during the past year. They had to "turn the rascals out." As good Democrats, this was the highest duty. So far as my district is concerned, that duty has been well performed. Out of this large sum let us again appropriate $20,000, that this question may be settled to the satisfaction of the people.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, on this matter of free rural delivery I do not see, owing to the condition of the country, that it can ever be established successfully. It would cost such an enormous amount of money, and the population is scattered over such a wide area of country, that it seems to me to be an iridescent dream.

What we do want, and what we should have, and what seems to be entirely practical, is to extend the star-route service in every direction possible, giving to the farmers of the country mail facilities six times a week if necessary, and three times where it is not so urgent. We want to extend these star routes all over the farming districts. Establish post-offices in every section, and you will give to the farmer that mail facility that he now desires and now demands. It is not possible to establish free rural delivery in the section I have the honor in part to represent. Why, think of a man going over the Okanogan Mountains, 30 miles, to deliver one letter! What we do want is daily mail service six times a week under the star-route system.

Mr. PICKLER. To one fellow?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. To one fellow. If there is one fellow in your section who wants his mail, I claim he ought to have it, and I expect you do. What we want is to establish new post-offices. All through my section there is a crying demand for new offices, and it is impossible to get this Administration, for some cause or reason, to establish these offices. I went to the Department the other day as to the establishment of a new office, and they said there are only fifteen or twenty people there. I said I do not care if there was only one American citizen who wants his mail he has a right to have it as much as the citizen of New York or Brooklyn.

Mr. COOMBS. You might make him postmaster himself.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes, we might make him postmaster. What we want, and what we should have, is an extension of this star-route system.

Mr. PICKLER. Is there any proposition in this bill by which it can be done?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. There is not. In the Fifty-second Congress we increased the amount of appropriation recommended by the committee $200,000 in order to establish a large number of new star routes and to increase the service from one to three times a week and from three to six times a week, and gave the farmer the benefit of increased mail facilities by that increased appropriation, which seems to me is along the practical line. Continue in the same direction and you will give the farmer an opportunity to obtain better mail facilities.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I think in giving proper postal facilities it is little difference whether you call it rural delivery or star route. I do not care whether it comes through rural delivery or through postal route. But I am in favor of the suggestions of both the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Washington. Here is the most remarkable language in this report that I have ever seen submitted to Congress. I beg to call attention to the language in regard to this matter:

Although it was provided by Congress in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, that $10,000 should be devoted, at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, to testing the feasibility of establishing a system of free delivery in rural districts, it has been found impossible, by reason of the pressure of more important questions, for the officers having that subject in charge to give the subject the study and consideration that it demands, much less to establish such rural free delivery.

And then this proposition winds up by abandoning the enterprise altogether. Now, Mr. Chairman, that seems to me to be a little less than an insult to the Congress of the United States and the people living in the rural districts. What business has the Administration and the Postmaster-General to say, after Congress has enacted a law and said to them, you shall try this experiment and ascertain whether there is anything in it or not, to tell the Congress of the United States and the people, who are interested, that they have not taken the time to consider that part of the business because there is something more pressing on their hands? What object is there in Congress passing laws if that is the way it is to be treated? It is worth the experiment. It was advocated by the last Postmaster-General, who thought there was much in it. The people of the country would like to see a demonstration; at least, we would like to ascertain whether it shall be by star route or by free rural delivery.

We want something of the kind. Why, I suppose they have been engaged in the disposition of the $192,000, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE] told us about, to the railroads, and so they have not had time to attend to the country. A great crying question of the American Union, through all the public press, is that the people living in the country are coming to the cities. Is it little wonder, Mr. Chairman, that they are leaving the country and going to the cities when all the expenditures of the Government for the benefit of the people are being bestowed upon the cities and the thickly settled districts and not given to the rural population?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I can tell the gentleman what they were occupied in doing, so that they could not consider this. They were chopping off the heads of Republican postmasters, and had no time for any other business. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOMBS. We on this side of the House are glad to hear that complaint. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I contend that after Congress has passed a law it ought to be executed by the Department, and I contend that this experiment is worthy of a trial. If it is not practicable, we will find it out by demonstration, and the experiment will not cost a great deal of money. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] estimates that to extend this system all over the United States would cost $100,000,000, but I see that the report estimates the cost at $20,000,000. We do not need to spend so much as that now, but let us have a demonstration made on a small scale, and let the Department carry out in good faith the law which Congress has passed.

Mr. COOMBS. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill says that it shall be continued.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am sorry to see so little interest taken in this question. I admit that it is impossible to inaugurate any permanent system of free delivery throughout the length and breadth of this country right now, but at the same time it is undoubtedly true that it is possible to make an experiment with a view of determining just how far the free-delivery system may be extended through the rural districts. Free delivery in rural districts is not a new thing. It exists in many parts of the world, and there are many ways in which it can be attained in a very economical manner. I notice that the Postmaster-General calls attention to the fact, which is a fact, that a system which would do for one part of this country would not do for another, owing to differences in the manner in which the country is settled, density of population, and other such considerations.

At the outset of what I have to say in reply to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], I wish to remark that no partisan advantage can be obtained by a discussion of this question. Congress made an appropriation, mandatory in its nature, requiring that the Post-Office Department, with $10,000 put at its disposal, should make an experiment in the matter of free delivery in the rural districts. Under the preceding Administration no effort was made to experiment in that direction. Under the present Administration no effort has been made, and I think it is well enough that an effort should be made, if for no other purpose than, if it is impracticable, to satisfy the people of the country of its impracticability.

Mr. PICKLER. This appropriation was not made until last year, I think. The report says that it was for the fiscal year 1894.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is mistaken. I think that Postmaster-General Wanamaker expended $10,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not for this purpose. There were two appropriations for free delivery, one for village free delivery and one for experimental free delivery in the country outside of towns and villages. Mr. Wanamaker made an experiment in village free delivery, but he made no effort to extend the system to the rural districts.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I may be wrong about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman is wrong. I have inquired at the Department.

Mr. PICKLER. But the village and small town delivery appropriation preceded this for the rural districts. The appropriation for the rural districts was made only during the last year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that; but there was about six months of it under one Administration and about the same time under the other, and no effort was made under either Administration to carry out the experiment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one view that I wish to present very briefly. I think that on the star routes of the country the free-delivery system is practicable by simply putting up boxes such as you have in the cities, and if necessary requiring the box-holders to pay the cost of them, and I am quite sure that every farmer in my part of the country would be willing to do that.

Mr. PICKLER. They do not have to do that in the city.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that, but I am not asking equal terms with other people. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. But you ought to ask equal terms.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would not dare to ask equal terms with the cities. [Laughter.] This experiment, I say, could be carried out by putting up boxes and giving the box-holder a key, and also giving the mail-rider a key and letting him take out the mail that he finds in the box and put in the mail that he has brought for the box-holder. I suggested that plan at the Department and even went so far as to suggest that the people on a given route in my district would be willing to pay for the boxes, and that, if necessary, I myself would pay for twenty of them in order that the experiment might be fairly tried at as little expense as possible. I do not think it is right that people who live out in the country and who receive their mails twice a week or three times a week should have to go so far for their mail matter.

I suppose that half the people outside of the villages in my country have to ride at least 6 miles for the purpose of getting their mails. I do not think it is dealing fairly with those people to treat a mandatory appropriation of Congress for this purpose as a trifle which can be nullified by the Department by simply refusing to act in the matter. The old appropriation will soon be covered back into the Treasury by the lapse of time, but I am in favor of replacing it with the appropriation embodied in the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, so that the Department may understand that it is the will and command of Congress that this experiment shall be made.

Mr. MOSES. We said "shall" before.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, it will be understood that the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I renew the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN]. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] has already spoken once on this question; and the Chair can not recognize him again so long as any other gentleman desires to speak.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to strike out the last word. In regard to this amendment proposing to provide for free delivery in rural districts, I have not been able to satisfy myself that it could be operated to an extent which would be at all satisfactory.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow an interruption? The proposition is simply to appropriate $20,000 out of this amount for the purpose of experimenting with the view to determining whether this plan of rural delivery is practicable or not.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, without discussing that matter, there is something which I think we can do and do with justice, to help these communities which do not enjoy the benefits of the free-delivery system. In the smaller towns it is necessary now for persons wanting a box at the post-office to pay a certain sum per year for that box. The person having such a box not only goes to the office for his mail, but he pays for the place in which his mail is deposited. Now, while we may differ as to the expediency of attempting to carry the mails to all parts of a rural district, there can certainly be no objection to giving to a man residing in the country or in a small town and who goes to the post-office for his mail the right to have his mail deposited in a box, without being compelled to pay for that privilege.

In the cities every person's mail is carried to his house without charge: now, why can we not allow free boxes in the smaller towns? It seems to me that a movement in this direction would be in the line of justice and would not be open to such objections as apply to the attempt to extend free delivery into our country districts.

I have been hoping for a year or two that the Post-Office Committee would see its way clear to recommend such a change in our law as would allow persons or families in the rural districts and in the smaller towns to have post-office boxes without any charge.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Suppose such a provision should become a law, the rent of post-office boxes would no longer help to swell the emoluments of the postmasters. Now, we do not want 68,000 postmasters "down" on us, and would it not be necessary for us to adopt some provision whereby the amount thus lost to the postmasters would be made up to them? In the smaller offices the emolument of the postmaster is largely controlled by the rent of boxes.

Mr. BRYAN. If the box rent goes toward the salary of the postmaster or is a part of the income of the office by which his salary is regulated, so that by free boxes the compensation of the postmaster would be reduced, the Government would certainly have to provide some other form of compensation for the work done by him; but that matter could be arranged.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The box rents do not go to the postmaster.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. They do not; but indirectly they help to swell the emoluments of the office. Of course, all the revenues of the office—box rents and everything else—belong primarily to the Government.

Mr. BRYAN. Whether the postmaster gets the box rent or not, the patron of the office has to pay it; and if by such a proposition as this a part of the compensation of the postmaster would be cut off, of course we would have to provide some way of making up the difference. But I submit that while we are giving free delivery to our cities, we should as a matter of justice give to the people in the rural districts and the smaller towns the privilege of having free a place for the deposit of the mails which they themselves go to the office to receive.

Mr. HAYES. Under the free-delivery system do not those localities that enjoy the system pay for it themselves?

Mr. BRYAN. They pay an extra cent on local postage, but they do not pay any more on other letters or papers.

Mr. HAYES. But the free-delivery system as applied to the cities is self-supporting?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAYES. If we should provide free boxes, would it not be necessary to have a multiplicity of boxes, with an enlarged space in the post-offices, and would there not be thus entailed a great expense without sufficient justification? Such a system would require larger post-office accommodations, and would entail increased expense for rent. In short, would the system be practicable?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know that any more boxes would be necessary than are now provided.

Mr. HAYES. Under the present system many persons receiving but little mail matter care nothing for a box because it is very little trouble for them to ask for their mail. But if a free box were provided for everyone who might ask for it the number of boxes would be largely increased, the office space would be necessarily enlarged, and great additional expense would be incurred, which would accomplish nothing.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the gentleman magnifies the expense.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If these boxes were provided free, would not every person receiving mail at one of these town or village offices want a box?

Mr. HAYES. That would be the result of it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. And every family would want a box.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Whether they got any mail or not.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes; it would not make any difference about that.

Mr. HAYES. That is the point that struck me as being most likely to arise: that it would involve an enormous expenditure where there is no demand for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I will take the floor, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. I wish to ask if there has been any estimate as to the cost of this plan that he suggests, or the approximate cost of delivering the mails in such a manner?

Mr. BRYAN. None that I have seen.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is there any estimate as to the cost of the free rural delivery?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit me, I can only say that I went to the Post-Office Department during the last session of Congress and had an estimate as to the expense if this was carried out all over the country, as we would naturally want it if we commenced the service at all. That estimate places the expenditure at about $113,000,000 for the sixty-eight thousand post-offices, or about $2,000 on the average. Some, of course, would be less and some more, but in all parts of the United States the estimated expenditure was $113,000,000.

Mr. BRYAN. In addition to the present cost?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. More than double.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. About that amount.

Mr. PICKLER. This report to which I have been referring puts the amount at $20,000,000.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes; so it does.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, that is a very wide divergence of opinion.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Nevertheless that is the fact.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Somebody's arithmetic is evidently wrong.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question: Whether it is the judgment of the committee that this question of experimenting on the rural free delivery is the opinion of the Department? Does the committee believe that it should be abandoned without any further attempts in that direction?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. The committee thought that inasmuch as the $10,000 appropriated last year for the use of the current year has not been applied to the current year, having yet some time to run, that money still being available by the Department, it would be unnecessary to recommend further appropriations until some satisfactory result had been obtained from the $10,000 heretofore appropriated.

Mr. PICKLER. But this fiscal year expires on the 30th day of June, and not sufficient time would be given to make any such experiments with that fund.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. If they commenced experiments that fund would last more than one year.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, and try this for another year.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. The money on hand would last for a year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not only is the gentleman from South Dakota correct in his suggestion, but the Postmaster-General announces that he will not use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MOSES. Under the statement of the chairman of the committee, that $10,000 is still available for this purpose, I desire to modify my amendment and change the twenty thousand to ten thousand.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think the committee ought to be heard in this matter, as all of the rest of the House have been, and the chairman does not desire to speak. I suggested to him, therefore, that I would say a word on the subject now pending before the committee.

I desire to state that the experimental free delivery in rural districts is no new proposition. A resolution was adopted on October 1, 1890, by which $10,000 was set aside for experimental free delivery in rural districts. This service was tried thoroughly at that time. The last Postmaster-General substantially admitted that the amount of money that was provided could not thoroughly test the practicability of the proposition. He recommended that this be continued, if Congress in its wisdom desired to continue it, and that an increased fund for that purpose be provided each year.

Now, the present Postmaster-General, after thoroughly investigating the subject, after seeing what has been done, and finding that nothing had been accomplished in the past, in the exercise of his discretion refused a further experiment that had been as thoroughly tried as possible, because the Postmaster-General says that to properly execute the free rural delivery would involve an expenditure of $20,000,000.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] said that there was a wide discrepancy between the estimates submitted by the Post-Office Department on this account and the statement made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I do not think that the Postmaster-General ever contemplated in his report any extension to all of the post-offices in the United States, but only to those that would demand it—say in towns of 500 to 1,000 inhabitants.

Now, if this Congress proposes to extend this system of rural free delivery it must face the question fairly and squarely, after three years of a thorough test of it.

Mr. PICKLER. It has not been tested at all, if the gentleman will allow me to say so.

Mr. LOUD. It has been thoroughly tested for three years.

Mr. PICKLER. In towns and villages.

Mr. LOUD. And to continue this ten or even twenty thousand dollars for another year, or for a term of years, is a perfect fallacy. There is no doubt but what rural free delivery is of benefit to towns and villages; but if you are going to extend it you have got to meet the question here and appropriate a sufficient amount of money to extend it into a reasonable number of towns; and you would be required to appropriate in this bill at least $5,000,000 for this year, and to continue to increase it year by year until it would amount to from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. If you want to do that you should meet the question fairly, but do not let us keep dribbling out a little $10,000 to re-experiment upon a question that has been experimented to death.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question before he sits down?

Mr. LOUD. I will if I have any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has expired.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a great misunderstanding here. Either I am much mistaken or the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is. He says this has been thoroughly tested. This amendment is for free rural delivery, not in towns and villages. It is the delivery in towns and villages which has been tested for the last three years, and rural delivery has not been tested at all, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] to the contrary notwithstanding. There has been no test of rural delivery at all. This appropriation of $10,000 was made, but the Post-Office Department say that they have not had time, owing to the press of other business, to extend it.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is setting up a man of straw to knock him down. We are not contending for any further experiments in towns and villages, so the gentleman's argument against this proposition does not meet the amendment that is now pending, which is to test this matter or to try these experiments in the country districts.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the people living in the country are entitled to have this experiment tried. They are entitled at least to have the Post-Office Department carry out the act of Congress in making tests. No difference what it may cost, let us find out whether it is practicable. You never can find out whether it is practicable until you try. Congress has said it is so far practicable at least as to be worth the experiment. The Post-Office Department seems to repeal the act of Congress or to ignore it, and the committee seem to be following the same lead and ignoring this altogether.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Why do not you try to get daily mails for the people all over the country before you try to get this?

Mr. PICKLER. I think it makes very little difference how this rural delivery is made. It may be by additional star routes. It may be by sending it out in different ways. This appropriation is to test that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the gentleman know that the communities in the back country can not get mail routes established unless they pay the carrier themselves, except two-thirds of the cancellation?

Mr. PICKLER. Indeed I do know that. My constituents have suffered for those reasons right along, and it is for that matter I am contending here, that the people living in the country are worthy at least the consideration of the Department, to the extent of expending the money that Congress has appropriated, to ascertain in some way or other how to reach the rural districts with the mail they are entitled to receive.

Mr. LOUD. That is a question as to star-route service.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has not touched the question. He has talked about experiments in towns and villages, and has not talked about experiments in free delivery in rural communities at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to make this suggestion. There were two separate appropriations; one for $30,000, for making experiments in free delivery in villages and towns, and another later and different act of Congress, appropriating $10,000, for making experiments in rural communities.

Mr. PICKLER. In the last Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman is entirely right in saying that the money appropriated in the first bill was used for the purpose for which it was appropriated, namely, for the making of experiments in towns and villages; but not one single experiment was made by anybody with the $10,000 appropriated for experiments in rural free delivery, nor has any effort been made toward using that appropriation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, I understand, withdraws his amendment?

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I renew it, and do so to say that I am old enough, along with many others in the House, to have seen this postal service built up or evoluted from an inferior service to a very good one; and the end is not yet. It is within my recollection when the mail came once a week, in many instances once in two weeks, and the postage upon the letter to be collected in the main from the receiver, was 25 cents. I have seen it reduced to 5 cents, then to 3; and bore a part in the Forty-seventh Congress, a Republican Congress, it may be recollected, in which the reduction was made from 3 to 2 cents for letter postage.

I recollect also very well that in the Forty-third Congress the system of collecting postage upon newspapers was changed. The law had been to collect of the receiver of the paper, but the rule was that the postage was not collected; and by that Congress the pound rate and prepayment was adopted. In that Congress the package post, practically, had its birth. That also was a Republican Congress. It was of very great advantage to the people, creating competition through the length and breadth of the country of some sixty thousand post-offices with the express companies, which resulted in a reduction of the express rate upon packages of at least two-thirds, and also built up what is known as the package-post system that we have.

Both of these reforms were valuable, far-reaching, and profitable in the main to the Government, but more profitable to the individuals composing the Government. I have seen the reduction of postage upon letters after fair trial bring increased revenues. We have seen the franking privilege practically extended to the newspapers and periodicals, the benefit in fact resulting to those who receive the publications.

I have always been heartily in sympathy with each postal reform that has been made. It is substantially within my recollection, almost within my legislative life, that we have had the free-delivery system established. It commenced right. It was first tried with great success in populous cities. New York was the pioneer city for this service.

It was found to pay, and then the system spread. It extended gradually to the other large cities, and they in a short time became self-sustaining, and most of them yield a profit. It has been extended from year to year and from city to city until it now takes in all cities of 10,000 population, or cities which yield $10,000 a year of gross postal revenues. I believe it can be further extended. I think that the time would be now, under ordinary circumstances, that it should be further extended and take in some of the smaller cities and towns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would be glad to have another minute or two.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes.

Mr. COOMBS. I thought the gentleman was through.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not quite.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes further.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman I will try not to weary the committee; but still I am not sure I can make as much noise as other members of the committee who are talking.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has appealed to the committee to preserve order; and unless the Chair recognizes some gentleman by name it seems impossible to stop loud conversation on the floor.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, then, necessarily all of these improvements in the postal service must be gradual. One almost in sight, and one that I think the country expects, is a further reduction of the postage on letters to one-half the present rate. I think within this century, before the year 1900 comes, will see that reduction made; and in a short time thereafter the receipts from postage increased over and above what they are under the 2-cent rate. As to the free-delivery system, which the gentleman talks about, that growth is to come from the cities of 10,000 inhabitants or those that yield $10,000 revenue, to the smaller cities, villages and thickly settled agricultural communities. And gradually, at the end of this century, or early in the next, I believe that the free-delivery system is to be extended substantially throughout the length and breadth of the country, and ought to be.

Now, then, the Republican party has never halted in these reforms. It has never halted in promoting the postal service, or the public service generally, for the benefit of all the people. As I have indicated, I think the party takes pride, and the country takes pride, in the various reductions of postage, the various increases of mail facilities and the enlargement of the free-delivery system; and it expects, under the lead of this party, a little later on, to have the reduction of the postage and the extensions of these various systems I have referred to. But I will say to my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] that it is perfectly evident that his amendment is not to be adopted. I am rather inclined to believe that if I were a Democrat, and responsible for these appropriations, and wanted to pursue the policy that that party has set out to pursue, I would oppose the amendment.

I have great sympathy with the amendment. I am willing that it should be adopted. I stand ready to vote for it. It is an experiment that might well be tried and might give valuable results: but everybody understands, now that the revenues are away short of the expenditures, and our Democratic friends arise in their places and tell us that the hard times are still to continue; that they are making appropriations from the standpoint of small revenues and hard times.

They are borrowing money to carry on the Government, and they have got to do one of two things, they have got to change their policy and adopt a different one, under which this Government can prosper and in its prosperity obtain abundance of revenue without oppressing its citizens, or they have got to keep on cutting the service. So that, from a Democratic standpoint, I feel quite sure that my friend's amendment will be voted down. I counsel him to have patience. I know that he, along with other good Republicans, has goodness already, but now we want to have patience.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the gentleman that this was introduced by a Democrat.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not know whether a Democrat introduced it or not, but I know that individual Democrats are in the habit of advocating here all manner of good things for their "districts," but in the nick of time, when their votes would give us good legislation, they are always found wanting. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks in relation to the postal service. There is nothing to me more wonderful than the precision and the regularity of the postal service of the United States, and for that matter of the world. A letter is dropped into the mail in a post office away in the backwoods and it finds its way quickly and safely to its proper destination at the most distant part of the Union. A letter is dropped into the mail in the city of Washington, and it finds its way all around the world to a quick and sure delivery. During my experience of thirty-five years as a merchant I have seen the postal systems of the world improve and fall into co-operation with one another until now there is nothing more certain than the safe and sure delivery of correspondence. We always send duplicates, but that has come to be almost unnecessary.

I make these remarks, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of bringing out one fact, and that is that society organized into Government is able to do a great many things better than private individuals can do them. There are a great many things that society organized into government ought to do and there are a great many things that it ought not to attempt to do. Now, I think that in our postal service we have attempted a little too much in the transportation of merchandise. I think that is a great expense to the service for which no adequate compensation is received. Private enterprise is able to do that work safely and quickly, and I believe that if we should cut off these suckers from the Post-Office Department, not only would it be self sustaining but we should be able to reduce the rate of our letter postage. I do not believe that we shall ever be able to do that until we stop some of these expensive experiments.

In relation to this particular amendment I have not been in the way of knowing that there is any extensive demand for it from the rural districts. I think that is a sentimental idea on the part of gentlemen on this floor. I think, as my friend at my left has said, that the farmers would laugh at it. Let us wait and perfect what we have already tried, and by and by, when the country becomes more thickly settled, we can go into these experiments in rural delivery.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As the introducer of this proposition I want to say just a few words more. It was stated by a member of the committee that the Postmaster-General had given this question thorough consideration. Here is what the Postmaster-General says on the subject:

It has been found impossible, by reason of the pressure of more important questions, for the officers having that subject in charge to give the subject the study and consideration that it demands, much less to establish such rural free delivery.

So, Mr. Chairman, the subject has not been studied by the Department; it has not received consideration.

Now, one more point. I appeal to this Democratic House. It is a small thing that we are asking here, and you know, gentlemen, that the farmers are not in the habit of having their wants considered to any great extent. There is a sufficiently large number of people in this country who are interested in this experiment and who desire to have it tried, to deserve some consideration at the hands of Congress, and in view of the fact that all our legislation tends to drive the men from the farms into the cities, in the name of God let us try this experiment to see if we can not do something to make life in the country more pleasant, in order that our people may be induced to stay there. Why can not this be tried? I appeal to a Democratic House in the name of thousands of Democratic voters in the South and West not to cut off this appropriation, but to let it run on until the Post-Office Department can take up this experiment and put it into operation.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, the last appropriation bill carried $10,000 for this experimental purpose. With all due respect to the Postmaster-General, he admits that he made no attempt to try the experiment, and that the subject has not received consideration at his hands. Now, the fact went abroad all over this land that the Fifty-second Congress had appropriated $10,000 for the purpose of an experiment in this line. The farmers, the people who live in the sparse and waste places of the country, know all about it; they have been expecting something to be done, and I want to suggest to the gentleman on my left [Mr. COOMBS], who said that the farmers would laugh at this, that he lives too much in the heart of the great cities to know what the farmers really want.

Mr. COOMBS. No; I have "been there." I have been a farmer boy myself.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, our rural districts are being depopulated for two reasons. In the first place, for the want of proper educational facilities, and in the second place, for the want of mail facilities. It certainly is to the interest of this Government to keep the people on their homes in the rural districts.

I do not think it will damage this bill or materially affect the administration of this arm of the service, if $10,000—a pitiful sum compared with this whole appropriation—be taken out of this amount of nearly thirteen millions and applied in another effort to demonstrate if possible whether this free-delivery system in the rural districts is practicable or impracticable. That is all it means; and I think both sides of this House without reference to political affiliations can afford to do this thing—can afford to say to Mr. Bissell, "You must make this experiment; when Congress issues its mandate it is no 'sounding brass or tinkling cymbal;' when such a provision is put upon the statute book you have no right to ignore it."

Mr. LOUD. Is that the only way you can get a Democratic official to enforce the law?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am not discussing political partisanship now. If the gentleman wants to raise any issue of that kind, I will at some time when I feel in the humor give him enough of it. But I am not on that line now. I repeat that a provision of this kind will not damage the mail service nor will it hamper Mr. Bissell in the administration of his Department to make one more attempt to carry out this experiment. It is due to the people that he should make it. Why? Because the Fifty-second Congress proclaimed from one end of the land to the other that the experiment would be made; the people are expecting and looking for it; it is not right to disappoint them without some good reason.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a word or two on this amendment. As I understand it, all mail delivery is free delivery to the people who receive the mail matter. Now it seems to me that the first thing which ought to be done for the people living in the country, if I know anything about their wishes and needs, is to give them a daily mail, and to establish post-offices in all out-of-the-way places where new communities are growing up, and also establish new routes and give the people good service, daily mails, and pay for it. They are intelligent, reading people and want to get their mails promptly. I think the best thing for us to do is to put it in the power of the Postmaster-General to establish new mail routes by increasing the appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. Even if it does cost the Government something.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. The object of our postal system is not to make money at the expense of the people; it is to give every citizen a fair and free chance in the race of life, for business, intelligence, and all the blessings which result from civilization. They have to bear their share of the burdens of Government; why not give them an equal chance in its advantages?

If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] who is so much interested in this free-delivery system will undertake to get an increased appropriation for the establishment of new mail routes and for better service on existing routes, he will do his people a great deal better service than by following up this new idea. Why, sir, according to the present rate at which daily mail facilities are increased this delivery system can not reach many of our communities in fifty years, especially in the South.

Mr. MOSES. If you propose to change that, I will help you.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am championing that proposition now. I want Congress to make an increased appropriation every year to extend mail facilities into the country. When a new route is established the people who are to be benefited must pay for carrying the mail one year, except two-thirds of the stamps canceled, which amounts to nothing, as an experiment. You expect the people to be well informed; you expect them to be good, law-abiding citizens; you expect them to discharge their political and civil duties intelligently, then why not give them all prompt access to the great sources of intelligence through the mail facilities of the Government? I am opposed to extending this free-delivery system into the country until every community has a daily mail and every out-of-the-way community a post-office where it can receive its mail daily, paid for by this Government. That is my position. This idea of free delivery in the country seems to me impracticable.

Mr. BOEN. What is to hinder us from establishing daily mails and also free delivery?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have not money enough to pay for it at this time.

Mr. BOEN. Who pays the expense? Is it not the farmers who pay? Why not appropriate enough of the money which they pay to render them such service as they need?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is my contention now. I want to do first what can be done now and what ought to be done now in making the star routes what they should be, and it is the indispensable duty of Congress to do it by appropriating sufficient money to extend and develop the system fully.

Mr. BOEN. I am a farmer, and I would like to see the free-delivery system inaugurated in the rural districts.

Mr. MOSES. Let it be tried at least.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, I do not care to see this experiment tried until the people in every section can receive their mail daily. This is the first step toward a perfect system.

Mr. BOEN. I am in favor of that also.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us accomplish this practical result now, and talk about the other later.

Mr. BOEN. Daily mails have been tried in many parts of the country; now let free delivery be tried.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to see all the people in my district receiving their mails daily before voting further privileges to other sections which already have so much.

Mr. PICKLER. This does not affect the question how frequently there shall be mail service; it applies only to the method of delivery.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no practical plan presented for carrying out this idea of free delivery in the rural districts.

Mr. PICKLER. That is what we want to ascertain by means of this appropriation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When you get a letter with a free-delivery stamp upon it, do you mean to send a messenger ten or fifteen miles into the country for the purpose of delivering it?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, it does not mean that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then, if it does not mean that it does not mean anything.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in the interest of the farmers of this great country on the proposition that is now pending, and also to emphasize what has been so well and so eloquently said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] a few moments ago.

It seems to me that in all cases that arise in this body the Congress of the United States is ready and willing at all times to go with the speed of a greyhound to appropriate money in any amount that is asked for, provided the beneficiary is a manufacturer, a banker, a corporation, or anyone except an humble farmer, who may ask for it. But whenever the least pittance is asked for at the doors of Congress which would inure to the benefit of the farmers of this land, you find members here rising almost with one accord and opposing it or interposing various objections to the proposition. Among other objections to this little pittance for the farmers and which would be applied in the rural districts, and do a little good for the people who have to toil from sun to sun, I say, among other objections, I am surprised that some gentleman has not gotten up and stated that it was unconstitutional. We have heard every other objection urged that could be suggested; they certainly must have forgotten that one.

Why, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen are quibbling at nothing. The people of this great country who bear the burden of the heat of the day, the people who pay 80 per cent of every dollar of taxation that is collected and paid out in this great country should certainly have some little consideration at the hands of this body. The farmers of this country on whose success depends its greatness, who are the foundation stone of all of the prosperity and all of its greatness, will be interested in the appropriation of this insignificant amount that is asked for here. The men who make that which feeds and clothes the world; the men who make that which ministers to the wants of all mankind in all parts of the world; the men who, under the burdens of wasteful legislation, find themselves with every sun that hides its head behind the western hills growing poorer and poorer daily, these are the men who now come here and ask that some little shall be done for their comfort or their convenience.

In justice to them, then, I hope this little appropriation will be passed, and that without further objection it will be recognized at least in this little pittance, and that that recognition will continue to grow from day to day and Congress to Congress until it will be recognized in the greater proportion that their masses bear to the other people of this country. Millions upon the top of millions are appropriated for the protection of other industries, to build navies to rot upon the seas, to increase the Army, mobilize the militia, for expositions and world's fairs, to educate Indians and negroes, but not one dollar is wont to be given for the lessening of the burden of the farmer.

And I want to say here, Mr. Chairman, and warn this Congress that if the voice of this people is not heard and heeded there will come a day when the great body of the people of this land will appear in person at the courts of justice, as it is already threatened that they will appear now, and demand their rights in a mood that will be incapable of very much reasoning or delay. Let us heed the warning.

Mr. HAYES. They are the only ones making this objection now.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the towns and cities have their mail delivered free, and why not allow an appropriation to be made for the purpose of determining whether or not the same privilege may be extended to the great mass of the people who live in the country in the rural districts. Let justice be done to all. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, when the amendment including this appropriation was before the House during the last Congress I had the honor to urge its adoption upon this floor, because I believed, as a matter of mere justice, when so large a proportion of the total expense for mail service is taken up in the transportation of the newspaper mail, nine-tenths or more of which is practically inaccessible so far as its benefits are concerned to the masses of the people of the country, it seemed to me whatever might be the opinion of those who live in cities and towns, that about as little as we could do was to accede to the request of the Postmaster-General to give $20,000 for the purpose of experimenting in reference to the comparative feasibility or nonfeasibility of attempting to give advantages to those who live outside of incorporated towns and cities.

I appreciate fully the feeling of my colleague [Mr. COOMBS], that this may be to a large extent impracticable. But, sir, that is no reason why we should not expend this small amount in demonstrating how far it is practicable, or at least in showing our good will to those so placed that they can not get the full advantages of the postal system as it exists to-day.

In my opinion it is a more practicable scheme than gentlemen are willing to admit. Not only, sir, would the postal service itself be stimulated and improved by the delivery of the mail in rural communities in the manner suggested, but there would arise a local passenger and express service, a local telegraph message service, which would be carried on in connection with the mail service by the party who undertook to distribute the mails, and which would be a very great convenience to the people; and I believe in the end it would prove to be such a profit to the man who carried it on that the bids for the mail service within each district would be made at almost nominal rates in order to obtain the privilege of delivering the mails so as to promote this carrying on the other business that would be developed in these communities in this connection.

Now, sir, to a certain extent that is unquestioned. As to how far the result would be what I have suggested, of course no man can tell; but it does seem to me that after this Congress has appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of an experiment, we ought to assume that the Postmaster-General did not try the experiment simply because he came into office too late to attempt it; and therefore that it is our duty, in case we were not wrong before, to repeat the appropriation in order that he may, under fair chances of success, try the experiment which heretofore appears to have been neglected.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARNER. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman know that this experiment has been tried for three years?

Mr. WARNER. I know that it has not had any fair test. I went to the Post-Office Department and offered to pick out a section in Central New York which would come fully within the circumstances most appropriate for this kind of a test, and to have free mail delivery carried on for a year at less than one-half the amount which had been estimated as the probable cost, stating to him that I believed the increase in the local express business, in the local parcel-delivery business, in the little emoluments which would come from carrying passengers to and from the stations, and in taking and delivering telegrams would be such that for the succeeding year the bids for this service would be at nominal rates.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, as I think it is apprehended by one or two who have spoken upon this question that I am opposed to this item of appropriation of $10,000 for experimenting upon this free rural delivery, I may say that I am not particularly opposed to the item, but I have thought that it was more in the interest of the rural inhabitants, more in the interest of the farmers, that we should devise some means by which we could extend the delivery of mails more frequently during the week than at present. If you attempt this free rural delivery, it will be just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] has said. The only places where the experiment will be successful will be in and around the great cities. It can not be otherwise.

In the Fifty-second Congress, in the first session, as I said a moment ago, I gave some figures in regard to this matter, which I wish to read and have go into the RECORD again.

There are in the United States—

There were at that time—

sixty-six thousand three hundred and eighty-four post-offices, of which 8,500 are within the limits of incorporated cities, villages, and boroughs; 568 of these offices have the free-delivery service at a present annual rate of expenditure aggregating (an average of about $19,000 each) $10,510,531.05.

The remaining 7,932 incorporated cities and villages, it is estimated, could be supplied with free-delivery service under the present law fixing letter-carriers' salaries at a cost of $1,000 each, $7,932,000.

To collect the mail even once a day from and deliver it at the doors of the patrons of the remaining 57,884 post-offices at unincorporated villages and to rural dwellers, owing to the great distance som of them reside from the post-office, would cost an immense (unascertainable) sum, probably an average of $2,000 per office. Instances would occur where addressees reside 20 or 30 miles from the post-office, requiring an expenditure of several dollars to deliver one letter.

Now, what we ought to do is to try to extend the star-route service, and wherever a new post-office is established, give the power to the Postmaster-General to establish a star route to that office if he may deem it expedient. Under the present law he can only establish it at the next annual letting. Consequently, in our country, where new communities spring up suddenly, when we have a new office established, we have to pay for the carrying of the mail for six months, nine months, and sometimes a full year before the Postmaster-General can, under the present law, let a contract for carrying that mail. The system ought to be revised and corrected, to give him the power, wherever the necessities require it, to let the contract, and not compel patrons to pay the mail carrier for performing this service in remote and sparsely settled communities.

Now, we want to do the farmer all the benefit we can. We want to aid those who live in the rural districts. We want to give them increased mail facilities. We want to give them more promptly their letters and newspapers. Why not, therefore, go forward and adopt some practical remedy which will be of benefit to this generation, and which will benefit other communities besides those where the population is numerous. I admit that around Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and those places where the populations are dense, you might have success with free rural delivery.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I want to suggest that this money is proposed to be appropriated for experimental purposes in order to open up the way for just the kind of plan which the gentleman is so eloquently advocating. If you are in favor of that plan, why are you opposed to this appropriation, which will open up the way by which this can be adopted?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The child is not yet born that can have any benefit from this experiment. I want to give something that will be of practical utility, that will give the farmer his mail. I am willing to go as far as anyone in that direction.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, it is well enough to talk about appropriations for special services and for rural delivery. What the people of my Territory are demanding is the establishment of post offices. For the past six months cities have existed in the Territory of Oklahoma having a population of from 1,000 to 2,000 people and the Post-Office Department have been refusing flatly to establish post-offices at those places. The question was asked upon the floor of this House, upon the discussion of another bill, What has the post-office business to do with that bill? The explanation given by the Post-Office Department for the nonestablishment of post-offices in those towns in Oklahoma is that the Secretary of the Interior had asked the Department to withhold the establishment of the post-offices at those towns, although they have a railroad station there and from one to two thousand people.

In the city of Langston, solely a negro town, where colored men own $250,000 worth of property, the Post Office Department not only refused to appoint a colored man as postmaster, but they went not only outside of the town but outside of the county to get a postmaster; and in the Osage country they went down to the State of Georgia to get a man to fill the post-office there. Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, with due deference to the Post-Office Department, that what the people residing in my Territory demand is the establishment of the post-offices, and they will consent that all the post-offices shall be filled up by the appointment of citizens from Georgia, or from any other State, if they can only get the post-offices established.

Mr. MOSES. Speaking about the importation of postmasters, I will state to the gentleman that one was imported from Indiana in the town of La Grange, Ga., and in about two years he stole the post-office.

Mr. FLYNN. There is just this difference between the man from Indiana who went down to Georgia and stole the post-office, and the man who comes to Oklahoma. The latter will find nothing to steal.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to reply to the gentleman who has made the criticism of the Administration here further than to say his people are now feeling something of what we have felt for years through these importations of foreign officeholders. I am not here to discuss that question. The proposition here is simply to make an experiment, amounting to $10,000, for this Congress to ascertain to what extent it can make the venture in having rural delivery in the country districts. There was an appropriation last year. But there was a change in the Administration, and our good Republican friends hold to office so tenaciously that it has taken all the time of the Post-Office Department in trying to get them out, and we have not had an opportunity to have that experiment tried.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. You have the power, why do not you turn them out?

Mr. SWANSON. You Republicans hold so tenaciously to office that we have not been able to turn them out. It is your tenacity in holding and not our disposition to retain you, that has kept the offices filled with Republicans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are not proposing by this vote to say whether we should establish or disestablish free delivery in the rural districts. It is only a question as to whether this Congress shall vote that $10,000 is a useless expenditure to get information and experiment upon it sufficiently to know how to act in the future. There are gentlemen here who are disposed to condemn this system before they have given it a fair trial. I say it is a question which is very far reaching in its importance. It is a matter which is very essential to the country districts if successful, and it is worth this amount of money to ascertain whether it is successful or not.

Now, I know there are different ways in which the experiment can be made. I am a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post-Roads, and I know from conversations I have had with gentlemen in that Department that there are a great many of them who think that it can be made successful. Here is a man who goes from two different points 10 miles a day. That is on a star route. They propose to make the experiment on 10, 20, or 30 miles. Let him ascertain what it will cost for him to deliver the mail to everybody who will put a box on that star route. This free delivery can be extended in places where it can be successful and where it is desired, and where the people will on these star routes place their boxes. I say it is a question of much importance. There is such need to make the country life pleasant and agreeable and to gain information, that it is a small expenditure for the people of the country districts to ask Congress to make the experiment, and gentlemen should not condemn it before they get the information and have an opportunity to make the experiment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have lived in the country a good deal of my life, and I know some of the difficulties with which farmers have to contend. I would like to call the attention of some gentlemen who live in cities, as well as the members who represent the rural districts, to a few facts.

I have in mind a township which has a population of about 2,000 persons. There is in that township about 80 miles of highway. There are six post-offices. There is a star route which serves those post-offices daily. It costs a good deal to keep up the star route at these various offices. The mail-carrier travels past the doors of one quarter of all the people in the township; but under the present system he can not deliver a letter or a paper to any person, nor can he take up a letter or a paper from the people whose doors he passes.

Now, I believe that it would be proper and wise to make the experiment of expending $10,000, or even $20,000 in order to ascertain with what economy a daily delivery could be given to those people. Four boys upon ponies could travel all over that township in a single day, going to every house in it, and the amount of money that would be necessary to pay for their employment would, in my judgment, be well expended. You could do away with five of the offices in the township and have one central office from which you could make the entire delivery of the township with four boys, who would be very glad of the employment. When you have offered the people an opportunity of a daily door delivery they will find reasons and opportunities for increasing their correspondence and the extra sale of stamps resulting from that increase will in large part compensate for the extra expenditure.

Mr. WARNER. And would not they find that same service of such importance in regard to other matters, local express, delivery of telegrams, and things of that kind, as, on the one hand, to make it a great convenience to them, and, on the other hand, a great pecuniary benefit to the service?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I am inclined to think they would. You do not need to try this experiment, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] has suggested, where you have got to go 30 miles to find a person, but you can try it where you can find 30 persons in going a single mile. Let the experiment be made and at the next session of Congress let the Postmaster-General report the result. I believe you will find that there is a great field here for improving the mail service and benefiting the people of the rural portions of this country. The farmers of the country will thus have increased opportunities for taking the daily papers and for increasing their intelligence upon general subjects and upon business in which they are interested, and I believe they will very highly appreciate that advantage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this appropriation, provided it is not to be expended in my district. [Laughter.] I am perfectly willing that the money shall be expended in the districts of some of these gentlemen who feel that they will be benefited by it; but the adoption of the system contemplated by this amendment would destroy, to a very great extent, a large proportion of the pleasure enjoyed by the people of my district. [Laughter.] There are eighty counties in that district and our post-offices are located from ten to thirty miles apart, and we seldom have an opportunity to meet each other except on Saturday evenings "at the post-office." Now, to be deprived of the privilege of calling at the office for our mail matter and meeting our neighbors and discussing politics and telling each other the news of the day and the gossip of the community would be a very great hardship. [Laughter.]

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, as I have already said, I am opposed to any part of this appropriation being expended in my district. We have a great many third-party people there, and they meet universally on Saturday at the post-offices in the rural districts, and I repeat that to be deprived of the opportunity of giving the excuse to our wives and families of going "to the post-office," when we go out to make these pleasant calls and have these interesting discussions of the great questions of the day, would be to lose an inestimable privilege which we will not lightly surrender. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 24, page 2, add the words, "of which the sum of $10,000 shall be applied, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, to experimental free delivery in rural communities, other than towns and villages."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to have a word to say about the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will please suspend for a moment until the Chair gets these two amendments on record.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But the Chair thereby cuts off ten minutes of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman under the rule of debate. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] moves to strike out "ten," where it occurs in the amendment, and insert "twenty," and the gentleman from South Dakota submits an amendment to the amendment——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, or of advocating it—either one. [Laughter.] I hope I can get the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] for a minute. He stated, when he had the floor a few minutes ago, that the postal service had gone further than was profitable in the direction of carrying parcels, that that abuse ought to be cut up by the roots, or at least ought to be modified, and that the revenues would be strengthened thereby. The gentleman, in my judgment, is not correctly informed, and I do not want to let his statement go without correction. Packages of merchandise up to the weight of 4 pounds can go through the mails at the rate of 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof. That is 16 cents a pound. Now, that is really a matter of profit instead of loss. The loss comes in what is, substantially, the franking privilege given to newspapers and periodicals, which go free within the boundaries of the counties where they are published, and go at 1 cent a pound anywhere from New York to San Francisco. I am not complaining of this at all. I am not proposing to take it away. And in my judgment you ought not to take it away, because it is a means of disseminating intelligence among the people. It is their privilege more than it is the privilege of the newspaper or the periodical. Because we let 60 per cent of the mail matter go through the mails substantially free—and I am not objecting to it—this loss arises, not on account of carrying packages; that is a matter of profit, and not only a matter of profit to the Department, but a great saving to the people.

As I said a while ago, I recollect when this post-packet system was born. It was in the Forty-third Congress. At that time I had the honor to have charge of the bill on behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I have watched this system as it has grown ever since. Not only has it grown into a great and profitable business for the Government, affording also great accommodation to all the people, but it has brought down the charges of the express companies at least two thirds, thus saving the people from that standpoint alone a great many million dollars. And the express companies have not been substantially harmed, because their business has increased and is greatly profitable. I thought it proper at this point not to let the statement of the gentleman from New York—made, I presume, in error—go without contradiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

For rental of canceling machines, $60,000.

Mr. LACEY. I move to amend by striking out "rental" and inserting "purchase." Mr. Chairman, I am not informed whether $60,000 will be a sufficient appropriation if the word "rental" be stricken out and the word "purchase" inserted. On that point, perhaps the chairman of the committee [Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina] can enlighten us.

Mr. LOUD. These machines are not for sale.

Mr. LACEY. It is suggested to me that these machines are not for sale. That is exactly the point I want to make. A great abuse of our patent laws has recently grown up in patenting articles and then refusing to sell them to the public at any price, but putting an arbitrary rental value upon them. For instance, a telephone instrument which costs $4 is not sold, but is rented to the public at $200 a year.

Now here is a machine for canceling stamps. It costs probably a few dollars. A number of these machines are rented by the Government for $400 a year for each machine. Now, it seems to me the Government ought to set its face against this abuse, and should refuse absolutely to rent any one of these patented articles—should insist that it will purchase at some reasonable price, but will decline altogether to rent. Here is a proposition to pay $60,000 a year for the rental of 150 machines at $400 each. What these machines cost I do not know; but probably under the rental system each machine is paid for as often as every three months.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Is not the real question to be determined whether, by the rental of these machines, the Government saves a large expense which would be incurred in other directions?

Mr. LACEY. I think not. There is no question, I think, that if the Government should decline to rent the machines they could be purchased. An absolute refusal on the part of Congress to appropriate for the rental would result in their purchase, because if they were not rented by the Government their owners could not get anything from them, except by selling them.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Is not that a pure assumption on the part of the gentleman? Has the gentleman any information on that subject which will justify that belief?

Mr. LACEY. Why, nobody else wants them.

Mr. BOWERS of California. If the Government will not pay for the use of them, what are these parties to do with the machines?

Mr. LACEY. Why, they must sell them.

Mr. BOWERS of California. That is just what it amounts to.

Mr. REED. You might confiscate them.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But, Mr. Chairman, if some person by his skill and ingenuity has devised a machine that largely reduces the expenditures of the Government, would that justify you in going a step farther and robbing him of his invention?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. But this thing has become an abuse upon the patent law. These men are protected in their patents for a certain time, but they go further and put a price upon them which prohibits the public practically from using them without submitting to extortionate demands.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But how is it an abuse if the Government makes money by using the machine?

Mr. LACEY. It is a complaint that has arisen with reference to patented articles in many parts of the country. It is a recent device to extort money from the users—from the people—more than a fair price for the owner of the patent on the article itself by demanding large sums of money for its use and refusing to part with the title. The gentleman will admit that such a condition of affairs may exist, that a party may put an arbitrary price upon his invention which the public could not afford to pay, and have either to do without the article at all or pay the extortionate rental price that he chooses to ask them. I claim that it is an abuse of the patent law, and we encourage it by going on as we have been doing since this law went into force by providing for renting these machines and paying a big price for them instead of buying them outright.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How would you remedy it?

Mr. LACEY. By purchasing them.

Mr. REED. But suppose they will not sell?

A MEMBER. You might confiscate them by compelling them to sell.

Mr. REED. That would be only a sort of half confiscation.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. My proposition is that the Postmaster-General has said that the rental of these machines had afforded a great saving to the Government. Now, how can it be an abuse when the Government says that it is making money by the use of the machine? And what right have you to undertake to compel these parties to sell their machines?

Mr. LACEY. This amendment if adopted can do no injury to the owners of the patents, but simply enables the Government to control that for which it is now paying a large price.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But you assume that the Government is being injured. Now, I state that the Postmaster-General in the last Congress recommended the rental of these machines on the ground that it was a great saving on the part of the Government.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If they are of great use to the Government we had better buy them if we can.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, if the Government is being injured I would like the gentleman from Iowa to present some facts which would substantiate that statement.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Where is the company being injured if they have an opportunity to sell their property?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the First Assistant Postmaster-General in his last annual report, on page 24, states:

By an act approved March 3, 1893, the Congress authorized an appropriation of $50,000 for rental of canceling machines for use in the larger post-offices. A contract has been approved for the rental of 100 improved canceling machines at an annual rental of $400 each. The average capacity of these machines has been shown to be about 18,000 to 20,000 letters postmarked and canceled per hour.

Another machine, which has proved satisfactory after practical tests, has been rented at $300 per annum. The canceling capacity of this machine will average from 5,000 to 6,000 pieces per hour.

For rental of canceling machines for the ensuing fiscal year I recommend an appropriation of $60,000, being an increase of $10,000, as compared with the appropriation for this purpose for the current fiscal year.

I therefore recommend that an appropriation of $60,000 for rental of post-marking and canceling machines be made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

He then goes on to show that there are now in use 128 of these canceling machines, distributed among 53 of the larger offices in proportion to their needs, and says:

Fifty-three of these machines have an average capacity of 18,000 to 20,000 letters postmarked and canceled per hour, and rent for $400 per annum each; while the remaining 75 machines show an average capacity of 5,000 to 6,000 cancellations per hour, and rent for $200 per annum each. I have recommended an appropriation of $60,000, an increase of $10,000 over last year's appropriation, for the rental of canceling machines.

I will state that in my opinion it would not be right to strike out the word "rental" and insert "purchase," for we do not know that we can purchase these machines at any price.

The machines I understand are in demand and may be in use by other parties than the United States.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why not insert "rental or purchase"?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I would have no objection to that.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I think my friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] labors under a mistake in regard to this matter. There is a certain class of patents which require the supervision of the patentees, and it would be very unwise to trust them to the general public, who are not machinists, and who are not able to keep them in proper order. The example that the gentleman gives of the telephone is probably one of the best to be found. Unless the telephone was managed by a company interested in it, by having the final ownership of it, it never would have reached even the imperfect condition it is in now, and the whole thing would have fallen into discredit. As it is, it is some comfort to civilization, although there are a great many discomforts connected with it. So these canceling machines, I judge—because I examined one of them in our own post-office at Portland—are liable to get out of order and need the supervision of their owners.

I must say, too, that I have very little sympathy with that feeling which declares that the moment the United States has for good reasons granted a monopoly in a thing for a certain period of years that thereupon it becomes the duty of every citizen to get away from the owner the temporary advantage of that thing, of which the country is finally to have the benefit in the free and open use of the invention after the patent has expired. Going back of the Constitution, the Government is under no obligation to grant patents, but by the Constitution it determined to do it, and did it for a good, wholesome, selfish reason, for the purpose of getting some benefit out of it by encouraging inventive talent. It is a very poor encouragement to inventive talent to tell a man that he shall have a monopoly of a thing, and then, the moment he gets the monopoly, when he invents it, to devise all manner of methods to take it away from him, by refusing to purchase, or anything of that sort.

The test of the whole matter is this: It costs the Government a certain amount of money to stamp the envelopes of letters. These machines enable the Government to stamp twice the number for half the price, or something even more extraordinary than that, and the question is, shall the Government pay these people the price? You say perhaps they will demand an exorbitant price, but that was a thing to have been contemplated before you granted them the monopoly, and there are laws of nature which are more valuable than any others which protect the public. Because it so happens in the nature of things that there are many ways of doing things, and if a man has invented a method of doing things and holds the price of that invention too high, he runs the risk of having it invented from under him and of being deprived of his entire property.

Therefore, the Constitution and the laws of the land intend to leave to the operation of these natural laws this monopoly after it has been once granted. It seems to me that the House would make a very great mistake in undertaking to limit the methods of using a patent of which a man under the laws, backed up by the Constitution, has a monopoly. I think men sometimes deceive themselves about this, being impressed solely with the idea of a temporary advantage to the Government, when in the end it would be a great lasting disadvantage to the Government.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I was about to propound a question to the gentleman which would have covered about the only point I desire to make. These canceling machines have been in the process of improvement for a number of years; and you will see from the report read by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina] that no longer than two years ago this very machine that the Government is renting was only capable of canceling 5,000 letters per hour. It has now been improved until it will cancel 18,000 per hour, and this very same company that patented this canceling machine are putting the machines in, looking after them themselves, and constantly improving this system and method of cancellation.

Mr. GEAR. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. GEAR. The new machines about to be put in operation will make the process even cheaper, by canceling 40,000 an hour.

Mr. LOUD. The system is being constantly improved all the time, and so far as canceling machines are concerned, there is nothing in the world to prevent any person from inventing a canceling machine. There is nothing patented in this machine which will prevent any other person from inventing a machine to accomplish the same purpose; but here are parties who have expended a great amount of money; and as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has said, they have had the object and hope in view of being protected by law. Now, is it right for the United States Government, simply because it has the power, to confiscate the property of these individuals? I do not believe the United States Government has any greater right than an individual has.

Mr. LACEY. Nothing of that kind is proposed.

Mr. REED. If you refuse to let these men manage their own property in their own way, when they prefer to rent these machines instead of selling them, you are to a certain extent confiscating their property.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to answer the gentleman when I get an opportunity.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, so far as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is concerned, it is a proposition to force the purchase of these machines. That would necessarily take the machines in operation out of the post-offices throughout the United States. The only way to accomplish the object sought, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, is to present a bill to this House; or if he can get an amendment upon this appropriation bill covering the matter, that some commission shall be appointed to investigate this subject, to take into consideration the value of the property here attempted to be confiscated by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, and to pay these parties a reasonable compensation, then, perhaps, you can get at this proposition; but to say to these people that they must sell to the United States for $60,000 the machines that we require would necessarily result in this Government refusing to use them. They will not have the power or the money to use them: and the people, therefore, will be denied the privilege they now have.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me. A refusal on the part of the Government of the United States to rent these machines or to buy them is not a confiscation of the property.

Mr. LOUD. That is very true. It is not a confiscation of the property. I understand that, but it is seeking to confiscate it; because the Government is the only party in the United States that can use this patent. Individuals do not propose to use it.

Mr. LACEY. It is the patentee who is confiscating the Government's money.

Mr. LOUD. The patentee is exercising a right which has been guaranteed to him by Constitution, and which has been granted to thousands of people throughout the country since the inception of the patent laws. If you propose to change the patent laws of this country, I have nothing to say; but so long as we use these canceling machines the Government is saving thousands and thousands of dollars. If you adopt the amendment you are going to take the machines out of the post-offices, and thereby entail upon the Government additional expense at least for a time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa to substitute the word "purchase" for the word "rent."

Mr. LACEY. I would like to be recognized for five minutes, notwithstanding I have already spoken upon the subject.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state in answer to the gentleman from Maine, that I have looked into this subject, and I have offered some amendments to the patent laws, which I think ought to be considered by the House; but of course we can not get into a general discussion of the patent laws here. Up to within a very few years every patentee who received his patent through the patent laws of the United States was content to put his patented article upon the market, and to add to that patented article such a price as was satisfactory to him and remunerated him for his invention. That was the original purpose of the patent law. It did not contemplate anything like the idea of the patentee retaining the absolute title to the patented article, and not putting it upon sale. It was not the purpose to grant a patent merely as a means by which he could fix his own rental, and thus confiscate, to borrow the phrase from my friend from California, such a sum as he sees fit to impose from those persons who must use that article.

That is a new invention and one that was never intended to be covered by the original patent laws; and it is an abuse of the patent laws so far as the United States is concerned. When an attempt is made to make a rental contract of that kind, I say it seems to me that the Government ought to legislate against it. We can not protect the people so far as the telephone is concerned; but time has worked that out and the patents have expired. The gentleman says that this invention would not have been made, and that they would not have accomplished what they have done if it had not been an absolute monopoly, giving the retention of the title of the machines to the patentee. But they went further than that. Take a private individual owning a house at one point and a coal mine at another. He wanted to put in a telephone between the coal mine and his home. He could not buy the telephone, nor could he have the use of it at a reasonable royalty, nor purchase it at an increased price, but he was compelled to pay such a rental for the machines—two trivial little boxes, costing $6 or $8 each—as the patentee or assignee saw fit to impose.

Mr. STALLINGS. What rent do we pay for these machines?

Mr. LACEY. Four hundred dollars a year.

Mr. STALLINGS. What do they cost?

Mr. LACEY. I do not know. I hoped that some gentleman on the committee upholding this bill, and who think that my amendment is confiscating the property of this patentee when they are receiving $400 a year, would give us some idea of the cost of the machine. It is probably $20 or $25; I do not know, but it may be as much as $50.

Mr. LOUD. The cost of the machine can not be estimated, because of the amount of money these people have expended to perfect it. It has amounted to thousands and thousands of dollars.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. Did the gentleman have in mind any amount so as to know whether this sum of $60,000 would be sufficient to purchase the machines?

Mr. LACEY. I suggested in making the amendment to strike out the word "rental," and these gentlemen in charge of the bill can change the $60,000 to such a sum as may be necessary. The purpose was to get the Government to discontinue this system of renting a patented article.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED. My opposition to the idea of the gentleman from Iowa is grounded upon the plain provision of the Constitution of the United States which provides that Congress may make a law in regard to patents and inventions. Congress has made a law, and the courts have confirmed it, that when any man makes an invention such as is patentable he shall have the exclusive use of it for a certain period of time.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa says it is a hardship that a coal owner can not have communication between his office and his coal mine without paying a rental. That hardship existed before the telephone instrument was invented. He could not use the invention before it was invented, and consequently he is no worse off for the invention. On the contrary, the advantage he has is that for a certain sum a year he can acquire something which he could not have had if this man had not been stimulated to make the invention. Now, then, this man having original and exclusive power over this canceling machine, you propose to interfere with his power to dispose of it.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. REED. Excuse me, but you do. You say that he shall sell it outright.

Mr. LACEY. No, I propose to say that if we use it he shall sell it to us.

Mr. REED. Yes, and we being in this particular case the only customer, that is practically saying that he shall not control his own property, which you, for a consideration, have given him, in the way that he thinks will bring him most out of it. During the life of the patent you have given him the exclusive right to control that machine, just as much as a deed of real estate gives a man an exclusive right to control that real estate. Now, he having this right, you propose to modify his method of exercising it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. How does the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa interfere with the right which the patent gives this patentee?

Mr. REED. I was about to remark that it either interferes with it or it does not. If it does not, of course this provision is unnecessary. A man has an exclusive right to a machine, and he says, "I will rent this, and not sell it: for very obvious reasons I am continually improving this machine. It requires my constant care and supervision. It is not a thing to be put into everybody's hands. I prefer, for my own profit and the improvement of my invention, to keep it in my own control." You come in and say, "Is this soulless creature to be allowed to go on and take whatever profit he can?" The answer is that the profit is limited, in the extreme case, by the saving that he makes, a saving which would not exist but for the machine.

In other words, he has created the profit that comes to the Government users, if they manage to have a profit at all, and they certainly do or they would not use the machines. So the question is between two persons, just as much as in a transaction about real estate or any other property. One man owns it and another man wants it. The man who owns it says, "It is worth so much." The man who wants it says, "It is worth to me so much." If they can not agree they keep apart, but if the man who wants it is willing to take it on the terms prescribed by the man who owns it, he has the privilege of doing so. Now, if the Government hires this machine it does so because it makes a profit out of it, and in this case the profit is so obvious that it seems entirely reasonable. This man prefers to lease his machine. You propose to say to him, "You shall not do that. We will buy your machine, but we will not lease it." He says, "I am continually improving the machine, and therefore I prefer to keep it under my control. Besides, if I rent it I shall probably get more out of it than if I sell it, and therefore I adopt that method."

As I have already said, when you give a man an exclusive right to a thing you give him a right to use it as his judgment dictates, and you give him a right to use it not only according to his judgment, but according to his misjudgment.

Mr. MAGUIRE. But we have never given this man an exclusive right to sell this machine to us. We have given him an exclusive right to control the machine, but not a right to sell it or to lease it to us.

Mr. REED. That is perfectly true, and it is entirely within our option to decline to either buy or lease his machine. What I am talking about is the absurdity of refusing the Post-Office Department the privilege of leasing this machine if it desires to do so.

It is a great mistake to suppose that it is a disadvantage to the community that patentees should make money out of their patents. On the contrary, it is of the greatest advantage to the community that a man should be able to get out of his patent all that it is worth, because that encourages other inventors, and the sole purpose of giving monopoly at all is to encourage invention. Now, an inventor is a creature who acts from incentives, and he acts not only from the incentive in his own individual case, but also from the incentive in the thousands of other cases which surround him.

Mr. LACEY. Until within a very few years, has not the increased price of the invented article proved an ample incentive?

Mr. REED. In some cases it has, and in others it has not. I recollect interesting myself in a patent once where the result did not prove satisfactory. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman from Maine has stated one side of the proposition. Certainly a man has the right to sell or to rent his machine, whichever he prefers; but is there any objection to giving the Government the right to buy or rent, whichever it chooses?

Mr. REED. The Government is peculiarly situated toward individuals. It has entered into a contract with this individual and given him certain rights, and it seems to me that it ought not to "go back" on that contract.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Government has made a contract beyond this time, then of course we can not interfere with it: but if the contract is only to this time, then the Government certainly has the right hereafter to either lease or buy, as it desires.

Mr. REED. The right is not in question. I am talking about the propriety and the suitableness of it.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman assumes that because a patent has been granted, the Government is bound to do just what the patentee desires done, then I must take issue with him. The proposition that is made is to give the Government the right to either buy or lease, as may be thought best.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BRYAN. Then we agree on that point. The provision as it now reads makes an appropriation only for "rental," and, as I understand, the Government under such a provision would not have the right to buy if it desired to do so. But if we put the proposition in the alternative form, the Government can do what is best for it: and certainly no one can object to that proposition.

Mr. REED. To that I have no objection whatever.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the practical difficulty in the way of carrying out the idea suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] is this: It has been determined that $60,000 is a reasonable rental for these machines for the coming year. Now, if the alternative of buying or renting is incorporated in this provision by amendment, it will simply result in the renting of the machines, because as will be readily understood, if machines will command a rental of $60,000 for twelve months, the owner of the patent will not part with them for the amount which he can obtain as rental for one year.

If the Government desires to purchase these machines, then the amount appropriated should be made large enough to enable the Postmaster-General to approach the owners of the patent with some proposition which they would be likely to accept. I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] for the reason that it would result in this: The owners of these patents would refuse to sell the machines for $60,000, and the Government, having no authority to purchase, would be deprived of the use of the machines.

Gentlemen talk as if the loss in such a case would be entirely on the side of the owner of the patents. That is not the whole story. It has been shown by the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General that the use of these machines is a great saving to the Government; and unless some provision is made for the continuance of their use for the coming year, either by rental or by purchase, the Government, as well as the owner of the patent, will be a loser.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move an amendment to insert before the word "rental" the words "purchase or?"

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If that amendment be adopted without increasing the amount of the appropriation, can any practical result follow? The bill now makes an appropriation of $60,000 to pay the rental of these machines. If that clause be amended so as to provide "for purchase or rental of canceling machines, $60,000," does the gentleman think that these machines could be purchased for $60,000?

Mr. BRYAN. There is no information before the House that gives us any knowledge as to how much money would be required to consummate this purchase. But by giving the Department the option to either purchase or rent, the question which will be most advantageous will be decided according to the discretion of the Department. I understand that there are more kinds of machines than one. It has been stated there are at least two kinds in use. The Department might be able to buy the machines of one kind cheaper than they could rent the others.

Mr. LACEY. If this provision should read "purchase or rental," the result would be that the patentee could compel the Government to purchase or rent as he might see fit; which means, of course, that the machines would be rented, for he would decline to sell.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think we ought to compel the patentees to sell if they do not wish to. If the Government has the right either to rent or purchase, it can do whichever it thinks best.

Mr. REED. Let the Government and the individual be put upon an equal footing.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly. The gentleman from Maine and I agree, I believe, for once.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] says there are two patented machines for this purpose. The bill as prepared by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, does not limit the Government to renting one kind of machine or to using one patent. If there are two or three machines, we meet the same difficulty that we would if there were but one. If the Government now pays $60,000 as annual rental for any of these patented machines, the owners are not going to part with the title to their property for any such amount as is named in the bill. For that reason, it seems to me, the amendment ought not to be adopted. If we desire to reach something practical, we should not only insert the words suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN], but strike out "$60,000" and insert "$500,000, or so much thereof as the Postmaster-General may find necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois at the proper time to offer such an amendment as he indicates. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] to insert before the word "rental" the words "purchase or."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, we have a very small House, and we ought not to take a vote on this until Monday, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to say, of course, how many members are present and will vote on this proposition.

The question was taken on the substitute of Mr. BRYAN, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAINES) there were—ayes 71, noes 8.

Mr. STALLINGS. No quorum.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I move that the committee do no rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know who made the point of no quorum?

Mr. STALLINGS. I did; but I withdraw it, as the gentleman makes a motion that the committee now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum; so the amendment is agreed to. [Laughter.]

The motion of Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. SAYERS (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was discharged from the consideration of the petition of masters and pilots of steam vessels at port of New York, asking for a law inspecting vessels propelled by naptha, vapor, gas, etc., and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Booker, and 7 other citizens of Leonidas, all of Michigan, asking for the passage of the Manderson-Hainer bill, admitting to the mails printed matter of benevolent and fraternal societies—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: Petition of Telman England, of Lauderdale County, Ala., asking reference of claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: Two petitions in favor of legislation to prevent cruelty to animals in transit—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 26, 1894.

Rev. ISAAC W. CANTER, pastor of the Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church (South), of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, we thank Thee for having preserved the lives of these Thy servants, and for the measure of health and strength with which they are permitted to enter upon the duties of this day. And we thank Thee for all the mercy and grace Thou hast shown unto them in Christ Jesus our Lord. Wilt Thou be very close to them this day, and give them that wisdom which comes down from above, that in every thought and word and act they may glorify Thee; that all things begun, continued, and ended in Thee may be to Thy praise and to the magnifying of Thy name in the earth. And we pray Thee, Father, that Thou wilt continue to preserve them.

Wilt Thou bless especially the family of Thy servant who was so recently a member of this body and who now lies in the cold embrace of death. We thank Thee for all that he was to his State and to his country and to this Senate. Wilt Thou grant, O Lord, that the lesson which Thy Providence would teach us by this death may not be lost, and may we learn that death comes alike to all, to those in high places as well as in low. And do Thou grant, O Lord, to preserve the families of these Thy servants, whether they be present or distant; and may nothing sad or untoward therein cause any of these Thy servants to be called from this place of trust and responsibility.

Bless the President of the United States and his Cabinet, and all men everywhere in public office. Hear us in these our requests, pardon all our sins, and graciously accept us now and evermore in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TUESDAY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. The reason for this action will be explained later.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF SENATOR COLQUITT.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, it falls to my lot this morning to make the inexpressibly sad announcement of the death of my colleague and long-loved and cherished friend Alfred H. Colquitt, late Senator from Georgia.

Even if the circumstances around us permitted, I have no heart this morning to speak of his long and illustrious services to his State and the country. In the presence of this grief, so poignant to me, my thoughts turn to him this morning rather as the long-loved friend than as the brave soldier, exhibiting a high order of courage and of patriotism in two wars, or of the civilian holding for long series of years high political stations, every one of which he honored and adorned.

It may not be amiss, however, to say of him now that I have known him from my boyhood; that we were companions in arms; we were associates in business; we were neighbors and friends; we were political allies. In all these relations, for more than a third of a century, there has never been one word of discord between us, never a veil that separated us, never a thought of distrust—nothing save the most trusting loyalty and deep, devoted, and brotherly attachment.

It may not be untimely to say further of him now, that in every relation of life, whether as husband or father or son or friend or soldier or citizen, he has been able and earnest and faithful and true.

The three dread monosyllables, "He is dead," will soon be written of others in this Chamber, and of most of us before many long years shall pass. If it shall be added of us, as it can be of him, that in all the relations of life he was true; that above all and through all he kept his armor as a Christian man, bright and burnished, there will have been spoken over our dead bodies all that eulogy can pronounce.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with great sorrow of the death of the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of ten Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased, which will take place in the Senate Chamber to-morrow, Tuesday, at 9 a. m., and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to Macon, Ga., in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral to-morrow, Tuesday, at the hour named, and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. GORDON, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. RANSOM, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. GRAY, Mr. HOAR, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. CAREY, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolution; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred by the select committee appointed to take order for the funeral of the late Senator A. H. Colquitt be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of the resolutions I now send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps, the major-general commanding the Army, and the senior admiral of the Navy, to attend the funeral of the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, in the Senate Chamber, to-morrow, Tuesday, at 9 o'clock a. m.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 27, 1894, at 9 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 26, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF CONTRACT FOR NAVAL SUPPLIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with accompanying papers, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives calling for information concerning recent alleged violations by Carnegie, Phipps & Co. of the contract between the United States Government and said firm; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WRIGHT of Massachusetts, for ten days, on account of important business.

SPECIAL AGENTS MOORE AND WOODSON.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 8, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the settlement of the accounts of Special Agents Moore and Woodson, under the treaty of 1854, with the Deleware Indians, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the accounts of Ely Moore, deceased, as special register and superintendent, and of Daniel Woodson, as special receiver and superintendent, for the expenses of the sale of the Iowa, and of the eastern and western portions of the Delaware, and of the Wea, and so forth, Indian trust lands in Kansas, under the several treaties of May, 1854, with said Indians, require further adjustment and final settlement: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause administrative action to be taken upon the accounts of said Moore and Woodson, and to allow to the said Moore the sum of $3,658, and to the said Woodson the sum of $3,697.84, in full settlement and satisfaction of their respective claims for services under the treaties aforesaid, and pass the said accounts to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for final settlement; and the acceptance of the said sums by said claimants, or their legal representives, shall be taken as a full and complete relinquishment and satisfaction of their claims for services under the treaties aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation as to the effect of this resolution.

Mr. HUDSON. Let us have the report read, Mr. Speaker, which will fully explain the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. TURPIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 8) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause settlement of the accounts of Special Agents Ely Moore and of Daniel Woodson, under the treaties of May, 1854, with the Delaware and with the united tribe of Wea, etc., Indians, beg leave to report:

That the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of June 19, 1885, to the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the accounts of these special agents, and to the construction put by the Supreme Court of the United States on the treaties with said Indians on March 3, 1884 (110 United States, page 683), shows the following facts:

1. That in October, 1856, Ely Moore, deceased, was appointed a special register and superintendent to sell at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas Territory, the eastern portion of the Delaware trust lands, under the treaty of May 6, 1854 (10 Stats., 1048); and that on May 15, 1857, he was appointed a special register and superintendent to sell at Paoli, Kansas Territory, in the Indian reservation, the trust lands of the united tribe of Wea, etc., Indians, under the treaty of May 30, 1854 (10 Stats., 1082); and that on May 15, 1857, Daniel Woodson was appointed a special receiver and superintendent to sell at Osawkee, Kansas Territory, the western portion of the Delaware Indian trust lands, under the treaty of May 6, 1854.

2. That on January 19, 1861, Daniel Woodson, special receiver and superintendent of the sale of the western portion of the Delaware trust lands, "rendered to the honorable Acting Secretary of the Interior" an account for the expenses of the sale of the trust lands, in which he charged 1 per cent commissions on all of the moneys derived from the sale thereof. On the same day his account was referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for report.

On January 28, 1861, the Hon. A. B. Greenwood, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, reported to the Acting Secretary of the Interior on these claims as follows:

"In reference to this class of claims I will state that the impartial judgment of the Office of Indian Affairs has ever been that they are just and should be paid. * * * The authority for compensating these agents was found in the treaties and not elsewhere."

3. That the Commissioner recommended 1 per cent commissions on all of the Indian trust moneys be allowed and paid.

4. That "on May 8, 1861, the honorable Secretary of the Interior decided and directed the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to allow each of the special registers and receivers, four in all, who superintended the sales of the Delaware and Wea, etc., Indian trust lands 1 per cent commissions" on a part of the moneys received by them from the sales of these trust lands.

5. That the Supreme Court of the United States in construing these treaties, in case No. 216 of the United States, plaintiff in error, vs. The Special Receiver and Superintendent of the Sale of the Eastern Portion of the Delaware Trust Lands, at Fort Levenworth, Kans., and of the Indian Trust Lands of the united tribe of Wea, etc., Indians at Paoli, Kans., in its opinion said:

* * * "By express provision in the treaties the expenses incurred by the United States in making the sales were to be paid from the proceeds. This clearly implied the payment of a reasonable compensation for the services of those employed to carry the trust into effect."

And that it was not part of the duties of these special agents, as officers of the Land Department, to sell the lands or receive payment therefor. The moneys paid for the Indian lands were trust moneys, not public moneys. The employment was for a special service in connection with a special trust assumed by the United States for the benefit of certain Indian tribes, in which express provision was made for the payment of expenses. In legal effect the appointment was an agency for the sale of lands for the Indians. The duties to be performed were to be of a different character and at a different place from those of the Land Office.

6. That the court ordered judgment to be entered for this special receiver and superintendent for the sale of the eastern portion of the Delaware trust lands at Fort Leavenworth, and of the Wea, etc., trust lands, under the finding marked G of the special verdict; that is to say, for $14,541.78, as of June 13, 1879, the date of the verdict, the judgment to draw interest from that date."

7. That paragraphs 14 and 15 in the special verdict in the case of said special agent, defendant in error in said suit, fully quoted in said report, shows that the court "did allow him 1 per cent commissions on all of the moneys received by him as a reasonable and fair compensation," and that only four special agents were employed to sell the trust lands. One of them has been fully paid principal and interest due to him as found by the Supreme Court of the United States on March 3, 1884.

8. That "the laws governing the Indian Bureau, in the settlement of this class of claims, are the act of August 7, 1882 (22 Statutes, page 315), and the act of January 9, 1837 (Revised Statutes, section 2093 and 2094)." The question was submitted to the Attorney-General for his opinion, which was given on July 7, 1885, that it required legislation by Congress to authorize a further and final settlement of these accounts. In addition to the Report No. 819 of the Fiftieth Congress, referred to by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in October, 1889, the Fifty-second Congress favorably reported House bill 3323, by Report No. 880, on March 28, 1893, for the set lement of the accounts of Moore and Woodson, but said bills were not reached on the Calendar, hence the delay in the settlement of the accounts of these special agents.

9. That the act of June 9, 1892 (27 Stat., 768), shows that provision has been made for the final settlement of the accounts of one or the other of the four special agents, and that the accounts of Ely Moore, deceased, and of Daniel Woodson, remain to be finally settled as provided for by Senate joint resolution No. 8.

10. The Acting Secretary of the Interior, in letter dated October 17, 1889, relative to the accounts of Moore and Woodson before your committee, states that "in view of the opinion of the honorable Attorney-General that no valid ground exists for reopening the accounts of the claimants," no action whatever should be taken by the Executive Departments, without legislation providing therefor, and as it is understood that a measure for the relief of the claimants was presented to the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and that a bill (H. R. 2263) was referred to a committee, which committee rendered a report No. 819, that the claimants should look to the legislative branch of the Government for the relief they seek, and not to the Department.

Senate joint resolution No. 8 was fully investigated by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and the result of that investigation is shown by the amendment made by said committee to said joint resolution and passed by the Senate, authorizing the settlement of the accounts of these two special agents, in which they are to be allowed on settlement the principal sum found by said committee to be due to each of them, exclusive of interest. The resolution carries no appropriation, but simply directs the settlement of the accounts of Moore and Woodson and limits the auditing officers to the allowance of the principal amount due them. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in letter of January 30, 1894, states that there is no objection to the passage of a law authorizing payment of the principal and accrued interest due these people, and that he would be pleased to have these long-standing accounts settled.

Your committee therefore favorably report Senate joint resolution No. 8 as a substitute for H. R. joint resolution No. 33 and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. I would like first to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HUDSON. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. SAYERS. If this provision should be enacted into law, the moneys that are specified therein will be paid out of the fund belonging to the Indians, as I understand it. Is that correct?

Mr. HUDSON. That is what the Secretary of the Interior says in his report.

Mr. SAYERS. And not from the Treasury?

Mr. HUDSON. No, not at all. This is the money of the Indians, which is held for their benefit in the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is an Indian fund, and this payment will come out of that fund.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. HUDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

PARTIAL PAYMENTS ON REVENUE CUTTERS.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 150) providing for partial payments for work done in the construction of vessels for the Revenue-Marine Service.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to make partial payments from time to time upon all contracts for the construction of vessels for the Revenue-Marine Service, but not in excess of the amount of the value of the work already done; and that the contracts shall provide for a lien upon such vessels for all advances so made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. Has that resolution ever been reported by a committee?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. It has not.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I object.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. If the gentleman will excuse me for a moment, an exigency has arisen which has resulted in the submission of this resolution, which comes from the Treasury Department. It does not add anything or take anything one way or the other. It is simply to remedy an existing defect in the law in regard to partial payments upon revenue-marine cutters and light-house tenders that are being constructed. The fact is that at the present time the Treasury Department——

Mr. SAYERS. I insist that that resolution be referred to a committee. It is too important to consider in this hasty manner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER, KANSAS CITY.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, a bill (S. 260) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1887.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill, which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out the following words contained in the first section of said act, to wit: "And free passage shall be accorded to wagons and vehicles of all kinds, and for the transit of animals and for foot passengers."

SEC. 2. That the word "corporations," in the first section of the act hereinbefore named, shall be changed to "corporation."

SEC. 3. The construction of the bridge authorized to be constructed by the act approved March 3, 1887, hereinbefore named, and of which this act is amendatory, shall begin within three years and be completed within ten years from the date of the approving this act, and unless these conditions be complied with, this act and the act of which it is amendatory shall be null and void.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the immediate consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MACE CLEMENTS'S SURVEY, OHIO.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4419) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to Mace Clements's survey, numbered 386, in the Virginia military district of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue the patent of the United States granting the lands embraced and described in Mace Clements's survey, numbered 386, in the Virginia military district, in the State of Ohio, as the same is bounded in the report of said survey returned to the principal surveyor of said district at Chillicothe, Ohio, upon the application and proof of the persons now in the possession of said lands, claiming title thereto under the deeds for the same from Nathaniel Massie, dated June 2, 1804.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for immediate consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. HULICK. I will state that a bill similar to this was introduced in the Fifty-second Congress and unanimously reported by the same committee which has reported this bill. It is to complete the paper title to a survey in the Virginia military district of Ohio. There is no objection to it. It affects about 1,000 acres of land. The survey was made and recorded at Chillicothe, Ohio, but the patent was never issued.

On the 4th day of June, 1783, a land warrant (No. 938) for 7,000 acres was issued by the State of Virginia to Mace Clements for services by him rendered as a surgeon of the Virginia Line on Continental establishment in the war of the Revolution. Afterwards, in August, 1787, a part of this warrant, to wit, 1,000 acres, was located by, and subsequently, on the 17th day of November, 1787, surveyed for said Mace Clements in the Virginia military district, on or near Eagle Creek, now in Brown County, in the State of Ohio. This survey was duly returned to the office of the principal surveyor of the Virginia military district at Chillicothe, Ohio, and was recorded in the proper book of surveys of said district in said office, but was never returned to the General Land Office, nor was any patent ever issued therefor. This present bill authorizes the Commissioner of the Land Office to issue a patent, upon the application and proof of the persons now in possession of said lands, claiming the title thereto under the deeds for the same from Nathaniel Massie dated June 2, 1804.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In what county is this land?

Mr. HULICK. In the county of Brown, in Ohio. There is no objection to this. It is merely to perfect the paper title to the survey and have a patent issue therefor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. How long have the lands been held adversely?

Mr. HULICK. The lands have been held adversely since June 2, 1804, by Nathaniel Massie and those claiming title through or under him.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULICK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

UNIVERSITY OF UTAH.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3135) granting to the University of Utah a site off the public domain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the Territory of Utah, and to any State formed from the same, the following tract of land: Commencing on the west boundary line of the Fort Douglas military reservation at a point where it is intersected by the north line of Fourth South street, in Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, and running thence north on said line 136 rods, more or less, to a point where the south line of First South street, in said city, according to the plat thereof, intersects the said boundary line; thence running east 70 $\frac{5}{16}$ rods; thence south parallel with said west boundary line 136 rods, more or less, to a point due east of the point of beginning; thence running west 70 $\frac{5}{16}$ rods, to the point of beginning; containing 60 acres, for a site and campus for the University of Utah, and upon the condition that such tract shall be occupied by the said university within five years after the passage of this act, and perpetually thereafter; and in case it is not so occupied and used it shall revert to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope we may have something in the way of a statement about this matter in order that we may understand it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and is strongly recommended by the military authorities and the War Department. I have the report here, which can be read for information.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it an abandoned military reservation?

Mr. RAWLINS. It is part of the reservation. I will ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the land within the city of Salt Lake?

Mr. RAWLINS. It is in the Fort Douglas military reservation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not that within the city limits?

Mr. RAWLINS. It is within the corporate limits, but near the post.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Utah whether this conveys the fee in that land to the university or Territory.

Mr. RAWLINS. It grants the land for the purposes of the State university, and it is conditioned upon the university being constructed there within the period of five years and perpetually maintained, and if not so maintained it reverts to the United States. It is a sage-brush tract of land, 60 acres in extent, and the military authorities are strongly in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORPORATIONS AS SURETIES.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4954) relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STALLINGS. I think that bill is of too much importance to come up under a request for unanimous consent, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

DOLLIE E. VEDDER.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4320) for the relief of Dollie E. Vedder.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Dollie E. Vedder, widow of the late Capt. Simon C. Vedder, of the Nineteenth Regiment, United States Army, on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the amount she now receives.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was read, as follows:

Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if that bill has been considered at a Friday evening session.

Mr. MEREDITH. Yes, sir; and reported with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KILGORE. What is the name of the beneficiary?

Mr. MEREDITH. Dollie E. Vedder. The bill was reported with an amendment, reducing the amount to $20 a month.

Mr. KILGORE. Did the committee agree as to the amount?

Mr. MEREDITH. Yes, sir; reducing it to $20 a month.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, there is a proposition to make it $25.

Mr. MEREDITH. The bill was amended by the Committee of the Whole House, and the amount placed at $20 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEREDITH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORPORATIONS AS SURETIES.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama, I understand, withdraws his objection to the bill for the consideration of which I asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Alabama withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there further objection? The Clerk will report the title of the bill again, so that the House may understand its nature.

The title was again reported.

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, I only withdrew my objection to that bill for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make an explanation of it. If the explanation is not satisfactory to me I will not withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, then, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be permitted to make a short explanation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to authorize corporations which are formed under the laws of the States for the purpose of going upon bonds to become sureties in cases where sureties are required under the laws of the United States. These surety companies have been incorporated under the laws of the States in nearly all the States of the Union. They go upon bonds of State officials; they go upon bonds where appeals are taken to the higher courts; they go upon bonds and upon recognizances, and they have given universal satisfaction.

Now, it not infrequently happens that when a man is appointed to a Federal office he has to put himself under obligation to his bondsmen to such an extent that they control all the patronage which he has. Under this bill the surety company, for a small consideration, could become surety on his bond and thus leave him independent. The bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary, and there is no reasonable objection to it. It does not compel anybody to employ a surety company, but simply permits him to do so if he desires.

Mr. COX. Your proposition, then, is that these surety companies can go security on the bonds of officials.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Do you not think that will operate to put the officer under the influence of the company as much as he would be under the influence of an individual bondsman?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No, sir. Besides, he is not obliged to employ the surety company. The bill simply permits the employment of the surety company instead of individual bondsmen. He who prefers can still get private individuals to go upon his bond, but in case a man can not do so, or in case he does not wish to do so, then he may employ this surety company.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman has stated that this applies to official bonds. I want to ask him whether it does not go further and apply also to bonds of the employés of railroad companies, express companies, and other bonds of like character?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No, sir.

Mr. HEARD. Does not the gentleman think that it ought to?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They can do that now.

Mr. HEARD. I know they can under the laws of several of the States, and I am very glad that it is so, because the system is a good one; but I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not think this bill ought to be as broad as those State laws generally are?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, this bill does authorize these companies to go on the bond wherever the law requires any person to give a bond.

Mr. COOMBS. It is merely permissive.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is permissive only. It also authorizes the Attorney General, at any time when he is satisfied that the security is not sufficient, to require additional security.

Mr. COX. Your idea is simply to put these security companies on the same footing under the law as private individuals?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is all.

Mr. HEARD. Does it apply exclusively to cases where United States courts require security?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir. It is simply a matter of convenience, and I do not see that there can be any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STALLINGS. I renew the objection, Mr. Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, but no reports were presented.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, this, being the fourth Monday in the month, is District day, and I ask that the House proceed to the consideration of the business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that in a few minutes resolutions will be received from the Senate upon which the House will desire to take action.

Mr. HEARD. I am so advised, Mr. Speaker, and I do not call up the District business for the purpose of antagonizing that; but, the resolutions not having yet come, and there being nothing before the House, I have felt it my duty to present our claim for the consideration of District business, expecting to give way when the Senate resolutions are received.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the delay is owing to some slight change in the committee of the Senate, and that the resolutions referred to will be here in a moment.

Mr. HEARD. All I desire is that no other business shall intervene.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the point that the next order of business is not District business; that that business is not in order until after the second morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The purpose is not to go on with any business this morning after the receipt of the Senate resolutions.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I move that the House take a recess for ten minutes.

Mr. COOMBS. That motion is already made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the resolutions to which the Chair has referred are expected almost immediately, I withdraw the demand for the consideration of District business.

HISTORY OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I simply wanted to ask consideration of a resolution to provide for some printing. It is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 37) to provide for the printing of a history and digest of the international arbitrations to which the United States was a party, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That there be printed the usual number of copies of a history of the international arbitrations to which the United States was a party, together with a digest of the decisions rendered in such arbitrations, and that, in addition to said usual number, there be printed and bound in sheep 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State; said history and digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of John Bassett Moore, and the editing to be paid for out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the direction of the Secretary of State, at a price not to exceed $2,500, which sum is hereby appropriated, and is to be in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same.

The report of the House Committee on Printing, recommending the passage of the joint resolution, and stating that the estimated cost of the printing proposed would be $6,991, was read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I did not at first observe the clause in this resolution providing for placing 1,000 copies of this publication at the disposal of the Department of State. That provision, of course, takes away the privileged character of the resolution. But I ask unanimous consent that it be considered.

Mr. PICKLER. How many copies will there be for the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Two thousand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this joint resolution at the present time?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The resolution should be adopted. I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DEATH OF SENATOR COLQUITT.

A message from the Senate, communicated to the House by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, was laid before the House by the Speaker, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 26, 1894.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with great sorrow of the death of the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of ten Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased, which will take place in the Senate Chamber to-morrow, Tuesday, at 9 a. m., and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to Macon, Ga., in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral to-morrow, Tuesday, at the hour named, and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate do now adjourn.

In compliance with the foregoing the Vice-President appointed as said committee Mr. GORDON, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. RANSOM, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. GRAY, Mr. HOAR, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. CAREY, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of nine members to act in conjunction with the committee appointed by the Senate to make the necessary arrangements and accompany the remains to the place of burial.

Resolved, That the House accept the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral to-morrow, Tuesday, at 9 o'clock a. m., and that the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further tribute and mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, without detaining the House with any remarks on this sad occasion, I desire to give notice that at some time in the future the House will be asked to appoint a day on which the friends of the deceased may pay fitting tribute to his long and distinguished public services. I ask now the adoption of the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] whether he has any suggestion to make as to the hour of meeting of the House to-morrow?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have conferred with gentlemen of our delegation and with the Speaker as to the propriety of the House adjourning to meet to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock. It has been suggested that perhaps as appropriate a proceeding as could be had would be that the members of the House assemble informally in the Senate Chamber at the hour named by the Senate for the funeral ceremonies.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by Mr. TURNER of Georgia, they were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following-named members as the committee provided for by the resolutions: Mr LIVINGSTON of Georgia, Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. BUNN of North Carolina, Mr. CABANISS of Georgia, Mr. MADDOX of Georgia, Mr. MCDANNOLD of Illinois, Mr. COGSWELL of Massachusetts, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. POWERS of Vermont.

And then, in accordance with the resolution just adopted, the House (at 1 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 27, 1894.

The Senate met at 9 o'clock a. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had yesterday passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of nine members to act in conjunction with the committee appointed by the Senate to make the necessary arrangements and accompany the remains to the place of burial.

Resolved, That the House accept the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral to-morrow, Tuesday, at 9 o'clock a. m., and that the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further tribute and mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. LIVINGSTON of Georgia, Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. BUNN of North Carolina, Mr. CABANISS of Georgia, Mr. MADDOX of Georgia, Mr. MCDANNOLD of Illinois, Mr. COGSWELL of Massachusetts, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. POWERS of Vermont, as the committee to act in conjunction with the Senate committee to make the necessary arrangements and accompany the remains of the deceased Senator to the place of burial.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR COLQUITT.

The casket containing the remains of the deceased Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber, having been preceded by the family and friends of the deceased, and escorted by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the committee of arrangements of the two Houses and pallbearers selected from the Capitol police.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives was given a seat at the right of the Vice-President, and the members of the House occupied the seats on the floor provided for them.

The Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the members of the Cabinet, and the diplomatic corps entered the Senate Chamber and were respectively escorted to the seats assigned them on the floor.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., recited sundry passages from the Scriptures appropriate to the burial of the dead, followed by the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, beginning at the twentieth verse. He then delivered the following sermon:

When a good man dies it seems as if a corner of the curtain which hides the invisible and eternal world from our eyes were lifted and there streamed in upon us celestial light, which enables us to understand more clearly and wisely than we do ordinarily the purpose and meaning of this mortal life of ours—these years that we spend in preparation for that lofty, that eternal state to which we are all so fast pressing. And so as we come this morning into this Chamber to meditate upon the life and the passage hence of our beloved friend and brother, whose coffin is here before us and whose seat is draped in black, we may see that the end of life is character—not position in the world, fame, fortune, what is called happiness, but the conquest of self, victory over temptation, mastery of the lower nature, and a grasp by conduct, by life, upon the things which are invisible, immortal, of God.

Our life at the longest is but short. Three score years and ten, looking back, finds the time brief. Four score years after labor and sorrow, on casting the retrospective eye, it sees only a narrow track. Pleasure, the possession of vast resources or of high position—these do not and can not satisfy the highest and best part of our nature. That which gives contentment in age, in sickness, and upon the border of the other world, is the sense of righteousness, of having done right in so far as we knew, in so far as we could—the sense of generosity acquired, of magnanimity, of daring to do the thing which the conscience suggested and which God's Word taught: the daring to leave undone the thing that might be popular and call forth acclaim and admiration, but which the conscience and the Word of God forbade; the acquiring faith in the invisible, walking by another light than that of this world and by another eye than that of sense, so that the invisible world comes clearly into one's ken, God Himself beholden by the pure in heart; a life full of kindliness, sweet thoughts, gentle feelings, forgiveness of injuries, daring to seem to the world even cowardly, misunderstood, and misrepresented at times; with the diviner qualities in one's heart, calumniated and vilified because of their possession and our following their bent.

Misunderstood, therefore, yet daring to do the thing that is sweet and good and to forgive; cherishing no resentment, putting all bitterness, malignity, and unkindness away against those that wrong us, pitying those that do wrong, and a heart full of charity, of the milk of human kindness—a heart that expresses itself in the face, in the voice, and in the whole bearing in the geniality, in the warmth of the cordial greeting, the sunshine of the life as it streams out in public affairs, in the social circle, and in the family, so that men take knowledge of one that he has learned of Jesus Christ, that his life is hid with him in God. Whether a man be rich or poor, learned or ignorant, whether his position be high or low, if he has acquired these qualities and this experience, if he has this fiber and texture of character, he is the man by whose grave we can stand with composure; and the sense of sorrow is overmastered by the sense of his great eternal gain, and of our wealth in the possession of his influence and in the bequest which he has made us of character.

So, my brethren, as we stand in front of this coffined form today, we feel that such a man has left us. We are paying the last offices. We call them sad offices. They are sad for ourselves, but triumphant offices for him. We are standing by the bier of a man to whom the remarks which I have made apply, a man who has gained the conquest of the world by victory over himself, a simple hearted, reverent, humble-minded Christian man, walking in obedience to Christ, having communion and fellowship with the Father and with His Son, and enjoying in his experience and innermost life the fellowship of the Holy Ghost. And now, when his three score years and ten are almost accomplished, his Father and our Father, his God and our God, has called him to come higher. This body of the flesh, from which he suffered through these latter months and years, we are about to deposit in the grave; but the man himself, the outer covering laid aside, the spiritual man, the man that gave that bodily form its dignity, its strength, its pose, its grace, its charm—the man himself is not dead.

Old superstitions linger; traditional thoughts and ideas concerning death still haunt the world. We speak of burying him. We are not burying him; we are burying the external covering of the man, the garment of the soul. God's Son can not be buried. His only begotten Son entered the tomb and rose therefrom to give us token and assurance that thenceforth all His servants and disciples living in His faith and in the communion of His sacraments and of His church should rise immortal with Him. So as He is at the right hand of God He gathers His servants—His brethren, as He deigns to call us—around and near Him; and thus, with the eye of our untroubled faith to day we behold our brother, the man whom we called Senator Colquitt, God's redeemed son, going up into the glory of the Lord, with his opened eyes and ears and spiritual faculties enlarged, standing there in the company of the blood-washed, the redeemed, they that are clothed in white. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

So, brethren, our sorrow is for ourselves. What seems the severing of the tie that bound us to our beloved friend is not severed. It holds; the bond which nature gave still lasts. Wife, children, friends are all as dear to him at this moment and shall be through his endless being as they ever were on earth—nay dearer, sweeter.

It is sorrow for ourselves; and yet what unspeakable comfort, with the benediction of Almighty God, the assurance of His Word, the comfort of His Spirit, our souls penetrated with His truth, and we strong in the faith, with confidence and trust in God! Shall we sorrow as those that have no hope? The unspeakable blessing of God is for every one of us; for the wife, for the children. Oh, the loss is unutterable, and yet how great the gain! Let us think not of the dark side to-day, the grief and the pain. Let us think of the triumphant entry of our beloved brother into the Kingdom of God—no longer of his pain, but of his victory and joy, crowned now with the Father's blessing, entering into the fellowship of that great company that no man can number; and we, with our eyes purged from tears and from the dust of the world, beholding him, shall not our hearts grow calm and strong and sweet for the offices and duties of daily life? Sad, sorrowful—yes; but still with joy and peace and comfort, consolation inexpressible for every one that will receive it, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

So my beloved sister; so children—almost like my own kith and kin, for he that has gone from us I have known since he was a college boy; we have been friends for nigh fifty years—my beloved sister, children, so dear and precious, think of the release from physical infirmity and pain and distress. Think of the rapture which he feels to-day, gone to the presence of the Lord, with the open eye, which reads as we can not read the meaning and purpose of life. You are dear to him as you ever were, and as I have hinted, dearer yet, and shall be through the years that remain to you on earth, and then will be the happy meeting after the time here when it comes your turn and mine to pass hence—the happy meeting. We are going home, going to those we have known and loved, to the hearthside, as we say, of our Father in that blessed clime and that blessed company. Not strangers. No; he will be there, and those whom we have known and loved with him, to welcome us to the other shore of the river.

So let us take heart of grace to-day, thanking God for His unspeakable gift in the redemption of the world by his Son Jesus Christ, bowing reverently to the behest of God, with resignation and submission accepting His will, and feeling that He will care for and guide us and bring us at last to the Kingdom of everlasting life.

Oh, that the peace of God may enter into every heart here present, and that we may have higher and better views of life and clearer and better views of the heavenly kingdom so near at hand! Oh, that this may come to us to make us wiser and better and humbler and kindlier and sweeter men and women for the remainder of our time here!

Let us pray. Almighty and Eternal God, notwithstanding the tokens of darkness, the shadow of grief, the sense of pain and loss, we would come into Thy presence with thanksgiving and praise for the great things which Thou hast bestowed upon us—light even in the darkness, comfort, peace, and benediction even in loss and sorrow and pain.

Oh, Father, we pray Thee to let Thy heavenly grace come into the heart of the woman who hath stood by the side of our brother through all these checkered years, and to whom he was so sacred and so precious. Let Thy loving kindness come to cheer and comfort her and these children. Be Thou their father. Lord God, grant that Thy Word may be fulfilled, that Thou wilt give Thine angels charge over them to keep them in all their ways. Let the home that seems desolate be sentineled and guarded by Thine angels.

Oh, Christ, who didst shed tears of sympathy with those that sorrowed with brokenness of heart, come Thou as the comforter and consolation of this widow and her children, and may they find strength for their needs in Thy grace and comfort. Bless them, Oh Father, with all good things which Thou hast promised.

And let Thy heavenly benediction come upon the associates of our brother, his fellow Senators, and all connected with the Government, who knew him so well through these years. Lord God, incline their hearts unto Thy ways, that they may walk in the path of righteousness and duty supported by Thee, and at the end of this life of trial may they, like our brother, come to the land of everlasting life.

Let Thy blessing be upon all who are here present, and may this solemn reminder of our mortality and this glorious token of our immortality come home to us with personal weight. And from this day forth may our lives be more simple, true, kindlier, nobler, and may our steps be in the path of Christ's church, in the communion and fellowship of the Father and the Son.

And now we commend us, with all for whom we should pray, to Thine all-wise and all-merciful Providence. Oh, Lord God, guide us by Thy counsel, and afterwards receive us to Thyself, through Jesus Christ our Saviour.

Receive the benediction. The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God and of his Son Jesus Christ, our Lord. And the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be amongst you and remain with you always. Amen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee of arrangements will escort the remains of the deceased Senator from the Chamber, accompanying the body to the Pennsylvania Railroad depot and from thence to the place of burial in the State of Georgia.

The casket was borne from the Chamber, attended by the committee of arrangements and the family of the deceased Senator.

The invited guests having retired from the Chamber,

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 28, 1894, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 27, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Hon. WILLIAM EVERETT, of Massachusetts.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATE, FORT HALL RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of deficiency in appropriation made February 23, 1889, for surveying a portion of Fort Hall reservation, together with letters from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and Acting Secretary of the Interior; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ASPHALT WALKS, MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, relative to asphalt walks at the Military Academy, West Point; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INDIAN SCHOOL, PHŒNIX, ARIZ.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of appropriation for the Indian school at Phœnix, Ariz., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REIMBURSEMENT OF GREEK CHURCH, ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that the sum of $3,325 be appropriated to reimburse the bishop of the Greek Church of Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CUSTOMS AFFAIRS AT COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the collector of customs at Chicago, Ill., relating to the administration of customs affairs at the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. FORMAN, for ten days, on account of death in his family.
To Mr. STRONG, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

W. B. MORROW.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1309) for the relief of W. B. Morrow.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BURROWS. I would inquire if this is on the Private Calendar?

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. It is.

Mr. BURROWS. I think these cases ought to be taken up in their order.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PRINTING AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw that call for a moment. I have a report on a resolution referred to the Committee on Printing to print the regular annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which the committee ought to have had passed some time ago. I hope the gentleman will allow it to pass now without further delay.

Mr. PATTERSON. I withdraw the demand for the present.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Printing on the joint resolution (H. Res. 139) to print the Agricultural Report for 1893.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 400,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture for the year 1893; 90,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 280,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, the illustrations for the same to be executed under the supervision of the Public Printer, in accordance with directions of the Joint Committee on Printing, said illustrations to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of printing said report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is an amendment recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing have considered the House joint resolution to print the Agricultural Report for 1893, and have directed me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass with an amendment, as follows: Strike out in line 3 the word "four" and insert "five;" also strike out "ninety" where it occurs the second time in line 5 and insert "one hundred and ten," and strike out in line 6 "two hundred and eighty" and insert "three hundred and sixty."

The estimated cost of publishing 500,000 copies of said report is about $250,000.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the purport of the amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The resolution as first presented calls for the printing of 400,000 copies, but the House, after full consideration of the printing bill, decided to print 500,000 copies, and the amendment of the committee simply changes the text of the original resolution to conform to that action of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. And this makes the House quota 360,000 instead of 280,000?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; the same distribution as we had last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

USE OF PIER IN CHICAGO RIVER.

By Mr. DURBOROW, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (H. R. 6038) to repeal House resolution No. 104, first session Fifty-first Congress, granting to the Secretary of War a permit to license the use of a pier at the mouth of the Chicago River—to the House Calendar.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, EIGHTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

By Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on the Judiciary: A bill (H. R. 4415) providing for an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—O'NEILL VS. JOY.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the contested-election case of O'Neill vs. Joy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] calls up the contested-election case of O'Neill vs. Joy. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was not elected a member of the House of Representatives to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON]——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, there was an agreement between the majority and the minority of the Committee on Elections that six hours should be occupied——

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is not that too late?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is too late, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My colleague has entered upon the debate.

Mr. REED. Not in the least. He called it up, and at the moment I had the opportunity I raised the question, intending to do it at first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that he intended to raise the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But ought not the gentleman to state that he was on his feet for that purpose?

Mr. REED. I was on my feet for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the resolution just read?

The question being taken, Mr. REED demanded a division.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 1, not voting 194; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). On this call 155 members have answered to their names.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. FYAN, is absent on account of sickness in his family, and desires to obtain leave of absence for ten days for that reason.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The question being taken on the motion, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this question the yeas are 82 and the noes 50. The ayes have it; and further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

Mr. REED. I ask for tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. Too late; the result has been announced.

Mr. REED. I was on my feet to ask for tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. That makes no difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the request of the gentleman from Maine, who states that he rose for the purpose of asking for tellers. The question is on the demand for tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

No quorum voting.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that we will not be able to secure a quorum of the House this afternoon. I desire to give notice, however, that to-morrow morning, when the House convenes, we will continue to press this case until it is finally determined: and with that statement I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday and Tuesday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 19, 1894, the report of the investigation recently made in regard to the appraiser's office at Boston, Mass.; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th instant, the last report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the introduction of domesticated reindeer into the District of Alaska; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an agreement with the Cœur d'Alene Indians in Idaho, providing for a change in the northern boundary line of their reservation so as to exclude therefrom a strip of land on which the town of Harrison and numerous settlers are located, accompanied by the draft of a bill to carry the agreement into effect; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE FIVE NATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the secretary of the Choctaw Nation, forwarding a copy of an act passed by that nation relative to the appointment of commissioners on its part to an international council of the five nations of the Indian Territory, and to meet the United States commissioners; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 6,000 copies of all papers and messages sent to Congress by the President since January 1, 1893, relating to Hawaiian affairs.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 7,000 extra copies of the fourteenth annual report of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 260) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1887;

A bill (S. 574) for the relief of Dwight Hall;

A joint resolution (S. R. 8) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the settlement of the accounts of Special Agents Moore and Woodson, under the treaty of 1854, with the Delaware Indians, etc.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 37) to provide for the printing of the History and Digest of International Arbitrations to which the United States was a party, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2857) to confirm to the heirs of Mrs. Courtney Ann Claiborne the title to a certain tract of land in the State of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 3135) granting to the University of Utah a site off the public domain;

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the pension appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

Mr. KYLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically Salsola kali tragus; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

FLAGS OF MARITIME NATIONS.

Mr. McPHERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed from the plates now in the possession of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, 5,000 copies of the Flags of Maritime Nations, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Navy Department, to be used on board of vessels of the Navy, and for sale at the cost of paper and printing, in accordance with section 432 of the Revised Statutes.

REMOVAL OF SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 additional copies of Report No. 279, Fifty-third Congress, second session, relating to the removal of the Southern Ute Indians, be printed for the use of the Senate.

CONDITION OF TRADE IN INDIA, RUSSIA, ETC.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration. I will state that the Senate adopted a similar resolution on the 9th instant, except that the inquiry was directed to the Secretary of State, while this is addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate, at his earliest possible convenience, answers to the following inquiries according to the best information now in his Department:

First. Whether any change has been made in the weight, fineness, or otherwise, in the legal-tender value of the coined silver money used by the people of India, Russia, or the Argentine Republic, for the transaction of their domestic business, and if so, when and to what extent, and by what authority of law during the past twenty years.

Second. Whether prices for the chief products of said countries, like wheat, cotton, etc., have advanced or declined in their prices when exchanged in their home markets for the legal tender silver or paper money in common use among their people, and if so, how much during the past twenty years.

Third. Whether the production, export, or the manufacture of the products of said countries have increased or decreased, and if so, how much in the quantity and value of each during the past twenty years, using their annual reports to ascertain amounts produced, exported, and manufactured, and their legal-tender silver and paper money to ascertain their home prices for the four years between 1872 and 1877, as compared with like averages between 1888 and 1893, as a basis on which to answer these inquiries.

STATISTICS RELATING TO SUGAR.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate at his earliest possible convenience whether the sugar refineries, or persons, or corporations, or any of them, engaged in refining sugar in the United States, have complied with the provision of sections 15 and 17 of the act of March 1, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for taking the Eleventh and subsequent censuses, or of any of the rules and regulations of the Interior Department in relation thereto, or have made answer to the schedules prepared in accordance with said sections, and if any of said corporations or individuals have refused or neglected to comply with the requirements in relation thereto, the names of such corporations or individuals so refusing or neglecting to answer, and their reasons therefor, and also what steps, if any, have been taken in accordance with the act of July 6, 1892, entitled "An act amendatory of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the taking of the Eleventh Census in relation thereto.'"

COST OF PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER BULLION.

Mr. STEWART. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of Senate Report No. 1310, second session, Fifty-second Congress, being the report of the Committee on Mines and Mining on the cost of the production of gold and silver bullion.

Mr. STEWART. I have had an estimate made of the cost of printing this report, and I find that 15,000 copies could be printed within the limit of $500 allowed by the rule. I ask for the printing of 10,000 copies. I am receiving frequent requests for copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution will have to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am in accord with the desire of the Senator from Nevada to have this document printed. I think it is a report of great value. But under the rule the resolution must go to the Committee on Printing. I have no question but that it will be favorably reported, but it must be referred under the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

LABOR UPON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence between the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and engineers in charge of works of public improvement being prosecuted by the General Government relating to the discharge or employment of individuals upon such works where such discharge or employment has been ordered against the recommendation of the local engineer in charge, and that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers be directed to report whether in their opinions the discharge and employment of subordinate officers and laborers upon works of public improvement should be made for political reasons.

INDIAN AGENCIES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it may be now considered. I will state, before it is read for information, that the resolution, while not reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, has the approval of all the members of that committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to the Senate the names of all Indian agents, giving the compensation of each, his location, and the number of Indians at each agency. Said report shall also show whether said Indians at each agency are supported in whole or in part by the issue of clothing, food, and other supplies; whether annuity or other moneys are paid to them, and whether any of the Indians have taken lands in severalty, or are in the ownership of allotted lands. He shall also report whether, in his judgment, any of said agencies can be abandoned and the services of said agents be dispensed with, and if so, which of them, and the reasons therefor.

ISSUE OF BONDS.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit a resolution which I ask be read and ordered printed, and that it lie over under the rule.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to prepare and report as soon as practicable a bill to repeal all laws authorizing or permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government, and to prohibit any and all such issues in future without express authority by act of Congress first had and obtained.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 2857) to confirm to the heirs of Mrs. Courtney Ann Claiborne the title to a certain tract of land in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The bill (H. R. 3135) granting to the University of Utah a site off the public domain—to the Committee on Public Claims.

The bill (H. R. 4320) for the relief of Dollie E. Vedder—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4419) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to Mace Clements's survey, numbered 386, in the Virginia military district of Ohio—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 5041) to extend the time authorizing the St. Louis and Birmingham Railroad to build a bridge across the Tennessee River at Clifton, Tenn.—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5276) to authorize Commander F. W. Dickins, of the United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the Cross of Naval Merit of the third class from the King of Spain—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 5356) to authorize the West Braddock Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River from the borough of Rankin to Mifflin Township—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5580) to protect the insignia and the name of the Red Cross—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 5894) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 139) to print the Agricultural Report for 1893—to the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 145) providing for the payment of salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act of May 5, 1892, as amended by the act of November 3, 1893—to the Committee on Appropriations.

TRANSFER OF FURNITURE.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 147) authorizing the transfer of furniture and carpets to the rooms now occupied by the United States courts at Chicago was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the resolving clause read.

Mr. BERRY. I object to the joint resolution for the present. Let it go over. I have been waiting here for some time to call up another measure, and I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

Mr. CULLOM. May I appeal to the Senator from Arkansas to withdraw his objection? I think there will be no discussion on the matter.

Mr. BERRY. If there will be no discussion upon it, I shall not object.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a very important matter, relating to a question of removal on account of the danger in the old building.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolving clause of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read as requested.

Mr. PLATT. It is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate "to print for the use of Congress 6,000 copies of all papers and messages sent to Congress by the President since January 1, 1893, relating to Hawaiian affairs, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from its amendment.

A. P. GORMAN,
M. W. RANSOM,
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
WILLIAM M. McKAIG,
CASE BRODERICK,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GORMAN. No action by the Senate is necessary on the report.

SIMULATION OF COINS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is instructed to examine and report whether the simulation of coins of the United States by coins of the same weight, metal, and fineness, except as authorized by law, is made criminal by the acts defining and punishing the counterfeiting of coins of the United States, or of other countries, and if not to report a bill to prevent and punish such simulation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the law on this subject is as ample and specific as human ingenuity can devise. Section 5457 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

SEC. 5457. Every person who falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits, or causes or procures to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aids or assists in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any coin or bars in resemblance or similitude of the gold or silver coins or bars which have been, or hereafter may be, coined or stamped at the mints and assay offices of the United States, or in resemblance or similitude of any foreign gold or silver coin which by law is, or hereafter may be made, current in the United States, or are in actual use and circulation as money within the United States, or who passes, utters, publishes, or sells, or attempts to pass, utter, publish, or sell, or brings into the United States from any foreign place, or has in his possession any such false, forged, or counterfeited coin or bars, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than ten years.

Mr. VILAS. Before the Senator from Nevada sits down I should like to have him read a later section, which is still plainer.

Mr. STEWART. The section I have read is plain.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose it is plain, it can not hurt anything to let the resolution go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VILAS. I ask the Senator from Nevada to read section 5461.

Mr. STEWART. I will read section 5461. It is as follows:

SEC. 5461. Every person who, except as authorized by law, makes or causes to be made, or utters or passes, or attempts to utter or pass, any coins of gold or silver or other metal, or alloys of metals, intended for the use and purpose of current money, whether in the resemblance of coins of the United States or of foreign countries, or of original design, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by imprisonment not more than five years, or both.

This question has been carefully studied, and the language of the statute was made very exact. There can be no doubt about the law in regard to the whole subject, that it is a criminal offense to make these silver dollars; but the introduction of the resolution calls to mind the fact that the Government of the United States has abdicated the power conferred by the States upon the General Government to coin money of gold and silver. The crime is not looked upon with the same horror, and is not condemned by the public sense of the world as it would have been if the other crime had not been committed which proposes to destroy one-half of the world's money.

In proof of this, to show that it does not strike the people as a crime, I will read a letter from a late distinguished member of this body, showing how this proceeding struck his sense of moral right:

EDITOR POST: I see by the newspapers that some "gentlemen" residing at Omaha have recently coined a large number of silver dollars—over $500,000. They are exactly like those that are being coined in Philadelphia, New Orleans, and San Francisco. Nobody can tell the difference, because there is no difference. They contain precisely the same quantity and quality of metal as those coined at the above-named places.

I observe also that it is the purpose of the Government to prosecute these "gentlemen," and send them to the penitentiary for coining these dollars. Will you kindly inform me if it is also the purpose of the Government to prosecute the parties at Philadelphia, San Francisco, and New Orleans who are doing exactly the same thing, and greatly oblige,

C. B. FARWELL.

CHICAGO, March 21.

I have noticed in the public press sentiments similar to those from every part of the country. Is it not time for Congress, that has created the temptation to make these dollars, to resume its prerogative and perform its functions under the Constitution and furnish the coins of the Constitution to the people?

This matter has frequently been discussed in relation to India. The counterfeiting of rupees is carried on there with the knowledge of the English Government. The rupee is so sacred among the inhabitants of India that the English Government hesitates to interfere with its coinage. In fact some of the nobles or princes of India have been in the habit of coining on their own account. They have had that privilege, and it has not been taken from them.

The striking down of the silver money, which is the money of the people, is contrary to the moral sense of the civilized world, and although we have ample law upon our statute books it can not be enforced against the public sentiment of nations; and such counterfeiting will go on.

There was no motive previous to the demonetization of silver to make dollars the exact equivalent of the standard dollar. There was no profit in making them unless a cheaper metal was put into the dollar, and then it could be detected by the weight or assay, and the persons who passed it would be guilty because they would have guilty knowledge. But whenever dollars with the exact weight and fineness of the standard dollars and the exact conformation of the standard dollars are in the hands of the people they are unable to distinguish them, and it is a herculean task that is attempted to enforce the law. We have plenty of law, but the enforcement of it is going to be very difficult, and it is a strong argument in favor of the United States resuming its function and doing its duty, because the people need this money. The country is suffering. There is universal distress not only here but throughout the world for lack of money, and taking from the people the money which they have had from time immemorial is a gross outrage upon the rights of the human race. It is not to be wondered that it is not looked upon as an act of moral turpitude when private parties are doing what the Government ought to do, and undertook to do, and now refuses to do at the bidding of a known combination.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am inclined to think that under the second section read by the Senator from Nevada, and which I also referred to the other day, probably the law already does punish as counterfeiting the simulation of our coins, but there has been doubt expressed on the subject. No doubt such coinage is going on, more or less—I hope to a small extent; but I think it would be well enough for the Committee on the Judiciary to examine into the matter and report whether in their opinion any further legislation is necessary. In my judgment they will probably find that the existing law is sufficient. The law of 1866 was passed many years ago, and before the silver dollar had come into circulation, although I do not think that would change the application of the law; I think the law applies to the silver dollar now as well as it ever did. Still, I think it would be very proper to have the matter inquired into. I hope, therefore, that the resolution will either be adopted or that it will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that the resolution will be adopted and that the subject will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to make the inquiry. Notwithstanding what the Senator from Nevada has said, it is exceedingly appropriate at any time to investigate the coinage act of 1873, or any of its provisions, which was passed while the Senator from Nevada was in the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. "While the Senator from Nevada was in the Senate!" I think I have sufficiently explained that matter, and the persons who were in the Senate with me at the time have sufficiently explained it. I think that when Judge Thurman, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Conkling, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. VOORHEES, and all were ignorant of it, I can not be charged with the omission of duty for not knowing what they did not know. I was not on the committee that prepared and brought forth the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not here then.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Iowa was not then in either House?

Mr. ALLISON. I was not.

Mr. STEWART. Then his ignorance on the subject is excusable. The American people were not taken into the confidence of the parties who secured that legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHEROKEE FUNDS.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 144, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive the money arising from the sale of the Cherokee bonds.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. Res. 144) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive at the subtreasury in the city of New York from R. T. Wilson & Co., or assigns, the money, amounting to $6,740,000, to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, and to place the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, as follows:

Whereas, by an act of the National Council of the Cherokee Nation approved January 6, 1894, said Cherokee Nation accepted an offer of R. T. Wilson & Co. to purchase, and agreed to sell and assign to said R. T. Wilson & Co., and assigns, the second, third, fourth, and fifth installments of the money, together with the interest thereon, from the 4th day of March, 1893, to be paid by the United States to said Cherokee Nation for the Cherokee Outlet, as provided by a contract made pursuant to section 10 of "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for fiscal year ending June 30, 1894," approved March 3, 1893, and in accordance with the provisions of said act of the National Council of the Cherokee Nation the consideration for said sale and assignment, amounting to $6,740,000, was to be placed in the subtreasury of the United States in the city of New York to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, subject to the action of the National Council of said Cherokee Nation; and

Whereas it is necessary in order to carry out said contract that authority be conferred to receive said money at the subtreasury in New York and to place the same to the credit of said Cherokee Nation: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to receive at the subtreasury in the city of New York from R. T. Wilson & Co., or assigns, the said money so to be paid to said Cherokee Nation in consideration of said assignment and to place the same to the credit of said Cherokee Nation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to take up the joint resolution which has been read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether the effect of the joint resolution will not be to require the Government of the United States to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent upon this deposit?

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on that subject, which he proposes to have read.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we changed the rate of interest. I should be glad to know what is the effect of the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I gave notice when the joint resolution was up the other day that I should offer an amendment relieving the Government from all liability for any interest whatever on this deposit under any contingencies, because I am not willing that the Government shall be responsible in any manner for any interest upon this fund. Thereupon a letter was addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I hold in my hand the reply of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], which fully explains the situation. In view of the contents of that letter, showing clearly that the Government will not in any manner be responsible for any interest on that fund, no matter how long it stays in the Treasury, I shall not offer the amendment I proposed. I ask that the letter may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter referred to by the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d instant asking for an expression of opinion as to whether any law exists which makes or would make the Government liable in any way for interest upon the deposit of money in the subtreasury at New York as contemplated in the joint resolution (H. Res. 144), a copy of which you inclosed.

In reply you are informed that the object of the resolution as understood by this Department is to authorize the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York to open and keep an account with the Cherokee Nation, the same as the assistant treasurer at St. Louis has kept for many years under provisions of the act of March 3, 1875 (Statutes at Large, volume 18, part 3, page 449), which could not be done without further legislation, as the act of March 3, 1875, authorized the assistant treasurer of the United States at St. Louis only to open such an account.

No interest has been paid or claimed on the money deposited at St. Louis to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, and I know of no law which makes or would make the Government liable in any way for interest upon the deposit of money in the subtreasury at New York as contemplated in the resolution.

Respectfully yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. N. C. BLANCHARD,
United States Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, too important, I think, to be pushed through so rapidly; and I therefore move that the bill, with the letter which has been read, with whatever accompanying papers there may be, if any, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not insist on that motion. If he does, I hope the Senate will not agree to it.

This matter has been pending for a long time. The Cherokee Indians, by one cause of delay and another, have been kept out of money to which they are entitled. They have sold the bonds referred to in the joint resolution, and the sale has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The Attorney-General of the United States has decided that it was a legal and proper sale, and that the bonds could be transferred.

The only thing that is in this joint resolution—and there is nothing in it but that—is that the Secretary of the Treasury may receive these funds in the Treasury or in any subtreasury of the United States until the Cherokee council can order them to be distributed amongst the Indians. The reason why this joint resolution becomes necessary—otherwise the money might be deposited in an ordinary bank—is that in the contract made by the Cherokee Nation with Wilson & Co. it was provided that the Indian delegates should not receive the money, but that it should be received in the Treasury or some subtreasury of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury does not think he has the authority to receive it, and he approves of this joint resolution. He simply wants the authority to authorize the funds to be so deposited, rather than to have them deposited in a private bank.

As I stated before, the Indians ought to have had the money months ago. They have been waiting anxiously for it. There is nothing in the joint resolution but what I have stated. A large number of the Senator's constituents as well as mine are anxious that this transfer should be made. There is nothing behind it, as I before stated, save and except to give the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to keep the money for ten, twenty, or thirty days, until it can be distributed amongst those to whom it belongs.

I hope the Senate will dispose of the joint resolution and pass it to-day.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I do not assert that there is anything behind the joint resolution that is improper; that is not in my mind at all; but it seems to me that the subject-matter of the joint resolution is of sufficient importance to justify the scrutiny of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and from the suggestions made by the Senator from Arkansas himself, I am still further confirmed in the belief that a little further time ought to be taken in the consideration of this matter. I am not prepared to vote upon it at present. I do not understand—and that is the only thing in my way—why there is any supplementary legislation necessary to protect the rights of the Indians or of any other party. That being true——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator had paid attention to the reading of the joint resolution, he would have seen that it is not a proposition to protect the rights of the Indians. It simply proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to receive and hold this money for the Indians until it can be distributed amongst those to whom it belongs.

Mr. COCKRELL. By the nation.

Mr. BERRY. By the nation. The contract that the Indians made with the parties to whom they sold the bonds, was that the proceeds should be deposited in the Treasury of the United States. Therefore, there is no authority to deposit the money in a private bank. But for that contract, the money could be taken and deposited in any bank in the United States. That contract, however, exists, and the pending joint resolution is simply a permission to the Secretary of the Treasury to take that money and hold it until the council at Tahlequah distributes it amongst those to whom it belongs.

That is all there is in the joint resolution, and there has already been too much delay about it. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is thoroughly familiar with the question, and there is no reason why the joint resolution should go to the committee, and why it should not pass. It passed the House of Representatives without a dissenting voice. It has been thoroughly examined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PEFFER. Still, Mr. President, I do not understand why it is that this joint resolution is necessary. There was an act passed appropriating a certain sum of money for the purchase of the possessory rights of the Cherokee Indians in the Outlet——

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator will permit an interruption, I should like to acquaint him with the fact, which I think it proper that he should know and that the Senate should know, that this joint resolution was brought to the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs at its last session, when there were nearly all of the members present; I remember very well the chairman of that committee was in his place and there was considerable discussion as to the propriety of the joint resolution.

Whilst there was a little criticism as to the act of the Indians themselves in making this haste to obtain their money, the committee felt that was a matter with which we had nothing to do; that it was their money, and they could make such disposition of it in that regard as they saw fit; but I do not think there was any adverse criticism upon this particular method. So the joint resolution has received, certainly to that extent, the criticism and observance of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I think my statement will be carried out by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PEFFER. Has there been any action of the committee reported to the Senate on the question?

Mr. MANDERSON. None whatever.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I insist on my motion.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, we purchased the Cherokee Outlet of the Cherokees and we agreed to give them for it something over $8,000,000. Sometime prior to that purchase they had been leasing the Outlet and receiving $200,000 a year for it, but the Government cut off that lease, and now for three or four years the Cherokee Nation has been deprived of any income from the Cherokee Outlet; which has very much embarrassed them. A year ago we purchased the Outlet, and on the 3d of March, 1893, the Senate passed a bill paying for it at the time it was purchased. If the action of the Senate had been carried out, the Indians would have been paid this money in full a year ago; but the funds of the Government were quite limited, and the House of Representatives thought that the Government could not afford to make a present payment, and therefore divided the payments up into five or six installments; that is, it deferred the payments for this land, and in conference between the Senate and the House of Representatives that was agreed to. But this provision was inserted in the appropriation bill:

Provided, That if the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation shall deem it more advantageous to their people they may issue a loan for the principal and interest of the deferred payments, pledging said amounts of interest and principal to secure payment of such debt.

Of course they wanted this money, and really, as it seemed to me, we ought to have paid it to them when we made the purchase, took the land, and opened it to settlement, but we deferred the payments, and then we said the Cherokee Nation may issue a loan for this, and if it does it may pledge the amount of principal and interest to secure the payment of such loan. That is just what they have done. In their National Council in the law which provided for the issuance of the bonds to secure this money, they adopted this section:

SEC. 4. That the Cherokee delegation shall not receive the money or any portion thereof on account of said sale, transfer, and assignment, but the entire amount shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States, or any subtreasury thereof, to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, subject to the action of the National Council.

I think it was a very wise precautionary thing for them to provide that when this money was paid upon this loan it should be put into the Treasury of the United States. Such an amount of it as is not required for the payment of the already accrued expenses of their government has to be distributed among the people, and there may be very many questions arising as to the distribution, who is entitled to it, etc., and it seems to me it was a very wise and prudent thing for them to pass an act in the Cherokee Council that the money raised upon these bonds should not be paid over to the delegation to do what they pleased with, and to be put where they pleased, but that it should be placed in the custody of the United States. There is no law which authorizes the United States to receive it, as I understand, and the object of the joint resolution is to enable the Treasurer of the United States to receive the funds and keep them until the Cherokee National Council shall direct what is to be done with them. This is a very simple matter, and it seems to me a very proper matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] to refer the pending joint resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added to the joint resolution as a proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution the following:

Provided, however, That said assigned obligation shall not be exempt from the payment of taxes.

Mr. BERRY. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Before that motion is considered, I should like to make a brief statement in regard to the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator desires to discuss the amendment, I shall withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the people who have purchased these bonds have managed to secure an obligation which exempts them from local taxation under the law of the United States, if this joint resolution passes. They have therefore secured practically bonds of the United States bearing 4 per cent interest at $165,000 less than par. I think the amendment I have offered should be adopted, and that the purchasers of these bonds ought to pay local taxes upon these obligations the same as they would pay upon mortgages upon real estate. The reason that we are able to sell bonds of the United States bearing 3 per cent interest above par is because of their exemption from taxation; and these bonds would have sold at a premium which would be equivalent to 3 per cent interest if it had been understood when they were advertised for sale. It was not so understood, but by manipulation unquestionably they are securing an obligation which is exempt from taxation, an obligation of the Government bearing 4 per cent interest at $165,000 less than par, because, though they paid $100,000 more than the face of these obligations, the purchase carries with it accrued interest for one year, which amounts to $265,000.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, after full consideration and mature deliberation, the Senate passed a law by which we agreed to pay the Cherokee Indians $8,000,000 for the country we bought from them a year ago. There not being money enough in the Treasury to pay for this land in cash, there was an agreement made, not in strict conformity with the agreement made between the Commissioners of the Government and the Cherokee Nation, that instead of paying the whole of the money in cash, certain amounts of it should be paid in deferred payments, in installments; but we provided at the same time, knowing the necessities of the Cherokees to realize on the money that was due them, that they should have the privilege of turning these obligations of the Government into cash. The proviso of the act of March 3, 1893, is as follows:

Provided, That if the Legislative Council of the Cherokee Nation shall deem it more advantageous to their people they may issue a loan for the principal and interest of the deferred payments pledging said amounts of interest and principal to secure payment of such debt.

These people are simply exercising an authority conferred upon them by Congress. They have made their arrangements for the raising of this money. They do not want, as was suggested by my colleague, to have the money deposited in a private bank. They have made an agreement with the men with whom they have made the arrangement to deposit this money in the subtreasury as affording greater security than a deposit anywhere else.

No part of the agreement between the Cherokee Indians and these people comes under the supervision of Congress. It is simply a question to determine whether or not we shall allow these people to have their money deposited in the subtreasury where it will be safe until such time as the Cherokee Council takes action in regard to it. That is all there is of the joint resolution.

All other questions are irrelevant and have nothing whatever to do with this arrangement. We passed a law, and whatever rights these people have have been standing now for more than twelve months, and I can see no reason why the question should be complicated with any of these outside issues. We are to pay this money with interest, and it is a matter of no concern to us whether we pay it to the Indians themselves or to other people who advanced the Indians the money, if it is satisfactory to them.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will be voted down and that the joint resolution will pass without amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I renew my motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to lay the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1813) providing an additional circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1478) providing for an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CALL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 4858) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida when he expects to call up the bill for consideration?

Mr. CALL. I do not think it can be taken up this week, but I shall call it up some time next week. There are some Senators now absent who desire to be present when certain amendments are considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 260) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1887.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business, being Senate bill 341, will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 341) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not expect to occupy much time on the present occasion, having heretofore discussed the bill at length, but I wish merely to call attention to the almost absolute probability that the bill covers a fraud from the beginning to the very end. Mr. Gomez, a clerk in the commissary department, applied to the governor of the Territory for a grant of 3 leagues square. That request was referred to the local officer, who reported that the land was vacant, and therefore that there was no objection to the grant. That comprises absolutely the whole of any legal evidence that this claim ever existed—the man asked for it. When he presented the case to the commissioners who were appointed by the Government of the United States in 1871, and it was not presented by Gomez until nearly two years thereafter, that commission, better qualified to decide the merits of this question than any other tribunal in the world, decided that he had no legal title whatever. From that he had the right to take an appeal.

But, Mr. President, let us go back for just a moment. This grant purports to have been made fifty years ago. In 1843 Gomez, a clerk in the commissary department, left that place and joined the Mexican Army to fight against the United States. If the Mexican Government ever gave him any valid title, would they not be likely to furnish him with the evidence that they had done so? Of course they would. Yet this man pretends that while he was gone to fight against the United States, owing to the disturbance at Monterey by the American Army, he had somehow mislaid and lost his grant. But one of the neighbors of this same Gomez, who had lived by him for twenty years, testified that he had never heard of the Gomez claim. Is it likely that this man should have this stupendous grant of 4 square leagues, which the Mexican Government never would make unless they had some consideration, unless there was some distinguished service performed? It is utterly incredible.

We have had this case before the Supreme Court five times, and every time when it has been considered upon the merits or upon any collateral issue it has been decided against Gomez or against McGarrahan, either one or the other. Yet it is proposed that this claim shall now be referred to a young and junior court, having far less experience than the Supreme Court of the United States or the district courts, to decide upon the question. Evidently the commissioners who were appointed by the United States, and who first heard the case, were better qualified to consider and investigate the merits of it than anybody else.

But here again comes up another fraud. After Mr. Gomez had taken an appeal of the case to the district court he gave away one-half of it to the district attorney, one Mr. Ord.

Mr. GEORGE. Who was attending to the case for the other side?

Mr. MORRILL. Who was attending to the case? He was the district attorney of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. He was attending to the suit against Gomez?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes. There is hardly any spot in this case that is not fairly pock-marked with fraud. The first that I will read is an extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court:

The claim of Gomez to this land has been decided in this court to be signally fraudulent and void.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. MORRILL. That is from a decision of the United States Supreme Court, found in 9 Wallace.

I read now from the report of a case in 3 Wallace.

The person who had been the counsel of Gomez, one Ord, having become the representative at law of the United States as the district attorney for that part of California, entered into a bargain with Gomez to allow a reversal, by the district court, of the decree of the board, and a consequent confirmation of the claim, on condition of receiving himself a portion of the land; which afterwards he did receive. By such an abuse and betrayal of his official trust, as the reporter understood the case, the decree above-mentioned was obtained.

"By such an abuse."

So far as Gomez was concerned, therefore, whatever title he had derived no validity from the decree.

The decree of the district court which had been so imposed upon by Ord. When the case came before the Supreme Court of the United States they indignantly rejected the decree of the district court. They proceeded to consider it and then decided the case against McGarrahan.

The next thing to which I call attention is the discrepancy in the boundary. In the expediente it is described by one term, and under the petition to which we are now to give legal validity it is described by another, and the two descriptions are very far apart. The land, according to one description, is in one county, and according to the other it is in another county. If any Senator desires to see the map of it I will give him a chance to look at it. [Exhibiting a map.] It shows a wide difference. It never was considered favorably by any Secretary of the Interior, whether it was Browning or Schurz or Chandler. By looking at the map Senators will see that Schurz was right when he said that the New Idria Mining Company was at least 10 miles away from the claim of McGarrahan. The map I have here is certified to be correct, and it shows the precise boundaries of these two claims. And yet we are to be forced into a consideration of a bill where the descriptions fairly swear at each other.

I desire to call attention to the terms in which evidence was admitted in this case. Of course, the United States can hardly produce any evidence in relation to the claim; but all of the ex parte evidence on the part of this claimant under the pending bill receives an indorsement that will entitle it to be considered; that is, even a map is to be received which he never has proved to any court in the world was presented at the time. He presented something at the time with his first application and then said he would provide another. But there is no proof that he ever exhibited the other map to anybody. It is provided in the bill that—

The depositions and other evidence produced before said Board of Land Commissioners, or copies thereof, and all depositions, proofs, testimony, or affidavits taken before any circuit or district court of the United States in the State of California, or the clerks of such courts, or any commissioner appointed by said courts, or before any notary public, or before any committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, or of any map or deed of record of any department of the Government of the United States, or of any act of Congress through which the boundaries set forth in said expediente and the title of said McGarrahan to the said lands can be shown, protected, and established, or of any oral or written testimony or deposition or copies thereof, concerning said record touching said grant from said Governor Manuel Micheltorena to said Vicente P. Gomez, or any patent or record of a patent for any portion of said lands in any of the departments of the Government signed by the President of the United States or by his private secretary authorized to sign land patents, etc.

All this, whatever it may be, is made legal evidence to be introduced before the Court of Private Land Claims, to which this claim is to be referred.

Mr. President, this claim seems to me a stupendous fraud. If anybody will read the four or five hundred letters which were written between McGarrahan and a lobbyist who was here for years, by the name of Franck, he will see the reprehensible and immoral means which were taken in order to lobby this claim through Congress, sometimes before one committee and sometimes before another.

Mr. GEORGE. Are those letters printed?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, they are printed. They will be found in a report made by Mr. McDonald, then a member of the Senate, and in another report made by Randolph Tucker in the House of Representatives—two lawyers whom nobody who has ever considered this case will regard as inferior to themselves.

In that miscellaneous heap of matter it will be found that Mc-

Garrahan has twice made an incorporated company under the laws of the United States, and there have been deeds made by him as the chief officer of that incorporated company to individuals. Now he represents that that was a mere family affair, but if he really has any title to be conveyed under this bill, how is it that the parties who have derived title from such companies can be divested of it by act of Congress?

I omitted to read the testimony of Pacificus Ord in relation to his own guilt in connection with this case. I read from Howard's Reports, volume 23, page 328.

Affiant further says, that shortly thereafter, the court being then in session, the said Hartman, acting as counsel for said claimant, presented the said case to the court by reading the petition for review, and the other papers and transcript in the case to the court for the appellant. That after so doing this affiant, acting for the United States, admitted in open court that in his opinion the claim was a valid one, and that in accordance with the rulings of the court in previous cases the case should be confirmed. That thereupon the court ordered that the decision of the land commissioners should be reversed, and a decree of confirmation entered therein for claimant.

That is about as good as the story of the man who thought himself the biggest man in his State, and when he was approached about it admitted it.

Of course I do not intend to consume much more time. I ask that the amendments which I offered on Thursday last be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments intended to be offered by the Senator from Vermont will be now read.

The Secretary read the first amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MORRILL, which was in section 3, line 32, after the word "forthwith," to strike out the remainder of the section, as follows:

Ascertain in such manner as may seem to him the most certain and expeditious what tracts of land have been conveyed or disposed of by the Government to other persons than the said William McGarrahan, and for the residue of said land embraced within said boundaries shall issue a patent to the said William McGarrahan, as hereinbefore provided.

And insert:

Cause a survey to be made of the tract of land aforesaid, under and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California," approved July 1, 1864, and upon the return and approval of such survey by him it shall be his duty to ascertain, in such manner as may seem the most certain and expeditious, what tracts of land, if any, within the boundaries so ascertained, have been conveyed and disposed of by the Government to other persons than the said William McGarrahan, and for the residue of said land embraced within said boundaries shall issue to the said William McGarrahan, as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I shall now read the statement made by a special examiner sent out to California to investigate this matter, from which it appears that the records of Monterey County show the transfer by several of the original locators through divers parties to William McGarrahan; and there appears also a transfer to him from the Panoche Grande Quicksilver Mining Company, of New York, of a tract of land of 3,000 acres in a square form containing the Picacho quicksilver mine as near the center of this square as possible; and, finally, there is a transfer from William McGarrahan, dated July 26, 1866, of this same tract of 3,000 acres, including the mines, to sundry persons, for whom and for whose assigns a custodian was appointed.

From the report made by Mr. McDonald it appears that on several occasions one party instructed the other to give a certain amount of anything he might receive for the stock in such company to parties whom he designed to corrupt here in Washington.

In relation to the amendments which have been proposed by me, I ask that the letter I have received from a former Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Burdett, of the firm of Burdett, Thompson & Law, may be read by the Secretary, showing that while McGarrahan undertook by ejectment to get rid of the New Idria Mining Company and failed in court, the title of the New Idria Mining Company has been confirmed by law. Mr. Burdett and his partners are now the attorneys of the New Idria Mining Company. They object to having this large claim made a judgment against the United States, and state that if it be well founded they ought to pay for it. Of course they do not believe there is any equity in it, and the courts have so decided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1894.

DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * * *

We are and for many years have been the attorneys of the New Idria Mining Company. The provisions of the pending bill (Senate 341) are so framed as to protect the property and interests of that company from any harm whatever should it become law. Nevertheless the proposals of the bill are such that its passage may result in taking out of the Treasury a great sum of money which, if due at all, should be paid by the company and not by the public at large.

The company objects against being thus put in the wrong and desires us to voice its protest. Through all the years during which, at great cost, the company has successfully combatted the claims of William McGarrahan, it was in fact defending the title of the United States to a tract of the public lands. The company was simply a locator of mineral lands, seeking and eventually obtaining title thereto, under the laws of the United States, in precisely the same manner as all other locators have obtained their title.

They were hindered and delayed in securing their patents by the assertion of the claimant (McGarrahan) that the lands on which their location was made were a part of a Mexican grant, and therefore not public and not subject to disposal under the mineral laws.

The controversies in the courts and in the Department of the Interior in which this contention was met and overthrown, were mainly fought out on the question of the validity of the alleged Mexican grant.

There was and is another question involved which the company most strenuously insists would, if rightly solved, relieve it and the Treasury of the United States from any appearance of responsibility, even should it be finally held that there was a valid grant from Mexico to Gomez, from whom the claimant became the purchaser of an undivided one-half interest.

When the claimant proceeded to have the survey made which, by the pending bill, he seeks to have declared final and valid, the act of June 14, 1860, (12 Stats., page 33) was in full force.

It provided for the making of surveys of private land claims in California under the supervision of the court wherein confirmation was had; for due publication of the fact that such survey had been made, and gave opportunity for objectors to be heard. This was the appropriate act.

But the claimant knew that there had been no final judgment of confirmation in his case, and that the court must therefore have rejected as invalid any survey he presented as not made of a confirmed claim.

He therefore resorted to the act of June 2, 1862 (12 Stats., 410), which, as shown to a former committee of the Senate, he had aided to pass. That act, special and private in character, expressly provided that any survey made under it should be prima facie evidence only of the true location of the land claimed or granted. Under that act the interested party selected the location to be surveyed; he furnished such data as he pleased, and withheld such as it was not to his interest to furnish. The evidence is also absolutely conclusive that the deputy surveyor who performed the field work in this case, was furnished with a Mexican sketch map as belonging to the papers in the Panoche Grande or Gomez claim, which never had any connection therewith.

The survey thus made for the claimant has been twice brought to trial. Once in California, where the supreme court of that State held it to be invalid (McGarrahan vs. Maxwell, 28 Cal., 75); and before the Secretary of the Interior in 1879, when it was found that the company's mines never were within the limits of the alleged grant to Gomez. (Copp's Land Owner, volume 6, page 71.)

The United States has never had its day in court on this question of the true locality of the Gomez claim. Surely the Treasury ought not to be held to payment until such trial has been had. The printed memorandum herewith suggests an amendment which if adopted will give such trial. It will subject the claimant to such conditions only as every other like claimant of lands under a foreign grant, without a single exception, has been compelled to observe.

Very respectfully,

BURDETT, THOMPSON & LAW.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
United States Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask that the second amendment I intend to propose may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 3 by striking out all after the word "expediente," in line 14, down to the word "Provided," in line 22, as follows:

And that the survey made by the United States surveyor-general for the State of California and approved by said surveyor-general on the 11th day of September, 1862, which survey was approved by the Secretary of the Interior December 29, 1862, and is now on file in the General Land Office, shall be considered as forming part of the lands embraced within said boundaries

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, as I have stated, I regard this claim as a stupendous fraud, and I object that a bill should be brought in here which I think every lawyer in the Senate will say is steel-clad in favor of the claimant.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate by a full argument of the McGarrahan case. It is a question which has been argued over and over again before the Senate, and in the last twelve months has been passed upon twice by a favorable vote of the Senate by quite a large majority; but I can not agree that the venerable and distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] shall make the charges he has made in the remarks which he has submitted without saying something in reply thereto.

I suppose if there be one obligation more sacred than another, it is that arising under a treaty between two nations. By the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, made between the United States and the Kingdom of Mexico, for the empire derived by the United States under that treaty the United States entered into certain treaty obligations.

Among those obligations was one to protect and defend all the property rights which the Mexicans had acquired under the Mexican Government before the treaty and cession were made. So, if the Senate becomes satisfied that Gomez, the assignor of McGarrahan, had a property right in the Rancho Panoche Grande, I take it for granted that there is not a Senator within the sound of my voice who would not hasten the action of the Government of the United States to carry out that treaty obligation and to repair the wrong which has been inflicted upon McGarrahan for the last thirty years. The initial step, therefore, is, did Gomez have a grant from Governor Micheltorena, of Upper California? If he did, then the treaty between the United States and Mexico binds this Government to stand by that property right of Gomez and to see that he enjoys it. The fact that he has been kept out of the enjoyment of that right for thirty years makes it all the more incumbent upon the Congress of the United States to see that the wrong which has been done shall be righted, and that speedily.

The initial question, I repeat, is, did Gomez have a grant? The distinguished Senator from Vermont says that the United States passed a law to carry out the treaty obligations and appointed a land commission to go to California and to pass upon questions arising under the grants made by Mexico to her citizens before the cession of that territory to the United States. The distinguished Senator says that the land commission decided that Gomez had no title to this property; but the Senator did not, as he ought to have done, if he will excuse the remark, tell the Senate why that commission did not find a title in Gomez to this land. He knows better than I can tell him that that land commission decided upon evidence before it that Gomez did have this grant; but they decided further that there was no evidence going to show that Gomez had ever taken possession of the land embraced in the grant. For that reason, and that reason alone, the land commission decided against the right of Gomez to that grant.

That action of the land commission established one thing certainly, which has never since been successfully contradicted, to wit, that Micheltorena, who had the right to make the grant, did make the grant to Gomez of the Rancho Panoche Grande. That was established by that commission, and it never has been successfully assailed from that day to this. They decided, however, that not having taken possession under the Mexican grant, therefore the grant was invalid.

About that time the celebrated Frémont case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, involving identically the same questions, in which Frémont proved that his assignor had obtained a grant, but had not obtained possession under the grant. The land commission decided against him as it did against Gomez. Frémont had in the mean time taken the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court in that case, followed by a number of other cases of similar character, decided that possession was a condition subsequent, and, therefore, did not invalidate the grant. They gave Frémont the magnificent domain embraced in the grant, and the Frémont case went back to California before the Gomez case came up on appeal to the district court in California. When that case came up in the district court the land commissioners upon evidence had decided that a grant was given, the Supreme Court had decided that possession was not necessary, and so there was nothing to do on the part of the district court of California but to confirm the grant made to Gomez. I state now that the testimony before that commission was the testimony of several witnesses and of a great many documents which bore upon the grant made to Gomez.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the distinguished Senator from Virginia say that there was any grant before the commission?

Mr. HUNTON. I mean to lay before the Senate exactly what the evidence was.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask whether there was literally the grant purporting to be from the governor?

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the Senator with a great deal of pleasure and, I trust, with entire candor.

When the American forces under Frémont invaded Upper California and took possession, they took possession of the archives of the government in the custody of Governor Micheltorena, and it was for that reason that all the original papers under which Gomez claimed could not be produced before the land commission.

Mr. MORRILL. But will the Senator, if he will allow me to again interrupt him, say that Gomez was a man at all likely to leave his private papers where they could not be obtained? Would he not take care of them when he went back into Mexico, or when he returned would he be likely to have left his papers in the hands of others?

Mr. HUNTON. The distinguished Senator said that Gomez was an officer of the government, and that this was a government grant.

Mr. MORRILL. He was a clerk in the commissary department.

Mr. HUNTON. And it was upon that ground mainly that Gomez got his grant of the land. He was an officer of the government of Governor Micheltorena; he was there as a part of that government, and his private papers were there with him, and the proof of it is that a large portion of the private papers of Gomez relating to this grant was afterwards found among the mass of papers taken possession of by the American forces on that occasion.

Mr. MORRILL. Gomez was merely a clerk and not an officer of a military character, as I understand.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I state again that no lawyer has boldness enough, in my judgment, to undertake before a court or a jury to assail successfully the evidence upon which the land commissioners found that there was a grant of the Panoche Grande to Gomez. This case was reported favorably by a committee of the Senate in the last Congress, and has been reported again by a committee at this session, and I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to the evidence touching this grant:

I. The deposition of José Castro, who filled the office of political chief of California, and was also prefect and commanding general, which states that Gomez, with whom he was well acquainted, desired him (Castro) to inform him (Gomez) of a suitable place to petition for or secure, and that he recommended the Panoche Grande.

There is the origin of the desire of Gomez to have the Panoche Grande.

II. The petition of Gomez to Governor Micheltorena, March 13, 1844, requesting a grant of the rancho.

The recommendation of Castro was followed up by the petition, which was found amongst the papers captured by Frémont from Micheltorena.

III. A marginal entry made by the governor, March 14, 1844, on the petition of Gomez, that the proper secretary should cause the necessary investigations to be made and make report.

IV. A declaration of the same date, by Manuel Jimino, the secretary, that the petition of Gomez had been transmitted to the first justice of San Juan, in order that he should report what would be just in the matter.

V. The report of the justice, dated March 20, 1844, stating that the land was vacant, and that there was no reason why the same should not be granted.

All that is record evidence found after Gomez had filed the petition before the land commission.

VI. A map of the land, filed in pursuance of the justice's report.

VII. The affidavit of Valentine Gajiola, employed in the Presidial Company of Monterey in 1848, showing that Gomez applied to him to make a map of the rancho; exhibited to him the title paper duly executed, and that he made the map as desired.

VIII. The deposition of José Abrigo, the head of the commissary department, and resident in Monterey, proving that Gomez was a clerk in his office, and that, in 1845, he (Gomez) showed him a title to the land named, together with a map of the property; that the papers were signed by the governor and secretary, and that he was well acquainted with the signatures of these officers, having often seen them write; that the archives in which these papers were passed into the possession of the American Army July 7, 1846.

IX. The testimony of Abrigo, Dr. James L. Ord, a surgeon in the United States Army, and others, proving the destruction of the archives in Monterey, and the fact that such destruction is generally admitted.

X. The deposition of Oscar De Grandé Barque, stating that Gomez, in 1845, showed him title papers for the rancho, and proposed a sale of the land to him.

XI. The affidavit of J. Marno Bonilla, secretary of the superior tribunal of justice in Monterey, stating that Gomez, in 1841, applied to him for stamped paper, to be used in procuring a title to lands; and that in 1845 he saw memoranda of grants of land, among which was that of Panoche Grande to Gomez.

I beg the Senator from Vermont to note the fact that this witness swore before the land commission that he had gone to the records of Micheltorena, and there among the land grants recorded in the proper book he found the grant of the Rancho Panoche Grande made to Gomez.

XII. The affidavit of Matias Moreno, secretary of state of Upper California, stating that in 1846 he knew Gomez had obtained a grant for Panoche Grande, and that he saw the grant.

XIII. The affidavits of Maricio Gonzales, José Fernandez, Gabriel de la Torre, Joaquin S. Escamilla, and others, tending to prove the existence of the grant.

XIV. The statement of E. L. Goold, esq., before the Judiciary Committee, that he believed the petition of Gomez was a genuine document, and that he based his opinion on his knowledge of the facts and circumstances connected with the case of said Gomez against the United States, which involved the validity of the grant upon which this cased is based. Mr. Goold was of counsel in said case in opposition to the grant, and appeared as a witness before the committee on behalf of the opposing parties.

XV. The grant by Governor Micheltorena, in the year 1844, to Don Julian Ursua, of the tract known as the rancho "La Panoche de San Juan and Los Carrisalitos," wherein the tract is described as being bounded on the south by the mine of "Los Aguilas" and "La Panoche Grande."

XVI. Statement of Henry D. Cooke, esq., that when he was in California, in the years 1847-'48-'49, it was common report that Gomez had received a grant of a rancho near San Juan from the Mexican Government.

XVII. In 1845 the board of land commissioners, at the hearing on the evidence, as required by the laws of the United States, decided that Gomez had given satisfactory proof of the existence and loss of the grant.

With that accumulated testimony before the Senate of the United States, I ask is there a Senator within the sound of my voice who doubts for one moment that Gomez had a grant from Micheltorena for the Rancho Panoche Grande? I say the man who doubts it is very hard to convince indeed.

Mr. President, starting out with the assumption that Gomez had this grant, which has been recognized in a hundred cases by the Supreme Court of the United States to be a property right and to come under the protecting privileges of the treaty between Mexico and the United States, I ask, no matter what delay has happened, is it not the duty of this Government to hasten the time when justice shall be done to Gomez and his assignee?

Mr. President, if it be so (and it looks to me like it was unquestionable and could not really be questioned) that the Mexican Government did give to Gomez a grant of the Panoche Grande, is it not the duty of the United States to hasten to repair the wrong which has been done him and his assignee in the last thirty years? Nay, more; no matter what decisions have been made, no matter how many adverse decisions of the Supreme Court have been made, if the Senate is satisfied that a grant was made protected by the treaty, it is the duty of the legislative department of this Government to override everything of that sort and do justice to these parties under the treaty obligations of the United States.

But the distinguished Senator from Vermont says the Supreme Court have decided that this case is not right. I believe he went so far as to say they had called it a stupendous fraud. I have not time, in the limit which I have set upon the remarks I shall submit, to go into a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in these cases, but I desire to say one thing.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely said it was so given in the statement of the case in the Supreme Court. I did not say the Supreme Court had so decided.

Mr. HUNTON. As I said a while ago, if we have started in this case aright by the establishment of a grant to Gomez, then no matter what the Supreme Court have said, no matter what anybody has said, there is a duty resting upon the United States Government under its treaty stipulations to carry out the obligation of that treaty and give to Gomez and his assignee the right acquired by the grant from Mexico.

I agree that the Supreme Court of the United States did decide this case against Gomez. I beg to state here, without going into any criticism of the Supreme Court, because that would hardly be tolerated in this case, that if the Supreme Court decided the various questions that came before it in this case right, then they have decided the same questions wrong in a hundred other cases. I think I can pledge myself, sir, to demonstrate that to any fair audience in the land. But has nobody else decided this case except the Supreme Court? Has no other tribunal having equal jurisdiction, and, when it takes jurisdiction, exclusive jurisdiction—aye, exclusive of the Supreme Court of the United States—decided this case, and decided it in favor of Gomez, the grantee?

Sir, after this case had passed through the district court in California by an appeal, which is always taken in such cases, it went to the Supreme Court of the United States. At that time Hon. Jeremiah Black was Attorney-General under Mr. Buchanan's Administration. It was customary in such cases that the Attorney-General should examine them to see whether he would prosecute the appeal. On a certain occasion, the date of which I can not now give, Gomez and his counsel, or McGarrahan, who had then become the assignee of Gomez, and his counsel on the one side, and the United States and its counsel on the other, appeared before Attorney-General Black and argued this case in all its features. Upon solemn argument before the Attorney-General of the United States he made a decision in the case, deciding that there was nothing in it upon which an appeal could be prosecuted. He entered in the minutes of his book that he kept in the Attorney-General's office a statement to the effect that there was nothing in the case, and ordered it dismissed. Thereupon the counsel for McGarrahan, with the approbation of the Attorney-General, went into the Supreme Court of the United States and entered a dismissal of the appeal, and a mandate was sent down to the court below, ordering that court to carry out its original decree confirming the grant to Gomez.

Mr. President, there is no lawyer in the land who, if consulted upon the title of McGarrahan to the Panoche Grande, after it had gone through the district court to the Supreme Court of the United States and there the appeal had been dismissed and a mandate sent down directing the original decree to be carried into execution, would not have told William McGarrahan that he had as good a title to that property as he had to the coat upon his back. Just before that time the New Idria Mining Company had come in—a parcel of squatters who had no more right or interest in the property than has the distinguished Senator from Vermont, or any other Senator on the floor of the Senate. They came in there, and from that day to this it has been a fight, not between the Government of the United States and McGarrahan on the one side or the other, but it has been a fight between McGarrahan, the claimant of the property, and the New Idria Mining Company as squatters upon property which one of their leading men said in an affidavit in the book which the Senator has before him they knew belonged to McGarrahan.

Sir, there is a limit to all things in law, and among the rest there is a limit to the time in which a man can take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That time is five years. The five years elapsed, and it was then that McGarrahan asked that his survey should be made according to the boundaries of the property he had acquired by grant. But the Land Department, always the enemy of McGarrahan, and from which and the Attorney-General's office together thirty-five different men have departed to enter the service of the New Idria Mining Company as their counsel——

Mr. GEORGE. What is the Senator's statement?

Mr. HUNTON. I say McGarrahan could get no survey in the ordinary mode, and about that time the Congress of the United States passed a law authorizing each claimant of a grant to make a survey for himself, provided he would deposit the money with the Government in order to pay the expenses. McGarrahan has been charged (I do not think the Senator from Vermont made the charge to-day; I believe he did on a previous occasion, although I am not sure of it) with lobbying that bill through in order to cover his case; and the proof in that book on your desk shows that McGarrahan was in California at the time the law was passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not say anything about that matter.

Mr. HUNTON. The law was passed at the instigation and suggestion of a man by the name of McGuire, and McGarrahan was in what was then the Territory of California. But the bill was passed. It became a law. The surveyors were instructed under it, and under the instructions issued from the Land Department here Gen. Beale, the surveyor-general of that country, at the request of McGarrahan, had this land surveyed. Is any Senator here bold enough to attack the good faith and integrity of Gen. Beale, a man who in the matter of integrity stood as high as any Senator on this floor? He made the survey. It was forwarded to this city and filed in the Land Department. The Land Department, filled with the enemies of McGarrahan and the paid employés of the New Idria Mining Company, refused to issue a patent to him.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Virginia made a statement just now about some thirty employés in the Land Department afterwards becoming employés of the New Idria Mining Company.

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear the Senator make a little fuller statement on that point than he has made. Will he tell us where and when it occurred and give the details?

Mr. HUNTON. We have the evidence in that book. [Indicating.]

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator give us his statement?

Mr. HUNTON. There were thirty-five men belonging to the Land Department and the Attorney-General's Office (I am including both of them) who left their positions in their respective Departments and entered the service of the New Idria Mining Company.

Mr. GEORGE. In what year?

Mr. HUNTON. I have a very poor recollection as to dates, but I will ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] when it was that those men left the Land Department and the Attorney-General's Office to enter the service of the New Idria Mining Company.

Mr. TELLER. One right after the other as the cases proceeded.

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly. It was between 1855 and 1861 or 1862.

Mr. TELLER. Eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Mr. GEORGE. Was that during the time the claim of McGarrahan was being prosecuted before the Department?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; it was during that very time. When it became apparent that the Land Department was playing false to McGarrahan he carried the case before the Secretary of the Interior. I beg leave to say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont that where a Secretary of the Interior has a right to take hold of a case, he has as much right to take it up to the exclusion of anybody else as the Supreme Court of the United States has a right to take it up to the exclusion of all other courts. Secretary Smith took jurisdiction of this case. It was argued most elaborately by counsel both for and against McGarrahan—I was about to say for the Government and for McGarrahan—but it was argued for McGarrahan and for the New Idria Mining Company. It was thoroughly and elaborately argued before Caleb Smith, who was himself one of the fine lawyers of the country, and upon elaborate argument he decided that the time had expired in which an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States could again be taken. He took hold of the case, took jurisdiction of it, passed upon the survey, confirmed the survey made by Gen. Beale, and ordered a patent to be issued.

McGarrahan had not only obtained a confirmation of his title by a dismissal of the case from the Supreme Court of the United States, but he had secured a confirmation as potent from the Secretary of the Interior as that from the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Land Department still would not issue the patent under the conspiracy which existed in the Land Department. Mr.

Secretary Smith about that time went out of office and was succeeded by Secretary Usher, and his parting request to Usher was to take particular care of that case which he had decided. Mr. Usher took the case up and heard it reargued, and upon a reargument as elaborate as the first, he confirmed the opinion of his predecessor and ordered a patent to issue.

But it did not issue. It did not issue because the Land Department was filled with men in the pay of the New Idria Mining Company. At last as the dernier ressort the counsel of McGarrahan, who was then Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, carried it before the President of the United States, Mr. Abraham Lincoln, and he heard elaborate argument from both sides. After the President had heard the argument he was a good deal bothered about it, and he met Thad. Stevens. I am talking now from the evidence as it appears here before me. He said, "Mr. Stevens, I am very much bothered about this McGarrahan case. One party says McGarrrahan ought to have a patent for his land and the other says he ought not. What am I to do?" "Why," says Thad. Stevens, "make up your mind and sign the damned thing, if you think it is right." A short time afterwards the relative and private secretary of Mr. Stevens met the President, and Mr. Lincoln said, "Tell Mr. Stevens the damned thing is signed."

I might stop there and rest the case upon that single particle of testimony to show that the President of the United States actually signed the patent securing to Mr. McGarrahan as the assignee of Gomez the full title to the Panoche Grande. But that is not all.

Mr. Stoddard, the private secretary of the President to sign land patents, was examined. He swore positively that he signed a patent granting to Gomez, the assignor of McGarrahan, this very property; that he recollected the transaction distinctly; that he signed it and forwarded it back to the Land Office.

Now, what became of it there? It was never more heard of from that time, which was 1863, until 1870. The Land Department suppressed it. In 1870 Mr. McGarrahan heard it was suppressed. Mr. McGarrahan's counsel, Gen. SICKLES, was at the front in the war and Mr. McGarrahan was in California, and therefore he did hear of it before.

But as soon as he heard of it he went and hunted it up, and he found the skeleton of a patent on the record book, without the signature of the President, without the seal of the Land Department, and without the counter signature of the recorder. They took testimony, and they demonstrated, I will say even to the satisfaction of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, that in the Land Department, filled with the bandits of the New Idria Mining Company, those persons had deliberately taken away the two last leaves of the patent and substituted two others in their stead. Thus the signature of Lincoln did not appear and the seal of the Land Department did not appear. But the testimony taken shows that when the patent was first put upon that record it was a complete patent, examined, made to conform to the original patent signed by the President, and it had been changed and the signatures of the President and the recorder were gone. All this had occurred.

McGarrahan in the meantime was fighting his case before the two branches of Congress, with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in his favor, with a decision of two Secretaries of the Interior in his favor, with a decision of the President of the United States in his favor, all of whom had as complete jurisdiction over the case and whose decision was as final as the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. President, this is the way Mr. McGarrahan has been treated. I shall not stop to go into the details.

In the meantime a man by the name of Ozier was judge of the district court in California, and he became a violent partisan of the New Idria Mining Company, I suppose for reasons sufficient unto himself. He set aside the order confirming the grant, after he had made it more than five years preceding. When the case had gone to the Supreme Court of the United States and had there been affirmed by dismissal of the decree and the issuing of a mandate, Judge Ozier undertook to set aside his own decree. I need not tell the lawyers of the Senate that no judge on earth, no court under the canopy of heaven, has the right to interfere even with his own orders after the term in which the order was made is ended. But Judge Ozier, more than five years after the rendition of the decree, set it aside and ordered a new trial.

About that time the good Lord took a liking to the judge, and his successor was appointed, who, I undertake to say here, was not only a fine judge but a man of the highest character. The matter was brought to his attention, and he without the slightest hesitation set aside the order of his predecessor giving a new trial, because it was no more than a void order upon its face.

From that order of Judge Haight, the successor of Judge Ozier, the New Idria Mining Company, through the attorney for the United States, took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the way it got into that court the second time. I said awhile ago, that if the Supreme Court of the United States has decided the questions arising in that case rightly, it has decided a hundred others wrongly. I do not care which dilemma you take. If it has decided one hundred others wrongly, it is not entitled to the confidence of a respectable court. If it has decided the others rightly, and this wrongly, the wrong ought to be corrected all the more speedily.

But the case went up to the Supreme Court not upon the record obtained in the ordinary way, but the record upon which the appeal was taken was made out here in Washington and sent to California. It did not go to the district court of the district in which the court sat, which decided the case, but to another district court, and there was certified by the district attorney without any examination and it came to the Supreme Court on that order. A motion was made to dismiss the case because there had been no notice given when the law required it, and the Supreme Court had decided it in like cases a hundred times. Another motion was that the case had not been put upon the docket at the first term after the appeal was taken, which the law required, but the court overruled these motions.

When the Senator from Vermont says the court pronounced the case a fraud, I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it pronounced it a fraud upon the written affidavit of Pacificus Ord. We may stop a moment to consider that phase of the question. In the first place, there is no lawyer who hears me who does not know that a case in an appellate court must be decided upon the evidence in the court below. The affidavit of Pacificus Ord was not in the case in the court below. Now, what was in the affidavit of Pacificus Ord?

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from Virginia mean to say that the Supreme Court of the United States decided a case upon an ex parte affidavit made after the decision in the court below and which was never before that court?

Mr. HUNTON. The Supreme Court makes that the principal ground for pronouncing this case a fraud.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator wish to be understood as saying that the Supreme Court of the United States took jurisdiction of a case upon a record coming from a different court than the one in which the judgment was rendered?

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no; I did not say that. I say the record purported to come from the same court, but it was made up in Washington and certified to by a district attorney who was the district attorney in another district than that in which the court sat which tried the case. Now, as to the affidavit.

Mr. DOLPH. No certificate of the district attorney authenticated the record, I suppose?

Mr. HUNTON. He is bound to do it under the law. He did certify it, but it was not a correct title.

Mr. DOLPH. And that was the record which came into the Supreme Court?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOLPH. I never before heard of such a thing.

Mr. HUNTON. We have the proof of it here.

Mr. DOLPH. I never before heard of such a thing.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, I wish to say a few words as to the affidavit of Pacificus Ord. Who was he? From the remarks of the Senator from Vermont it would be supposed that Pacificus Ord was a scoundrel and a cheat. Such is not the fact. He was a brother of Gen. E. O. C. Ord, than whom no man in the Federal Army stood much higher. When he went into the case for Gomez before the land commission he did it upon a contingent fee of a part of the recovery. He lost the case before the land commission for want of proof of possession, and took the case to the district court of the United States. Before it was reached upon the docket of the district court the decision in the Fremont case took place, and there was no longer any reason why the district court should not reverse the opinion of the land commission and confirm the grant to Gomez.

Pacificus Ord did not conceal the fact that he was interested in the case. If he had concealed the fact that he was interested in the case and had surreptitiously obtained the confirmation through the decision of the land commission reversed, then he would have been open to all the charges made by the distinguished Senator from Vermont. But upon the contrary he rose in his place in the court and said: "I have an interest in this case. I have informed the Department of Justice in Washington that I am interested in this case and have asked them to appoint a man to attend to this identical case, which they have not done. Therefore I must ask the court to let somebody else take my place as district attorney here for this particular case."

It was done, sir, upon the decision, and in the Fremont case there could be but one result, and that was a confirmation of the grant of the Government of Mexico to Gomez. Was there anything wrong there? Who dare rise in his seat here and pronounce the conduct of Pacificus Ord fraudulent and dishonest? He did all he could to relieve himself of the position in which he found himself by reporting it to the court in person and to the Government in Washington by letter, and asking to be relieved of it, and it was not done. As the last thing that was left to him he turned the case over to somebody else to represent the United States. It was done; but of course, under the circumstances the result must have been a confirmation of the grant.

Mr. GEORGE. Ord did not in fact undertake to represent the United States in the case?

Mr. HUNTON. He did not represent the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. He declined to do it?

Mr. HUNTON. He declined to do it.

Mr. GEORGE. And another man was appointed?

Mr. HUNTON. Another man did represent the United States. The other man was named Hartman, and he afterward became a violent partisan of the New Indria Mining Company and undertook to swear he did not; but the testimony is perfectly overwhelming that not only did he represent it, but he received pay for it. His receipt is published in the book in the Senator's desk, another copy of which I have in the cloakroom.

In that condition of affairs the case was in the Supreme Court of the United States, and Mr. Justice Clifford (than whom I will say here with all the pleasure in life I have scarcely ever known a better man), became, I was almost about to say insane with prejudice against the McGarrahan claim. But whether so or not, he seemed to have set out with a determination to crush the rights of this grantee of the Mexican Government per fas aut nefas. I do not mean to say he did it maliciously and maliguantly, but that was the result. He seized hold of the affidavit of Pacificus Ord and said: "There is corruption between the grantee and his counsel by which a corrupt and fraudulent combination is made to carry the thing through the courts and get a confirmation of this grant."

Suppose that was true. Suppose Judge Clifford had a right to say so, I ask you, sir, as a lawyer, and you, and you, when a case is decided and there is a suggestion of fraud, especially in an affidavit that was not before the court below, what is the duty of the court under such circumstances? Beyond all peradventure to send the case back, that the charge of fraud may be investigated properly in the court below, and not decide it upon an ex parte affidavit. But no; the court hastened to seize hold of the affidavit of Pacificus Ord; it pronounced the combination between him and Gomez fraudulent, and instead of sending the case back for inquiry, it pronounced the grant fraudulent and forever decided, so far as that court could go, against the validity of the Mexican grant to Gomez.

Mr. President, if I have told the truth, and I have tried to tell it, or if I have approximated the truth, should the two Houses of Congress hesitate to give this old man a new trial, especially when the Supreme Court has decided one way and two Secretaries of the Interior, equally omnipotent in the premises, and the President of the United States have decided another way? Ought there to be any hesitation on the part of the Congress of the United States to give this relief to a claimant who has spent the years of his life in advocacy of a claim he not only believes but knows to be right?

Mr. GEORGE. Before the Senator from Virginia concludes I should like to call his attention to a very important question in the case, and I shall be glad to have him explain it. The bill provides that as to that part of the grant, if it shall be found to be a good grant, which the United States has alienated—sold to somebody else—the United States shall pay for the value of the minerals taken from the land thus alienated, less the expense of taking them. I should like to know the equity of placing that burden upon the United States, instead of upon the grantee who got the land.

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator means the trespasser who got the land. The grantee did not get it. The Senator means the trespasser?

Mr. GEORGE. I mean the trespasser or the third party. I should like to know the equity of making the United States responsible for the minerals extracted.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer my friend now. Who enabled the trespasser to get the minerals? Why was the New Idria Mining Company allowed year after year, before a patent was obtained for a portion of the property by the New Idria Mining Company, to put McGarrahan at defiance and coin the very blood of McGarrahan into money to fight his claim? It was because the United States Government did not stand by its treaty obligations. Why was Frémont enabled to put at defiance trespassers of a like character upon his grant? Because in the Frémont case the Government stood by its pledged obligation and enabled him, by making a title to his land, to defy squatters and trespassers and to assert his own right to the property which he had thus acquired.

I do not say—and I may just as well come to that now—that McGarrahan is entitled to those minerals. If he is not he will not get them. But I do say that he has a right to have that question tried and determined, and if he was entitled to the minerals, and because the Government of the United States did not stand by its treaty obligations he has lost those rights, the Federal Government is bound to make it good, or else violate the treaty obligations it entered into.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator says he does not claim that the quicksilver mine is within the grant of McGarrahan, but he is in favor of allowing that question to be tried. I ask him whether by the very terms of the pending bill——

Mr. HUNTON. My friend has not stated my position rightly. If he wants me to fortify what I said, I shall be glad to have him state what I did say. I have not come to the question of the survey. I have not even hinted at it. I am now talking about the abstract right of a grantee of land under the Mexican Government to be entitled to the minerals upon the land.

Mr. FAULKNER. That question I am not going to discuss.

Mr. HUNTON. I am coming to my friend's question presently.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understood the Senator to say that he wanted the question as to the right of these parties decided. I wish to ask him whether by the terms of the bill he does not withdraw from the decision of the court the question as to the boundaries of the grant, if the grant itself is found by the court, and make this private survey conclusive on the court?

Mr. HUNTON. My friend is a little impatient. I believe the rule is a very good one not to attempt to cross a bridge until you get to it. I have not come to that point yet. I am coming to it. I am now on the question as to whether, granting that these mines are within the grant, McGarrahan is entitled to the minerals extracted from what is unquestionably within the boundaries of his grant. As I said a while ago, I do not positively aver that the minerals passed with the grant. I have a very decided opinion, but the whole question as to whether the minerals did pass with the grant is left to the decision of the court with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. If they did pass, and McGarrahan has lost his minerals by reason of the neglect of the United States to carry out its treaty obligations, ought not the United States Government to indemnify him to some extent? If McGarrahan is not entitled to them there will be no claim for them on his part.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. With pleasure.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to know whether the Senator thinks the United States ought to pay for the minerals which these trespassers, as he calls them, took from the land of McGarrahan? Suppose McGarrahan establishes his title. The Senator says in that case the Government ought to pay for the minerals. I should like to know upon what ground he thinks the United States ought to guarantee any man who has dealings with the United States against the fraud or neglect of the officers of the United States. Is that the Senator's idea?

Mr. HUNTON. I shall endeavor to explain it.

Mr. GEORGE. I am having trouble on that point. I should like to have it explained and discussed.

Mr. HUNTON. As I said a while ago, if the failure of the United States Government to stand by the treaty enabled the New Idria Mining Company to keep McGarrahan at arm's length while they were extracting the treasure from underneath his land, then I ask the Senator from Mississippi if it would not be right for the Government, having failed to stand up to its treaty obligations, to make some indemnity?

Now, I beg to say another thing. McGarrahan has time and again notified the Federal Government to bring suit against the New Idria Mining Company, one of the richest companies on this continent, to recover the value of the quicksilver taken out of the mine. He gave notice not only in that form, but in the bills which he has had pending before both Houses of Congress he has claimed the minerals, and he notified the Government to make the New Idria Mining Company pay for them. He could not sue because he had no title by patent and the Government withheld it. But the Federal Government could sue. McGarrahan notified the Government to sue. The Federal Government can sue to-morrow, and I beg my friend from Mississippi to bear the fact in mind that the Federal Government can sue the New Idria Mining Company, a wealthy corporation, having in it in some shape or form a vice-presidential candidate. It can still sue the New Idria Mining Company because the statute of limitations can not be pleaded against the Government. The statute can be pleaded against McGarrahan.

Mr. FAULKNER. Does not the Government protect them?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; it protects them so far as the company got a patent to the land from the date of the patent; but this was all done before that time.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me a moment?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that there is no assumption in the bill that the Government is liable in any degree or in any manner for any amount. On the question first submitted, having found that the grant is a valid and legal grant and that it was properly transferred, the question is then submitted under the patent, if the patent had issued to McGarrahan would he have been entitled to the mineral?

That is a mooted question. If the court should decide that in favor of McGarrahan then the court is directed to inquire what has been the value of the mineral taken out. There is no judgment rendered. There is no assertion that the Government will then be liable to pay. That is a matter left entirely to the question of law which the Senator has propounded, which will come in play if there should be an attempt at any time then to collect from the Government, which, of course, could only be done by a voluntary payment on the part of the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. The court will find the facts and certify those facts to Congress.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, that is all there is of it. They are to certify both the law and the fact. I was coming to that point.

Mr. DOLPH. I am a little curious to know how the right of the mining company to minerals mined before the patent issued differs from the right to those mined afterwards. I suppose the fact is that a mining company can work a mine for years and be entitled to the mineral before a patent may be issued.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will say there is no question about the right of the New Idria involved here in any shape or manner. Without this proposed act or with it their rights remain precisely as they are.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Virginia was saying that the Government has a right to sue for the minerals, and a distinction was drawn between minerals mined after the patent and those mined before. I say the law is, I understand, that a mining claim may be properly worked and the claimant is entitled to minerals long before the patent is issued.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there is any distinction, and the question whether the Government may collect or not is not involved in the bill in any shape or form.

Mr. HUNTON. I may as well state here what my friend, the Senator from Colorado, has partly stated. Those of us who have examined the bill, reported after deliberation by the Judiciary Committee, understand, and we are obliged to understand, that there is not a dollar appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States to pay McGarrahan or anybody else, but the questions are referred to the court to determine what his rights are in the premises. The court reports its decision to the two Houses of Congress, and the power of Congress to give a discharge to the Government in whole or in part is retained according to the terms of the bill. So all the bill does is to refer the matter to court with a direction that the court shall report the facts and the law of the case to the two Houses of Congress.

I have consumed more time than I intended, and I beg to say that I shall add but little more, and that will be upon the two amendments proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The first is to strike out the survey; and there is where the question of my distinguished friend from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] applies. He wants a new survey made. Now, why, Mr. President? The survey was made by Gen. Beale. It came to the Department of the Interior and was passed upon as a proper legal survey by Mr. Caleb P. Smith and Mr. Usher; and it was passed upon by the President of the United States as a proper survey after full argument. Each of the Secretaries and the President of the United States having confirmed the survey made in this case, I ask why in the name of common sense subject this claimant to the delay and expense of going to the Pacific coast and engaging in a survey again?

Aye, more, Mr. President. That is not all. When this question of survey was up before either one House or the other, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior (and that Commissioner was Mr. Burdett, who soon afterwards became the counsel of the New Idria Mining Company), sent a commission to California with full instructions and full information on the subject to ascertain whether the survey was properly made or not; and that commission reported that the survey was correct. I ask why, in the name of common sense, subject this claimant of thirty years to the expense of a new survey when the old survey has been passed upon by two Secretaries, the President of the United States, and a commission sent out from the Land Office?

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me, I will answer the question why I think it ought to be passed upon. One of the disputed questions between these litigants, and always has been, is as to the boundaries of the land. The evidence shows, according to my recollection, that there is a difference of 40 miles between them as to the proper boundary. If this survey is taken as conclusive by the court it brings the quicksilver mines within the limits of the supposed grant. If, on the other hand, the contention is sustained as correct by a resurvey it leaves the quicksilver mine entirely outside of the supposed grant. Therefore the question of a new survey involves the entire question as to what would be the liability or the equitable rights of this party as between himself and the United States Government arising from the taking of the minerals from the land.

I want to say further, as to any litigation in the State of California in which Mr. McGarrahan himself was a party, the supreme court of that State has held in two decisions that this very survey was not binding upon the Government; that it was not binding upon any third party; that it was a mere private survey of Mr. McGarrahan himself, and therefore should not bind anyone but himself.

Mr. HUNTON. The two Secretaries and the President decided that it was binding and was a survey by the Government. I agree to what my friend says, that there is some confusion about the testimony in regard to the boundary, but I can explain why it is so, and if he will listen to me he will understand it.

Now, we will take that square [indicating] right over the Chair. Governor Micheltorena granted to Gomez 4 square leagues to be taken out of that square. That square contains some 40 or 50 square leagues. According to the decisions of the Supreme Court, especially in the Frémont case, a man can go anywhere upon that square and get his 4 leagues. Frémont first located his 4 square leagues by the seashore. Then he became dissatisfied and pulled up stakes and selected 4 square leagues on the mountain, where he found his mines. So with this grant to Gomez, he had 4 leagues out of that larger square. The square was the matter bounded in the grant. If you locate the 4 square leagues up in the left-hand corner, there at the top, you put it very near the next general division of that country; but if you put it near the square below, on the right-hand side, it is probably 50 miles from the other. That is the reason why this apparent confusion occurs; but when a person becomes familiar with the facts of the case it is all reconciled and it is clear enough.

Mr. FAULKNER. With the permission of the Senator from Virginia, when he comes to Congress and asks that the rights of the United States and of these parties shall be settled by opening up a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which was rendered in favor of the Government, is it not fair and just that all the facts which are material in the case should be honestly and fairly submitted for the adjudication of this tribunal, and not select a very material fact in the dispute and make that fact conclusive upon the court?

Mr. HUNTON. The Supreme Court had nothing to do with the survey in this case. Opening up the decision of the Supreme Court does not open up the survey. It is a wholly different and independent question. I say after that survey has been made by the surveyor-general of California, confirmed by two Secretaries of the Interior and the President, it would be a hardship upon this old man to require him to have another survey made.

Another objection made by the distinguished Senator from Vermont and embodied in one of his amendments is to strike out all that portion of the bill which admits as evidence affidavits, depositions, surveys, etc. Now, why was it necessary to put that provision in? Because the United States Government has failed in its treaty stipulations until the witnesses are dead. Will the United States Government take advantage of its own laches and its own wrong to deprive this man of his rights because by the delay occasioned by the United States Government his witnesses have died?

But, Mr. President, there is another question to be considered. When you come to see what evidence will be admitted under that provision of the bill you will find (and the Senator from Vermont no doubt has already found) that it admits two affidavits and two depositions on behalf of the United States where it admits one for McGarrahan.

I say, therefore, it would be not only unjust but a very great hardship to confine McGarrahan to the testimony of living witnesses who would be obliged to speak to transactions forty years old, when nearly all of the witnesses have died in the meantime. So I say that this provision of the bill is not only just but indispensable to get at the true rights not only of McGarrahan, but of the United States.

Mr. President, I am done. I have detained the Senate much longer than I expected; but I beg to say in conclusion that I believe McGarrahan has as good a right to the Panoche Grande as any man has to any given piece of property he owns, and I trust the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. VILAS obtained the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to go on to-night?

Mr. VILAS. I would rather not.

Mr. MORRILL. There are so few in the Senate that if no one objects I will move that the Senate adjourn so as to allow the Senator from Wisconsin to take the floor to-morrow morning.

Mr. VILAS. Very well.

Mr. PUGH. With the consent of the Senator from Vermont, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CALL in the chair). The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 29, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SECRET SERVICE DIVISION, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the chief of the Secret Service Division, asking additional appropriation to continue that service to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPENSES UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Attorney-General in relation to the immediate necessity of providing additional appropriation for expenses of the United States courts; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SETTLE, indefinitely, because of sickness; and

To Mr. HEARD, for ten days, on account of important business.

MOSES W. CARPENTER.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2561) for the relief of Moses W. Carpenter, of Johnson County, Ark., Mexican war veteran.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Moses W. Carpenter, of Johnson County, Ark., Mexican war veteran, at $15 a month.

The Committee on Pensions recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out in the twelfth line the word "fifteen" and insert "twelve."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, reserving the right to object.

What is the necessity for this bill if this man is a Mexican war veteran, who under the general law would get $12 a month anyway?

Mr. TERRY. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that $12 a month is not a sufficient sum under the circumstances of the case.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the amount proposed by the bill.

Mr. TERRY. That is the amendment to the bill recommended by the committee; but it was introduced for $15, and was reported for $15 at the last session of Congress, and would have been so reported this session by the committee if they had had time to consider it. The chairman of the committee, who is present, is aware of the fact that the motion to strike out fifteen and insert twelve was made just as the committee was on the point of rising, and was adopted without any examination of the papers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then you wish to reject the amendment proposed by the committee?

Mr. TERRY. Yes; I want to leave it at $15 a month.

Mr. MOSES. I will state for the information of the House that it was the desire of the committee to make all of these bills uniform at $12 a month, but after reporting this bill, and upon an examination of the papers, the committee are willing to recede from that amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask if this is one of the bills which has been considered in Committee of the Whole and reported back to the House?

Mr. TERRY. I will state the circumstances of the case to the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. That is not necessary. I only wish to know if this bill has been considered by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. TERRY. It has been; and let me say that owing to my unavoidable absence that night, having been detained from the House, the committee acted upon it and accepted the amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions, which would have been corrected subsequently but for the fact that I could not make a motion to reconsider in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. The reason I inquire is that there are a number of cases which have been considered in Committee of the Whole at Friday night sessions, but the previous question has not been ordered upon them, and I was wondering if we could not by unanimous consent consider all of them at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. TERRY. I hope the gentleman will not interpose objection to this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not intend to.

Mr. TERRY. For this man is in great need.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas for the present consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions was rejected, and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THANKFUL ROBBINS.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4780) for the relief of Thankful Robbins.

Mr. SAYERS. Has this bill been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HOOKER of New York. It was, and was laid aside favorably by the committee at its last meeting.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thankful Robbins, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month, as the foster mother of George E. Squires, late private Company C, One hundred and twelfth New York Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill, as recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was amended to read: "A bill to pension Thankful Robbins."

On motion of Mr. HOOKER of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LUCY BROWN.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother of Aaron B. Divinny, late of Company B, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, in the war of the rebellion.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, has this bill been considered by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there any amendment to it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. There is no amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TAYLOR], for unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 144) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive at the subtreasury in the city of New York from R. T. Wilson & Co., or assigns, the money, amounting to $6,704,000, to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, and to place the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, and;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 147) authorizing the transfer of furniture and carpets to the rooms now occupied by the United States courts at Chicago.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print for the use of Congress 6,000 copies of all papers and messages sent to Congress by the President since January 1, 1893, relating to Hawaiian affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 37) to provide for the printing of a history and digest of the international arbitrations to which the United States was a party and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (S. R. 8) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the settlement of the accounts of special agents Moore and Woodson, under the treaty of 1854, with the Delaware Indians, etc.;

A bill (S. 574) for the relief of Dwight Hall; and

A bill (S. 260) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1887.

CORPORATIONS AS SURETIES.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4954) relative to recognizances, etc. This bill was read at length the other morning, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of it be dispensed with at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4954) relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon.

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] if that bill comes before the House with the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; it is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. This bill was read at length on the day before yesterday.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, let us have it read again, in order that the House may understand what it is acting upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking conditioned for the faithful performance of any duty, or for doing or refraining from doing anything in such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking specified, is by the laws of the United States required or permitted to be given with one surety or with two or more sureties, the execution of the same or the guaranteeing of the performance of the condition thereof shall be sufficient when executed or guaranteed solely by a corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States, or of any State having power to guarantee the fidelity of persons holding positions of public or private trust, and to execute and guarantee bonds and undertakings in judicial proceedings: Provided, That such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking be approved by the head of department, court, judge, officer, board, or body executive, legislative, or judicial required to approve or accept the same.

SEC. 2. That no such company shall do business under the provisions of this act beyond the limits of the State or Territory under whose laws it was incorporated and in which its principal office is located, nor beyond the limits of the District of Columbia, when such company was incorporated under its laws or the laws of the United States and its principal office is located in said District, until it shall by a written power of attorney appoint some person residing within the jurisdiction of the court for the judicial district wherein such suretyship is to be undertaken, who shall be a citizen of the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, wherein such court is held, as its agent, upon whom may be served all lawful process against such company, and who shall be authorized to enter an appearance in its behalf. A copy of such power of attorney, duly certified and authenticated, shall be filed with the clerk of the district court of the United States for such district at each place where a term of such court is or may be held, which copy, or a certified copy thereof, shall be legal evidence in all controversies arising under this act. If any such agent shall be removed, resign, or die, become insane, or otherwise incapable of acting, it shall be the duty of such company to appoint another agent in his place as hereinbefore prescribed, and until such appointment shall have been made, or during the absence of any agent of such company from such district, service of process may be upon the clerk of the court wherein such suit is brought, with like effect as upon an agent appointed by the company. The officer executing such process upon such clerk shall immediately transmit a copy thereof by mail to the company, and state such fact in his return. A judgment, decree, or order of a court entered or made after service of process as aforesaid shall be as valid and binding on such company as if served with process in said district.

SEC. 3. That every company before transacting any business under this act shall deposit with the Attorney-General of the United States a copy of its charter or articles of incorporation, and a statement signed and sworn to by its president and secretary showing its assets and liabilities. If the said Attorney-General shall be satisfied that such company has authority under its charter to do the business provided for in this act, and that it has a paid-up capital of not less than $250,000 and is able to keep and perform its contracts, he shall grant authority in writing to such company to do business under this act.

SEC. 4. That every such company shall, in the months of January, April, July, and October of each year, file with the said Attorney-General a statement, signed and sworn to by its president and secretary, showing its assets and liabilities, as is required by section 3 of this act. And the said Attorney-General shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to revoke the authority of any such company to transact any new business under this act whenever in his judgment such company is not solvent or is conducting its business in violation of this act. He may institute inquiry at any time into the solvency of said company and may require that additional security be given at any time by any principal when he deems such company no longer sufficient security.

SEC. 5. That any surety company doing business under the provisions of this act may be sued in respect thereof in any court of the United States which has now or hereafter may have jurisdiction of actions or suits upon such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking in the district in which such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking was made or guaranteed, or in the district in which the principal office of such company is located. And for the purposes of this act such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking shall be treated as made or guaranteed in the district in which the office is located, to which it is returnable, or in which it is filed, or in the district in which the principal in such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking resided when it was made or guaranteed.

SEC. 6. That if any such company shall neglect or refuse to pay any final judgment or decree rendered against it upon any such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking made or guaranteed by it under the provisions of this act, from which no appeal, writ of error, or supersedeas has been taken, for thirty days after the rendition of such judgment or decree, it shall forfeit all right to do business under this act.

SEC. 7. That any company which shall execute or guarantee any recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking under the provisions of this act shall be estopped in any proceeding to enforce the liability which it shall have assumed to incur, to deny its corporate power to execute or guarantee such instrument or assume such liability.

SEC. 8. That any company doing business under the provisions of this act which shall fail to comply with any of its provisions shall forfeit to the United States for every such failure not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, to be recovered by suit in the name of the United States in the same courts in which suit may be brought against such company under the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] for the immediate consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The Committee on the Judiciary recommended the following amendments:

On page 2, after line 18 of section 1, add the following:

"But no officer or person having the approval of any bond shall exact that it shall be furnished by a guarantee company or by any particular guarantee company."

On page 4, in line 9 of section 3, after the word "dollars," insert the words "in cash."

On page 6, after line 7 of section 8, insert the following:

"And such failure shall not affect the validity of any contract entered into by such company."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, which is merely formal, in order to correct an oversight in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, section 3, line 9, after the word "cash," add the words "or its equivalent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 5860) to amend sections 4, 6, and 10 of the act of February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That there shall be a clerk of said court of appeals, to be appointed by the court, who shall receive as compensation for his services, in the discretion of the court, an annual salary not to exceed the sum of $3,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, and who shall give bond, such as the court may determine to be satisfactory, for the faithful performance of his duties, and his duties shall be such as the court may from time to time prescribe. That the said clerk of the court of appeals shall, with the approval of the court, appoint one assistant or deputy clerk, who shall receive as compensation for his services, in the discretion of the court, an annual salary not to exceed the sum of $2,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, and who may sign the name of the clerk to any official act required by law, or by the practice of the court, to be performed by the clerk, and may authenticate said signature by affixing the seal of the court thereto, when the impress of the seal is necessary to its authentication. In such cases the signature shall be "——— ———, Clerk.

"By ——— ———, Assistant Clerk.

"The court shall regulate from time to time the fees to be charged by the said clerk, which shall be accounted for at least once in each quarter, and paid into the Treasury of the United States, and said clerk shall receive such allowance for clerical assistance and necessary expenditures in the conduct of his office as the court may determine by special or general order in the premises, but not to exceed the sum of $2,000 in any one year, payable as aforesaid at the Treasury of the United States."

SEC. 2. That section 6 of the act aforesaid be, and the same is hereby, amended so to read as follows:

SEC. 6. That said court of appeals shall establish by rule of court such terms of the court in each year as to it may seem necessary: Provided, however, That there shall be at least three terms in each year, and it shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the transaction of its business and the taking of appeals to said court. And said court of appeals shall have power to prescribe what part or parts of the proceedings in the court below shall constitute the record on appeal and the form of bills of exception, and to require that the original papers shall be sent to it instead of copies thereof, and generally to regulate all matters relating to appeals whether in the court below or in said court of appeals. If any member of the court shall be absent on account of illness or other cause during the season thereof, or shall be disqualified from hearing and determining any particular cause by having been of counsel therein, or by having as justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia previously passed upon the merits thereof, or if for any reason whatever it shall be impracticable to obtain a full court of three justices, the member or members of the court who shall be present shall designate the justice or justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to temporarily fill the vacancy or vacancies so created, and the justice or justices so designated shall sit in said court of appeals and perform the duties of a member thereof while such vacancy or vacancies shall exist: Provided, That no justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall, while on the bench of said court of appeals, sit in review of any judgment, decree, or order which he shall himself have entered or made: Provided also, That if the parties to any cause shall so stipulate in writing by their attorneys and solicitors, such cause may be heard and determined by two justices of the court without calling in any of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia: And provided also, That all motions to dismiss appeals and other motions may be heard by two justices, in the event of the absence or disqualification of any one of the justices as aforesaid: And provided further, That if in any cause heard before two justices as aforesaid the court shall be divided in its opinion, then the judgment or decree of the lower court shall stand affirmed.

SEC. 3. That section 10 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the opinion of the said court of appeals in every case shall be rendered in writing, and shall be filed in such case as a part of the record thereof, and that the said court of appeals is hereby authorized to appoint a reporter, who shall serve during the pleasure of the court and without compensation, and whose duty shall be to report, edit, and publish, in form to be prescribed by the court, its opinions."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. This is a very important matter, and I think it ought to be examined a little.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the gentleman will hear my statement, he will not consider the bill objectionable.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Certainly I have no objection to the gentleman's making a statement.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to say that although this bill is a very long one, the amendments proposed to the original act are very few and simple. The bill is long because the sections have been re-enacted. The only amendments to the original act are, first, to give the court the power to appoint a deputy clerk upon the nomination of the clerk. The original act fails to allow the clerk, or the court, to appoint a deputy clerk. The result is that whenever the clerk is away, the court has to suspend, as there is no one authorized to sign papers officially for the clerk.

The original bill provided that in all cases where one of the judges was sick or absent, that a judge from the supreme court below should be designated to sit in the court of appeals above, and hear the case with the judges of the court of appeals who might be present. The second amendment provides that upon the stipulation of the parties to the record, or upon the agreement of counsel, two judges of this court may decide a case; and if there is a failure to agree on the part of the two judges, that then the judgment of the court below shall be affirmed.

Another amendment is that in all motions to dismiss appeals, interlocutory motions, etc., that any two judges of the court of appeals may hear the motion and decide it. If they fail to agree, then the action of the court below is affirmed. There is another amendment that provides——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Right on that point will the gentleman explain that a little further. You say that any motion in the court of appeals——

Mr. CULBERSON. No, not any motion on appeal, but interlocutory motions. Section 10 provided in the original act that this court shall be required to hold a term each month in the year. They have found it inconvenient to do so. The bar of this District have indorsed the bill unanimously, and in fact the bar association of this District is the author of this bill, and, as I understand, they insist that this court ought to have authority to hold its terms three times during the year instead of once in each month, and that is provided for.

Now, the only other amendment of the bill is that the opinions of the court shall be in writing, and the court shall appoint a reporter, and the reporter must serve without compensation. Surely there is no objection to that. He will have to depend upon the sale of his books for his compensation.

Now, as to the salary to be paid the deputy clerk. He is to be paid not exceeding $2,000 a year, upon the certificate of the judges, and paid out of the Treasury. The fees of the clerk's office are all turned into the Treasury of the United States, and this court is a self-sustaining court. The judicial establishment of this District is now not only self-sustaining but a contributor to the Treasury of the United States by many thousand dollars. I hope gentlemen will allow this bill to pass.

Mr. REED. Am I right in understanding from the gentleman from Texas that at present the court of appeals sit every month?

Mr. CULBERSON. They have to hold the court open every month?

Mr. REED. Why do you desire to destroy that? Does not that facilitate justice?

Mr. CULBERSON. They think not. They think that three terms of the court a year is sufficient. The bar association are unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. REED. I think the great curse of our legal practice lies in the fact that the strong are able to push cases over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think myself it would facilitate justice to have this change made.

Mr. REED. Will it facilitate speedy justice?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is what I mean.

Mr. REED. It is quite as much consequence that a case shall be disposed of speedily, as that it shall be disposed of right after a lapse of time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman in charge of this bill will remember that when this original bill passed there was a good deal of discussion as to the number of terms of this court.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And some contended that there should only be three terms of the court a year.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And I think after full discussion the conclusion was almost unanimously reached that a court sitting every month would facilitate business and promote justice; and that that was the reason why the bill was passed in the original form.

Mr. CULBERSON. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that that matter was referred to on the floor and discussed in the committee room, and it was believed then that it would facilitate speedy justice to have this court sit each month; but the experience of the court is to the contrary. Now, I want to call your attention to the language of the amendment, which is:

Provided, That said court of appeals shall establish by rule of court such terms and the number in each year as to it may seem necessary. Provided, however, That there shall be at least three terms in each year.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest——

Mr. BRETZ. That gives them the right to have more.

Mr. REED. But it does not compel them to have more; and the result will be to lessen speedy justice, which is a most important question. That seems to me to be one objection to the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas will remember that when this bill was up for consideration it was thought better to fix two or three terms, and that provision was inserted. It was discussed that, these men occupying life positions, as do these appellate judges, it would be to their interest to have as few terms of the court in one year as possible; and in order to avoid that influence, which would operate upon the judges themselves, the law required that there should be a term every month, except the months of July and August, in each year.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the fact; but experience has shown that that provision was wholly unnecessary.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would suggest one additional matter to the gentleman from Texas, and that is, that the courts of the District sit every month in the year except the month of August, and very little business is done in the month of July, and those two months are the only exceptions to the rule.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There is no appellate court held in August.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none; and the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. REED. Wait one moment. Are the Judiciary Committee unanimous on the subject of having only three terms of this court a year?

Mr. CULBERSON. Entirely so; and I will state to the gentleman from Maine that it is also favored unanimously by the members of the Bar Association of the District, composed of over two hundred lawyers, without reference to politics.

Mr. REED. Well, I have sometimes known the profession to which I belong to be willing that cases should be postponed——

Mr. CULBERSON. Not both sides.

Mr. REED. I have sometimes known lawyers to be willing to have cases postponed, and I think the great struggle of legislative bodies ought to be to force the speedy decision of cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. So do I.

Mr. REED. As it stands now, in a case of any importance every sensible man settles, simply because somebody has him by the throat and he can not get an adjudication of his rights within a reasonable time. I think there is something absurd in the way in which our courts of justice are managed in that respect, especially as to suits involving great corporations. Everybody knows to-day that a first mortgage on a railroad is simply a means of negotiation. It simply gives you material to negotiate with the gentlemen whose securities are inferior to your own; and men give up part of their rights on first mortgages and scale down their rights on second mortgages, all because our system of law administration is such that indefinite prolongation and consequent destruction of property are the usual concomitants; so that whatever is proposed as a compromise to a superior security is generally accepted. I think that is a discredit to our system of justice, and it looks to me as if we had a good system now in this District, and as if this bill was going to make it worse.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let me say to the gentleman that if the sessions of this court are held three times a year the judges will decide just as many cases as they would under the present system.

Mr. REED. I am sorry to say that I do not think that will be the effect.

Mr. CULBERSON. The whole object of requiring these courts to be held now in each month is to facilitate the filing of appeals——

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. Not to dispose of them in the court of appeals, because the judges do now all that they can do anyway, and this will give the lawyers every three months an opportunity to prepare their appeals and have them filed in the court ready to be heard whenever they can be reached.

Mr. REED. In the one case the postponement is for a month, in the other case it may be for four months, and in each case it is only a postponement. When a lawyer obtains a postponment in one case he gains four months, while in the other he gets only a month.

Mr. CULBERSON. But if his case can not be reached in less than three or four months, what is the difference?

Mr. REED. The difference is that if cases are liable to be called up every month, you will have speedier decisions. We have tried it in my own State and in my own county. We have monthly sessions of court in all but three months of the year, and the result is that we have a speedy administration of justice; and that is what I think you are abandoning by this bill. I do not know that I care to do anything more than make a protest, for I can not hope to have the House strike out that provision against the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, but I do not want to be implicated in this transaction. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, we will exculpate you. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit for immediate consideration the report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this order the House proceed to consider the contested-election case of O'Neill against Joy from Missouri; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee.

That immediately after said case is disposed of the House shall proceed to consider the contested-election case of English vs. Hilborn from California; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may then be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee. This order to continue from day to day until both cases therein mentioned are disposed of.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 161, noes 0.

Mr. REED. No quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 1, not voting 173; as follows:

Mr. FYAN with Mr. LINTON.

Mr. SICKLES with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.

On this question:

Mr. DAVEY with Mr. PICKLER.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated. [Applause.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, may a motion to recommit be now made or does it come after the debate?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make a point of order against the motion to recommit.

Mr. REED. That motion has already been permitted by the Speaker in one case.

Mr. BROWN. Perhaps under a different rule.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] recollect whether this question has been raised on a report from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. REED. My impression is that this motion was permitted in one case. I do not think it will be found in the Digest; I believe it was this session. I have no objection to permitting the discussion to go on, so that the Speaker may have an opportunity to examine the matter.

The SPEAKER. The discussion, then, will be permitted to go on, and the Chair will look into the question. The gentleman from Maine is recognized to control the fifteen minutes in opposition to the resolution, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to control the time in favor.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] will be kind enough to explain the reasons for this proposed rule.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, a brief explanation of the rule proposed by the committee is all that is necessary at this time.

The purpose of the rule is to dispose of the two contested election cases mentioned in it, in an orderly and business-like manner, so that the attention of the House may then be devoted to the public business. The rule submitted provides for a discussion of two hours upon the contested election case of O'Neill vs. Joy, from Missouri, first, and then that any substitute which may be offered to the resolution that is reported by the Committee on Elections shall be voted upon, after which the original resolution of the committee shall be before the House for final action if the substitute fail. In conversation with the member of the Committee on Elections who has this case in his special charge, we learn that the facts and the law, too, embraced in this case are such as will require no very extended discussion, and that one hour upon a side will be ample time for a full and fair presentation of both the law and the facts applicable to it.

The second branch of the rule provides that the contested election case of English vs. Hilborn, from California, shall be taken up and considered for two hours and disposed of in the same manner as the former case. That case is also one in which there is no demand for extended discussion. The testimony is brief, and the law applicable to the case does not embrace many citations.

That is all there is in this rule, and unless there shall be something said on the other side against the adoption of this rule, which is in the interest of the expedition of the public business of the House, I no not care to consume further time. I will reserve the remainder of the time to make such response as may be necessary.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is whether the rule presented by the Committee on Rules shall be adopted or not. It is a rule involving two distinct questions on which the House is to act judicially. I presume that the resolution of the Committee on Rules must meet the approval of the individual members of the House, or else they will be found voting against it. I do not wonder that the gentlemen on the other side are desirous of having these cases disposed of in a corner. I can very easily understand how they should take this opportunity to abridge discussion, and why they should desire to have the cases hustled through as speedily as possible, and in the manner they propose. The reason why we have made strenuous opposition, within the limits of the rules of the House, against the first case mentioned in the rule is because we felt it necessary to do so in order to attract the attention of the House toward what we regard as a gross outrage.

It is the custom of this body to pay but very scant attention to election cases. It is the custom of the country to pay still less attention to them, and hence means have to be taken in extraordinary cases to attract even the attention of the House. I venture to say to you that no member of this body has ever listened to cases like the two that are endeavored to be pushed through this body on the report of the Committee on Rules. There never were cases so mean, so far as they appeal to the judgment and good sense of the individual members of the House, as these.

The case of Mr. Joy is in a nutshell. I may not be absolutely correct as to my statement of the facts, but as to the fact actually and finally involved in the case I am entirely sure that I am correct. This report from the Committee on Elections proposes to unseat Mr. Joy upon the ground, not that he has not received the majority of the ballots in that district, but because the judges of election failed to put their initials on certain ballots which they received and which were deposited in the ballot boxes. I repeat, I venture to say that the like of that case was never presented to this body; that it has never divided even on political grounds on such a basis as that, and I am sure if it were anything else than an election case the proposition to dispose of it within two hours' discussion, or to dispose of it under such limitations as have been proposed here, would be flung out of the window at once.

Mr. HAYES. Would it not be better to discuss the merits of the case after this report from the Committee on Rules is adopted? That is the only question.

Mr. REED (continuing). Then, again, the case of Hilborn from California is one that is also in a nutshell. You propose to turn him out, while the actual ballots actually counted from the sealed pouch show that he was elected by a majority of 4; and in order to do it your committee charged that by the concurrence of eight election officers, six of whom were Democrats, such a fraudulent count was made as entitled you to reject the actual ballots found in that pouch, put up by these inspectors, who were two to one against Hilborn, and substitute therefor the verbal declarations, the affidavits and depositions of the voters. They call upon you to reject the best evidence of the result of the election and take the worst, and in order to complete the list they take and give absolute verity to the oaths as voters of the same men whom they charge as inspectors with assisting in the fraud.

Now, there are the two cases in a nutshell, and I do not wonder that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] seems anxious to get an opportunity to put some of his opinions and logic into the case.

Mr. HAYES. Well, he will put some facts in, and that is better than you are doing.

Mr. REED. This is the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. REED. Oh! [Laughter on the Republican side.] As I was remarking to the House when I was rudely interrupted, those are the substantial facts of the case. And in order to get it through this House you propose to discuss this case one hour on a side. Until I hear the votes counted I shall not believe it.

I reserve the remainder of my time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does any other gentleman on that side care for any discussion?

Mr. REED. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine has sustained the wisdom of this rule about as successfully as it could be done in the same length of time. He has shown that the law and the evidence in both of these cases can be put into a nutshell, and that it is not necessary to have any great length of time devoted to the discussion of the facts or the law.

Let it be understood that when one of these cases was first taken up, a few days ago, there was an effort made upon this side of the House to give gentlemen upon that side plenty of time. A proposition was submitted by which they could have three hours, if they desired it, for discussion upon that side, six hours to be given to the discussion of the case. It is not the fault of this side of the House that more time has not been allotted to the discussion of this first case.

Now, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] assumes that it is the purpose of this side of the House in passing this resolution to vote out two gentlemen who have seats upon the floor. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] should take that position, recalling the circumstances which attended the conduct of election cases in the Fifty-first Congress. We have now been in session several months, and this is the first contested-election case that this House has been asked to consider.

In the Fifty-first Congress, before two months had elapsed, and before the rules were adopted, one of the Democratic members had been voted out and a gentleman not entitled to his seat voted in, and in the month of February another one was voted out——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Counted out.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And so it ran right along in other cases, without any regard at all to the majorities behind the gentlemen that were occupying the seats here. The culmination of patriotism, fairness, and justice upon that side of the House manifested itself in disposing of two election cases in about thirty minutes.

Mr. REED. The House was unanimous that day.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is true that in the first of those cases, the case of Langston against Venable, about two hours had been occupied in debate. That is all the time that was allowed to the consideration of a case the testimony in which amounted to a large volume and in which there were many questions of alleged fraud and various questions of law. But the majority then controlling this House, after but two hours and five minutes' debate, voted upon the resolution to seat the contestant, and then immediately took up another election case, of which the election committee had given the sitting member no notice whatever, and inside of fifteen minutes from the taking up of that resolution unseated the sitting member. The record of the consideration of that case is less than a column, less than half a page of the RECORD. It is found on page 10339 of the RECORD of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress. Mr. Rowell, who was the chairman of the Committee on Elections, said:

I do not desire debate. The report of the Committee on Elections has been printed.

That is all the discussion there was in that case; even the twenty minutes given by the rule after the previous question has been ordered was not allowed at that time.

Now, the reports in both of these cases have been printed for several days. Members do not ordinarily wait until the discussion comes up before they make their investigation, or before they examine the testimony and the law in these election cases. They take the reports and look at them before making up their minds.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. I notice in the resolution offered by the Committee on Rules that there is an opportunity to vote on two propositions. There is the resolution offered by the Committee on Elections, and a substitute may be offered for that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well?

Mr. LACEY. And nothing else.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Those are the usual motions.

Mr. LACEY. Now, why limit that in the Joy case? Because I suggest that there is another question that might come up as to whether there ought not to be a new election. Why should we be limited to only two votes on this question, when there are three questions involved?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the House desires to have another election, it can, upon these two motions which are submitted, dispose of that question. It can vote down both. It can vote against the right of either to the seat, and thus leave the question open. It unseats the one and leaves the other without seating him.

Mr. LACEY. The proposition is that no intervening motion shall be made.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. None is necessary. Upon these two resolutions the vote may result as the gentleman wishes it.

I have called the attention of the House to the limited debate or discussion, which was merely a declination of debate by the chairman of the committee—under which the case of Langston and Venable was disposed of in the Fifty-first Congress. I wish gentlemen upon this side of the House to observe this fact, that by the argument of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] it clearly appears that very little time is necessary to discuss either of the two cases included in this rule. Therefore, this committee have acted upon the idea that little time will be desired by the House, and submit the rule in the hope and expectation that the House will approve it. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the concurrence of the gentleman from Ohio as to my statement of the facts in these two cases; and I hope that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES] has perceived the tenderness of the rebuke which has been administered to him by the gentleman in charge of this rule.

Mr. HAYES. I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. REED. I hope he appreciates the tenderness of the rebuke, because of his admission that the facts I have stated are correct.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman did not admit any such thing.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I did not admit that they were correct. I admitted that they were few.

Mr. REED. You admitted there were few, and from the fewness of the facts their accuracy is best judged.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It was not an admission that those were the facts.

Mr. REED. I will leave it with you and the gentleman from Iowa. You can settle it privately among yourselves.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I did not admit your statement of facts.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Iowa is a little impulsive, and allowed himself to break out unexpectedly. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement of the facts. This case was argued at great length in the Committee on Elections, and when the final vote was taken it was agreed between the majority and the minority of that committee that six hours would be devoted to its discussion; and no one at that time dreamed that the time of the House would be occupied in an endeavor to defeat the consideration of this case. When it was first called up the proposition was made to postpone it for a week or ten days, on account of the absence of Mr. BARTHOLDT. We could not consent to that, and filibustering tactics were resorted to. Then, on last Thursday or Friday, my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] submitted to me a telegram which had been sent by Mr. BARTHOLDT to Mr. Joy, stating that he would return here on Monday. I very promptly withdrew the case, giving notice that I would call it upon the following Tuesday, after Mr. BARTHOLDT'S return.

No distinct agreement was made between the minority and the majority of the committee; but we believe there was an implied understanding that this case would then be proceeded with and considered. I desire to say, if I understand the facts truly, that the minority of the committee desired to go on and consider the case on yesterday morning, and that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who now complains so grievously in regard to the brief consideration given this case, is himself alone responsible for the fact that this rule has been brought in and that the time has been limited. He consumed five hours on yesterday, the whole day's session, in trying to defeat the consideration of this case. Now, these are the plain facts as understood by the Committee on Elections. So far as the merits of the case are concerned, I will present them later on.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee, I desire to say that it seems apparent that he wishes to intimate to the House that this shortening of debate is in the nature of punishment for having availed ourselves of the privileges which the rules allow and which the Speaker sanctions. I must say I am amazed that any gentleman should take that ground. The rules of this House permit everything that has been done, and the propriety of punishing the House itself for action which is permitted under the rules is very novel.

The gentleman from Tennessee has confessed that his committee, upon an examination of this matter, free from opposition, and free from the disposition to punish anybody, had determined that three hours on a side should be granted to one of the cases; and now, for the purpose of punishing us for the exercise of rights which the rules of this House guarantee to us, he deprives the House of four hours of information—for I presume, as a matter of course, that whenever the Committee on Elections speak they will occupy the time in a valuable way. So that the gentleman from Tennessee has confessed to this House that six hours had been determined as necessary to present this case, and the Committee on Rules have restricted us to two hours.

How much was necessary in the other case we have not the same means of knowing. That was precisely what I got up to prove to this House, and having proved it, I can not believe until I hear the votes announced, that the House will permit itself to take such an unsuitable course of action.

Now, so far as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has alluded to election cases in the Fifty-first Congress, I am flattered to have those cases cited as authority by the gentleman from Ohio, who participated in them somewhat at the time, but did not then give that distinct approval which he is inclined to give now. [Laughter.] But of course, with the lapse of time comes wisdom, and I only want to add to his highly gratifying statement that in the last case where no discussion was given the House was absolutely unanimous, although I think there was an attempt by one gentleman who was cursorily and providentially present, to obstruct action.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that no quorum was present and no quorum voted at that time.

Mr. REED. Well, the point was not made.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, the point was made, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], then presiding, overruled the point and said there was a quorum present. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. The Democratic party ought always to laugh prematurely, because that is its only chance. It will never get any other opportunity. When you come to examine the RECORD, gentlemen, you will find that there was a quorum present, and that no such action was taken as the gentleman states.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The RECORD shows that this action took place:

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolutions, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. O'FERRALL. A division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 156.
Mr. O'FERRALL. No quorum, Mr. Speaker, is either voting or present.
A MEMBER. One more in the affirmative.
The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 157, 1 no, and 9 not voting. So the resolutions are adopted.

Mr. REED. Precisely. That is, there was not a voting quorum, but there was a present quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman said a while ago that the action was unanimous, and I have called his attention to the facts. He said there were 9 not voting, but it was his custom when in the chair to name those present and not voting, and the 9 in this case are not named. [Renewed laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. All this is perfectly simple. It was not the custom to announce the names of members not voting except on a yea-and-nay vote, and this was not a yea-and-nay vote. Consequently, when the gentleman from Ohio says that in not naming members not voting upon that occasion the custom was violated, he makes a mistake——

A MEMBER. Oh!

Mr. REED (continuing). He makes a mistake which he will hasten to correct. The gentleman from Georgia who says "Oh, no" was not here at that time, and it is sometimes surprising that he ever got here. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REED. I suggested to the Chair that I would move a recommittal. Has the Speaker examined the matter?

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. REED. A motion to recommit with instructions. The Speaker will recollect that it was withheld simply to enable the Chair to tell me whether it was in order or not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion to recommit with instructions to so modify the resolution that an additional vote may be had in the Joy case on the question of ordering a new election, if the House shall determine that the facts require one, and with instructions to allow a suitable time for discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine as to whether the motion is in order. The Chair has been unable to find any authority for it.

Mr. REED. If I were to argue it upon general principles, I should say that the rules of the House permitted such a motion.

The SPEAKER. Rule XI provides that—

It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules, and pending the consideration thereof the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of.

Mr. REED. Well, I will argue the question, if the Chair please. The Chair must take the ground either that ordinary motions are permissible or that they are not permissible. If the Chair takes the ground that they are not permissible, of course he must account for allowing the previous question to be put to the House, because the previous question is a motion just as much as a motion to recommit.

And if a motion for the previous question is allowable, a motion to recommit must be allowable upon the same ground and for the same reason. First, the motion to recommit is a motion known to general parliamentary law—one of the rights of the House; and, second, it is a motion that is well known to our rules; and being known both to general parliamentary law and to the rules, the House has a right to try that mode of modification. For example, if the previous question had not been ordered, would the Chair undertake to say that we could not amend the resolution of the Committee on Rules? Most assuredly not. What is an amendment? An amendment is a motion, just like the motion for the previous question, just like a motion to recommit. They are all motions. The Chair certainly can not take the ground that no motion can be permitted pending this report; otherwise the Committee on Rules would be able to launch upon the House any proposition, and the House would be obliged to receive it or reject it, without any right of modification.

I must say that a rule with such an interpretation as that would give to the Committee on Rules a power which no Speaker at any time would ever dream of exercising in the presence of the House. Has not the House an inherent right to modify any proposition? Has it not a right to modify it in any way it pleases—among other methods by a recommittal? The rules of the House so provide; and I venture to say to the Chair with considerable certainty that I recollect a case this very session where a motion to recommit was permitted.

The SPEAKER. Upon a report of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. REED. That is my very strong impression.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if that were true, it would control the question: but the Chair does not recollect any such decision, and has not been able to ascertain that there was any.

Mr. REED. Of course, I am quite well aware that my memory may deceive me about it; but I think that motion was permitted.

Mr. TRACEY. Was not the motion to recommit in that case upon the passage of the bill after it had been brought before the House upon a report of the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. That case may have arisen, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY], upon the consideration of a measure brought before the House on a report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. Possibly that may be the explanation.

Mr. TRACEY. A motion to recommit the resolutions to the Committee on Elections would, I judge, be in order at the end of the debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine his idea about this matter. In the first place the motion to recommit——

Mr. REED. Will the Chair, before he begins, allow me one more suggestion which I do not want to forget? This can not be regarded as a "dilatory motion."

The SPEAKER. In the first place, ordinarily, under all parliamentary rules with which the Chair has any acquaintance except the system under which we are now operating, a motion to recommit is not in order after the previous question is demanded or ordered. A motion to recommit is simply another method of permitting the House to amend, and under ordinary rules the right of amendment is cut off by the previous question. The House has, however, a provision in its rules that even pending the demand for the previous question or after it is ordered a motion to recommit may be in order.

Now, the purpose of the rule as disclosed by the language which has been read was that on reports from the Committee on Rules the House should have the right without delay and without motions tending to delay, to dispose of such a report. The language is similar to that used in reference to motions to suspend the rules: and the Chair is aware that there may be some embarrassment at times because of the distinction between a report from the Committee on Rules and a motion to suspend the rules. But take the case now before the House. The Chair has no doubt that it is within the power of the House to amend a report from the Committee on Rules. The Chair has never entertained any doubt about that. If the House should vote down the demand for the previous question, then this report could be amended.

The idea that the Chair has always had in enforcing this new rule was so to construe it as to permit the House to vote without delay upon the final proposition either as reported by the committee or as agreed upon by the House if the House should choose to amend it.

Now, the House has ordered the previous question. What does the previous question mean? It means that the House shall proceed to vote upon the proposition on which it is ordered. If a motion to recommit is in order, perhaps a motion to lay on the table might be in order; and the effect of both these motions, whatever the motive of the mover might be, would be to delay the House in reaching a final vote on the proposition before it, and on which the House has expressed a desire for a final vote by ordering the previous question. The Chair has always held, in construing the rule, that any motion which would tend to prevent the House from a speedy vote upon the final proposition is not in order.

The Chair holds that on a report from the Committee on Rules, when the previous question has been ordered, it is not in order to move to recommit to the committee. The Chair thus holds the more willingly because the matter is entirely in the power of the House. If the House desires to amend or alter in any respect a report of this character, it need only vote down the demand for the previous question, and then the whole field of amendment is open; the report can be altered in any way to suit the wishes of the House.

In other words, the Chair accepts the ordering of the previous question as an expression of the desire of the majority of the House to vote upon the resolution as it stood when the previous question was called upon it. Therefore, the Chair holds that the motion to recommit is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 109, noes none.

Mr. REED. No quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 7, not voting 173; as follows:

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask a recapitulation of the vote, Mr. Speaker.

The vote was recapitulated, after which the announcement of the result was made as above recorded.

CONTESTED ELECTION, O'NEILL VS. JOY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the resolutions submitted by the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was not elected a member of the House of Representatives to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That John J. O Neill was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to the seat.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent at this time to offer the following as a substitute on behalf of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions submitted by the minority of the committee as a substitute for those just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of the State of Missouri, and that he is entitled to retain his seat in this House.

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was not legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] to control the hour in support of the report of the Committee on Elections, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] in opposition.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, this case involves the application of a familiar principle of law to an admitted state of facts. It comes up from the Eleventh Congressional district of the State of Missouri. That district is wholly within the corporate limits of the city of St. Louis. The contestee claims that he was elected, and the returns show that he was, by a majority of 67 votes.

For the past few years there is scarcely a State in the Union that has not been legislating with a view to ballot reform. The State of Missouri is no exception to this rule. The great influx of foreign population into this country, the conferring of the ballot upon the colored race in the Southern States, and other causes combined, we all know have produced during the last quarter of a century very grave errors, frauds, and irregularities in elections. There is a tendency throughout the United States, confined to no particular section of the Union, there is a strong tendency, in the direction of ballot reform. The State of Missouri has passed a good many statutes looking to the purity of the ballot in the cities of that State. At last she has evolved a system which in my humble judgment is as free from criticism as any system devised by any other State in the Union.

I will, in a few moments, explain the operation of this law. In cities of over 5,000 population the governor of the State appoints a recorder of voters. This recorder of voters has his office at the county seat and there registers the voters of the municipality. He can register the voters on any day or at any time of the year. Where a citizen changes his ward or precinct he simply goes to the recorder of voters and has his registration changed. Then prior to any general election the recorder appoints registrars whose duty it is to register the voters who have not theretofore been registered.

The day previous to the election the recorder proceeds to make out an alphabetical list of all the registered voters in each of the precincts within the municipality, and that registry list is forwarded to the officers holding the election and is there on the morning of the election. So it is that every man who is entiled to vote at any precinct has his name on the alphabetical list.

Now, in order to prevent fraud the law requires that there shall be six judges. The first two are called distributing judges; the next two are called receiving judges; they receive the ballots; the first two distribute them; and the last two are called the counting judges.

Three of these judges belong to one political party and three to another. When a citizen desires to vote he goes to the distributing judges, and these distributing judges having the list of registered voters before them can see from that alphabetical list whether or not he is entitled to a ballot. If he is entitled to a ballot they are required by the law to write their names or initials in ink or in indelible pencil on the back of the ballot. That makes it an official ballot. The ballot is handed to the voter. He goes into the booth at the polling place and there prepares his ballot. He then folds it so that the signature of the judges shall appear on the outside of the ballot. He then goes to the receiving judges who receive the ballot, and casts the ballot with the initials or names of the distributing judges plainly written on the ballot, so that they can see that it is an official one. When that ballot is received the law requires that it shall be numbered in the order in which the voter cast it and when this is done the number of that ballot is written opposite the name of the voter on the registry list with the word "voted," and the ballot goes into the box.

Now, that is the duty of the receiving judges. The counting judges have two ballot boxes. They deliver to the receiving judges one of the ballot boxes, locked and empty. That is used by the receiving judges for one hour, and then that ballot box is delivered over to the counting judges, and the other ballot box is delivered to the receiving judges, and the counting judges proceed to count the ballots in the first box, and the receiving judges proceed to deposit ballots in the second box. By that process the ballots are practically all counted when the polls are closed.

Now, this is the very simple but rather elaborate system that has been instituted in the cities of the State of Missouri. You can at once see that if these laws were not mandatory they would be practically useless upon the statute books. The officers who would be elected by means of fraud would often be interested in protecting the perpetrators of the frauds, and therefore it is absolutely essential, in order to require that this law shall be enforced and that the purity of elections shall be secured, that these provisions shall be mandatory, and that the validity of the ballot shall depend upon a compliance with the law.

Mr. COX. How are those judges selected?

Mr. PATTERSON. They are appointed, one-half from one political party and one-half from the other.

Mr. COX. Who appoints them?

Mr. PATTERSON. The county court, as I am informed.

Now that is the mode in which the elections are conducted. You can see that if this law is enforced, it is almost an impossibility for fraud to be committed. It is impossible that there should be a false registration. It is impossible to have anything else but pure elections, practically, if this law is enforced. Why? Because these ballots are required to be kept for twelve months, locked up in a box, in possession of the recorder of voters, and should a contest be instituted within the twelve months they are subject to be offered in evidence. Should no contest be instituted within twelve months, then the ballots are destroyed.

Now, in the event that a contest is instituted and these ballot boxes are opened, there is the registration or poll list. There are all the ballots. There are the initials of the judges. There are the numbers of the ballots; and the numbering and the initialing absolutely trace each ballot to the voter, and you can tell whether he was a false voter or not, whether he voted a duplicate ballot or not, and you can do it with absolute and unerring certainty.

Now, in order to enforce this law the State of Missouri has declared that every voter shall not vote elsewhere than in the election precinct where he is registered, and whereof he is registered and a resident. He must vote in that precinct.

Now, in section 4785, Revised Statutes, 1889, as amended by section 11 of the act of April 4, 1891, it is expressly provided that—

Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear.

In section 1005, Revised Statutes, 1889, it is provided that—

No ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted.

In section 4671, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60, it is further enacted—

Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and void.

Section 4780, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60, as amended by section 8 of the act of April 4, 1891, reads as follows:

On any day of election of public officers in any election district, each qualified elector shall be entitled to receive from the judges of election one ballot. It shall be the duty of such judges of election to deliver such ballot to the elector. Before delivering any ballot to the elector the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil, and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot except the number of the ballot.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. We have only one hour, and I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. I desire to say that my distinguished friend, Judge DANIELS, of New York, very ingeniously argues that section 1005 has been repealed by the act of 1891. I deny that. I say that section 1005 is in full force. But I shall not take the time to go into a discussion of that question, because it only involves two or three votes, and no matter how the question may go. Mr. O'Neill is elected, provided it is necessary that the ballots should be initialed.

Now, that brings us down to the discussion of this plain statute:

Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear.

Now, my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. REED] said that this case was in a nutshell. It is in a nutshell. If this statute which I have read is a mandatory statute, if it means what it says, then under the law Mr. O'Neill is entitled to this seat, and my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. DANIEL] does not deny the proposition.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. The gentleman can ask it in his own time. I can not yield.

Mr. LACEY. We will give unanimous consent to extend the time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can not yield for an interruption.

That is the nutshell, so far as the law of this case is concerned, because, so far as numbering is concerned, there are only, I believe, two or three votes involved. That is to say, Joy received 43 ballots where there was no number on tickets that was initialed, and O'Neill received 45, making a difference of only two votes; and O'Neill, if the initialing as required by law is enforced, was elected by 210 votes. Now, that is the case, and I will state the simple proposition, Mr. Speaker, that I stand by and represent to-day. I stand here representing this idea, that the State of Missouri has the right to manage her own affairs. She has the righs to enact her own election laws; she has the right to impose conditions upon the exercise of the suffrage; she has the right to enact a mandatory law, and if she requires this initialing to be done before the ballot shall go into the ballot box, it is the business of Missouri and not the business of the American Congress. That is the doctrine, and that is the important principle involved in this case, and it is all of it.

Now, I know that my friend from Maine this morning spoke of the hardship of enforcing a technicality. Is it any hardship upon a citizen to say that when he goes to the distributing judges that he shall see that they comply with the law by writing their initials or signatures on the ballot? Why the law prescribes that when the voter folds his ballot he shall fold it so that the initials shall appear on the outside of the ballot. The law requires him to look at the initials. The law requires him to see that it is an official ballot; and before he goes to the receiving judges that he shall fold that ballot so that the initials shall appear on the outside, and shall be plainly in view of the receiving judges; and then the law says that these receiving judges shall not deposit the ballots in the ballot box unless the initials or signatures are there. What is the meaning of that law? If you do not have the initials of the receiving judges on the ballot the voters can counter eit ballots. They can use any other ballot. This is the official ballot. The law contemplates enforcing the principle that a voter shall use an official ballot. If he mutilates the official ballot he can go and secure another ballot by making an affidavit.

But the ballot is not an official ballot until the signatures or initials of the judges are written upon it. This is the plain provision of a Missouri statute. It is a mandatory statute. There is not a lawyer on the floor of this House who can controvert that proposition—that the State of Missouri says that the ballot shall not go into the box unless it is initialed, or has the signatures of the judges upon it. It is a mandatory statute in the very strongest language that can be used.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been asked a question. I have not discussed the question of numbering the ballots, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to the fact that numbering is not necessarily involved in this case. There are only two ballots depending upon it: all the remainder are dependent upon the initialing; and if there is any trouble in the mind of the gentleman on that score, I say to him he should dismiss it. I am basing the case clearly upon the question that the ballots were not initialed. Now, mark you, the initialing by one judge will not do.

Mr. BOATNER. Right there, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PATTERSON. We have only an hour. I do wish my friend would allow me to proceed.

Mr. BOATNER. I only wish to ask a question for information.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then ask your question.

Mr. BOATNER. I want to know whether the deficiency——

Mr. PATTERSON. One hour is all we have.

Mr. BOATNER. I want to ask if the question of deficiency, for which you have thrown out these ballots, was a thing that the voter had any control over?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. Is it the fault of the voter or the fault of the commissioner of elections?

Mr. PATTERSON. The law requires him to go to these distributing judges and get his ballot. The law requires that these judges shall write their initials or signatures upon the ballot before they hand it to him. The law requires him, when he goes into the booth and makes up his ballot, to so fold it that the initialing of it shall be upon the outside of the ballot, plainly open to the view of these receiving judges; and that unless he folds the ballot so that the initialing and numbering is plainly in view the judges will not receive and put it in the ballot box.

Mr. BOATNER. How is it accounted for, then, that the commissioners did receive them?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know about that. I am not here accounting for a violation of the law. I am simply insisting on the enforcement of a plain mandatory statute of the State of Missouri. Now my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] this morning undertook to discuss this question, and said that the case rested on a pure technicality.

Mr. REED. I did not qualify it in that way; I did not say it was a "pure."

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine, who is not a member of the Elections Committee, made the broad statement that this was an effort upon the part of the majority of this House to oust the sitting member upon a mere technicality. I desire to say that I prepared this report and, so far as I am concerned, I want the case to be decided upon the question whether or not the American Congress will enforce a plain mandatory statute of a sovereign State. It is an important question, involving an important principle, and I desire to see it enforced in this case.

The report calls attention only very briefly to the facts, resting the case of the contestant upon statute. But, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Maine has seen proper to assail the action of the majority of the committee upon the ground that this is an effort, by a mere technical device, to oust the sitting member from his seat, I propose to devote a few moments to the facts in this case. I do so in order to show the operation of the wise law which has been enacted by the State of Missouri. For instance, it is insisted by the contestant and by the majority of the committee that there were 50 votes counted for Mr. Joy that were found in the boxes, where the pretended voters were registered from vacant lots or fictitious streets, or did not reside at the places from which they were registered. Again, it is contended by the contestant, and if necessary would be insisted upon by the majority of the committee, that there were 250 ballots for Joy given and cast by only 125 voters. That is to say, there were 125 duplicates without deducting the few duplicates that had been cast for the contestant.

Again, we insist, and if it were necessary the majority of the committee would insist, that there were 42 voters whose votes were counted for Joy who swear that they voted for O'Neill. Of those 42 voters, 17 cast duplicate ballots. Again, 29 voters swear that they voted for O Neill, their names are on the poll list marked "voted," but their ballots were not found in the boxes. Again, 5 voters for Joy voted on lapsed registration papers. Under the laws of Missouri, when a man takes out his first papers he can vote for five years, but if he does not take out his second papers within the five years he can not vote afterwards. Five votes were cast for Joy upon lapsed naturalization papers.

Again, in precinct 94 the judges found 7 ballots for Joy and 1 for O Neill when no names appeared on the poll books to represent them. Again, Joy contends that 211 citizens deposited their ballots with the United States supervisor, not having registered, but claiming that they were entitled to vote. There were 211 ballots filed there for Joy, but there were 243 similar ballots filed for O Neill. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, upon the facts of the case, if it were necessary to go into them, I contend that we could demonstrate that Mr. O'Neill is entitled to this seat, and the law which I have discussed has been the instrumentality by which these facts have been disclosed. But in writing the report the majority of the committee chose to rest the case, not upon a discussion of the facts, but upon this plain mandatory statute of the State of Missouri. Shall we enforce the statute according to its meaning? That is the principle involved here, and we desire to see the principle vindicated and enforced in this case.

How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted for the presentation of the questions involved in this controversy very little attention can be paid to details, and were this simply a controversy between these two gentlemen, Mr. O'Neill upon the one side and Mr. Joy upon the other, I should not attempt to consume any part of the period which is allowed for discussion in this case. But behind these gentlemen are 30,000 voters of the Eleventh Congressional district of the State of Missouri, who come before this House asking that the fair majority of the votes as they were cast and received in the election in November, 1892, shall be maintained.

There is no question here upon the evidence but that these voters were honest legal voters of that election district, with the exception of perhaps thirty persons who had been fraudulently registered and who voted fraudulently, but it will not be contended that the number of such fraudulent votes was sufficient in any possible view to justify the rejection of the return that was made by the board of judges, most of whom were Democrats, in favor of the seating of Mr. Joy. We have, then, before the House 30,000 voters who appear behind these gentlemen, who are constructively here, to ask that their legal rights under the laws of the State of Missouri shall be protected and maintained, and the members of this House have been appointed under the Constitution of the United States the judges of that question, to look at the election and the evidence that pertains to the votes that were cast, from a judicial point of view, leaving out of consideration entirely the political complexion of either one of these contestants.

It is contended here by the report of the majority of the Committee on Elections, and also by what has been said by my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON], that these votes should be rejected to such an extent as to extinguish the majority that was returned in favor of Mr. Joy and give the seat to Mr. O'Neill. This is not to be done by excluding illegal votes from those that were included in the returns, but it is to be done by means of two technical objections that are raised to the regularity of this election, upon which technicalities the honest legal voters of the Eleventh Congressional district of the State of Missouri are to be deprived of their chosen representative here.

Now these objections are in the first place that the votes were not numbered in the order in which they were received. And that is true as to the ninety-eighth precinct of this Congressional district. And of those votes, according to the report of the majority of this committee, Mr. Joy has received 25 over and above those given to Mr. O'Neill. So that, according to this calculation, 25 votes are to be taken from Mr. Joy's majority because these votes in this precinct were not numbered.

Another precinct, No. 95, was objected to on the same ground; and by the way these are the only objections raised in the notice of contest. But it appears by the evidence in this case that every vote given in the ninety-fifth precinct was numbered; the number is upon it; and it does not appear that that number is not the number of the vote in the order in which it was received.

It was insisted on behalf of the contestant that it was the registration number that was placed on these ballots; but that is not proved as a matter of fact by the evidence; and even if it were so the registration number is just as good an identification of the vote and of the voter, as it was polled in that precinct as a numbering in the order in which it was received, strictly in accordance with the statute.

Mr. BOATNER. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. DANIELS. Not at all.

Mr. BOATNER. I see that one provision of the statute of Missouri declares that "no ballot not numbered as so provided shall be counted." Is there any provision of the statute which declares that no ballot not initialed shall be counted?

Mr. DANIELS. There is not. There is no provision in the law as it now exists in the State of Missouri, or as it existed in 1892, requiring that ballots not numbered shall not be counted, or that the ballots shall be rejected because the initials of the judges are not placed upon them. That, as to the failure to number, was the provision of the old law under which elections were carried on for a series of years up to 1889. But at that time a new law went into effect, which was calculated to supersede the old law—a new law by which the Australian ballot was introduced; and this form of ballot was to be supplied by the public authorities of the election district, and was so supplied in this instance.

In addition to the contention that the ballots were not numbered, and therefore should be rejected, the objection is also made that the ballots did not bear the initials of two of the judges of elections. The law of 1889 provided for the appointment of two additional judges who were to be judges of the election and who were required to indorse their initials on every ballot before the ballot was delivered to the voter. In this instance they failed to comply fully with this direction: but the ballot was indorsed in all instances by one of the judges of the election. In the ninety-eighth precinct, already referred to, the ballots were indorsed in this manner by Mr. Laborge, one of the Democratic judges of the election precinct, it being supposed that was sufficient, and it was supposed also by the majority of the judges of election in this precinct that it was not necessary to number the ballots. That was made a matter of discussion among them at the time; and it was not settled until they had received about 191 votes, at which time they commenced the numbering of the ballots, which was followed from that time forward.

It is upon these two objections that the ground is taken in the majority report, and also in the argument which is made here, that Mr. Joy's election should be overthrown and Mr. O'Neill should be seated in his place. In order to sustain this ground it has been found to be necessary to go back to the old law which existed prior to the enactment of the present statute, and which is plainly inapplicable to the election which was held on this occasion. It was for the purpose of changing the entire system of voting at elections in the city of St. Louis that this law was first passed. It was made to include all elections held in cities of the State having a population of 5,000 and upwards, and therefore it necessarily includes the city of St. Louis. But in 1891, before this election was held, an amendatory act was passed, extending the provisions of the new system to the entire State; and at the time when this election was held that was the general law of the State of Missouri.

Now, the question is whether you can go back to the law as it previously existed and as the majority of the committee has done for the purpose of finding an objection which will oust Mr. Joy from the seat and give it to another person who was not returned as having a majority, and who in point of fact did not have a majority of the votes of that district.

Mr. PAYNTER. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. DANIELS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. PAYNTER. If the old law declaring these ballots illegal when not numbered is now in force, is not that statute mandatory, and is it not our duty to exclude such ballots from the count?

Mr. DANIELS. I say so. I do not controvert that proposition.

Mr. PAYNTER. You agree that the statute is mandatory, if it is applicable to this election.

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, if the statute is applicable.

Mr. BROWN. And the same is true with respect to the initialed ballots?

Mr. DANIELS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BROWN. So that the question between us is whether these old laws have been repealed by implication or not?

Mr. DANIELS. Whether they apply to this election.

Now, upon this question I would like to read an extract which I have made from the case of Fox vs. The Commonwealth of Virginia, reported in 16 Grattan, as to the effect of changing a system that has existed and been carried out relative to any matter of government in the State.

It is there said that—

> Even if the subsequent statute be not repugnant in all its provisions to a prior one, yet if the latter statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule that should govern in the case provided for, it repeals the "original act." So on the same principle a statute is impliedly repealed by a subsequent one revising the whole subject-matter of the first. And in the case of a statute revising the common law the implication is equally strong.

And that is the case in this election; and that it was intended to have that effect, I desire to call the attention of the House to the title of the act as it was passed in 1889. It is declared to be "An act to provide for the printing and distributing of ballots at elections for public officers at public expense, and to regulate elections for public officers"—including necessarily the election of the member of Congress in this district.

Now, the preceding law relating to the numbering of the ballots uses these words: "The ballot shall be taken and numbered in the order he [the voter] offers to vote, etc., and one of the judges shall indorse the registration number on the back of the ballot, which is to be over the number of the ballot itself," while under the present law it is provided only that the ballot when it is presented shall be numbered in the order in which it is received, this statute using precisely the language of the constitution of the State of Missouri, and was intended plainly to conform the present law to the requirements of the constitution instead of going back to the old law, which did not do that, but required the ballot to be numbered in the order in which the voter proposed to vote, which presents a manifest difference in the language; and there is no reason why the Legislature should have provided in this law of 1889 and 1891 for the change in this language, if it was still proposed to go back to the law of 1883 to determine the rights of a voter to have the vote counted where there had been an omission to number it.

The law of 1883 required also that the registered number should be placed on the back of the ballot, while the law of 1889 and 1891 provided that no other writing should be placed on the ballot than simply the number of the ballot and the initials of the two judges.

This clearly excluded the requirement that the registration number should be indorsed on the ballot, and restricted the indorsement to the number of the ballot in the order in which it should be received. The law of 1883 declaring that the unnumbered ballot should not be counted was also expressly confined to the ballot voted under the old law. That is evident from its language, which is "that no ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted." A clear distinction has in this manner been made between the ballots. The ballot not to be counted when not numbered was the old ballot, for that is the only ballot to which the preceding law was applied. And it was to take the place of that enactment that the acts of 1889 and 1891 were made to require but one number, and that is the number of the ballot in the order in which it shall be received.

That is the statute on which this requirement to number stands, and on which the House is asked to reject this vote given in this precinct 98, and being the precinct in which Mr. Joy received a majority of 67 votes. Now, as to that particular feature, the present law does not provide as the preceding statute did, that the ballot shall not be counted when it has not been numbered. And it has not been forbidden to be placed in the box when it has not been numbered. But without the initials of the two judges it has been declared that it shall not be deposited in the box unless the initials of the judges are on the back of it. This duty is devolved on the officers of the election, not upon the voter; and there is no disability, no forfeiture imposed on the voter himself, or on his ballot, because the officer does not discharge the duty which the law imposes upon him in the matter, but deposits the ballot in the box with only one initial upon it, which was the fact as to all these disputed votes.

The general rule requires such a ballot to be counted notwithstanding the irregularity. For "an irregularity in conducting an election, which does not deprive a legal voter of his vote, or admit a disqualified voter to vote, or cast uncertainty on the result, and has not been occasioned by the party seeking to derive a benefit from it, should be overlooked in a trial for an office depending on such election." (Paine on Elections, section 502.)

It is to the officers alone that the law has made use of this language. These two judges of election are the persons who are to indorse their initials upon the ballots; and if a ballot is not so indorsed, the receiving judges have been directed not to place it in the ballot box. The duty is placed exclusively upon them, and for their delinquency the voter has not been deprived of his vote.

Now, in all the cases where the ballot has been rejected for a failure to comply with requirements of this character, the law has expressly declared either that the ballot shall be void, or that the vote shall not be counted. Now, in order to relieve the case from this principle, and to forfeit the votes having the initials of but one of the judges upon them, the majority of the committee have gone back again to another old statute of the State; and I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to the provisions of that statute.

It is claimed on the part of the minority of the committee that this statute has no possible application to the case that is now before the House. The members of the House will see that the language of this old statute applies to the case of the ballot supplied alone by the voter himself and to the contents of that ballot, while the votes at this election, and under the present law of the State of Missouri, are to be supplied by the public authorities; and the ballot is to contain not only the ticket that the voter designs to vote, but the ticket of each one of the other parties that may have made nominations of candidates to be supported at that election. Now, this statute provides as follows, and this is the old law which clearly is not applicable to this controversy:

SEC. 4671. Ballots shall contain what.—Each voter at any election shall, in full view, deliver to one of the judges of election a single ballot, which shall be a piece of white paper, on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons voted for, with a designation of the office which he or they may be intended to fill. Said ballot shall not bear upon it any device whatever, nor shall there be any writing or printing thereon, except the names of persons and the designations of the office to be filled, leaving a margin on either side of the printed matter for substituting names. Each ballot may bear a plain written or printed caption thereon, expressing its political character, but on all such ballots the caption or headlines shall not, in any manner, be designed to mislead the voter as to the name or names thereunder. Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted. (Revised Statutes, 1879, section 5493.)

the name of every candidate whose nomination for any office specified in the ballot has been certified or filed according to the provisions of this article, and no other names. The names of candidates nominated by each party shall be grouped together upon the proper ballot, and each group be headed by the name of the political party by which the candidates composing said groups are placed in nomination. Every ballot shall also contain the name of the party or principle which the candidates represent, as contained in the certificates of nomination.

Now, that ballot can not be voted under the old law. The old law declares that there shall be no writing or printing on the ballot except the ticket with its caption that the voter is intending to vote, while here, under the new law, the authorities are required to print every ticket representing every kind of nomination, Democratic, Republican, People's candidate, Prohibition, or whatever it may be, all together upon the face of the ticket. That ticket contains consequently printing which, under the preceding law, would render it actually impossible that it should be received or placed in the ballot box, because that law declared that no ballot having any other writing or printing upon it than merely the caption and ticket of the persons voting, should be placed in the ballot box.

Then it declares that any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter, which is the old law relating to elections in St. Louis, shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted, and it is under that provision that it is claimed on behalf of the majority of this committee that these votes not bearing the initials of the two judges of election shall be rejected.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is that the old law?

Mr. DANIELS. That is the old law.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Does the present law, which you admit to be in force, contain a provision that no ballot shall be deposited in the box without the initials and the numbers?

Mr. DANIELS. There is no such provision in this law at all.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. What is the provision of the present law?

Mr. DANIELS. The provision of the present law is this:

Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges, as hereinbefore provided for, does not appear. (Amended Laws, 1891, p. 135.)

That is the law which first required the initials of the judges of election to be indorsed upon the ballot. There was no such requirement in the old law, and certainly the old law could not nullify the ballot for the want of these initials.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Is that the present law?

Mr. DANIELS. That is the present law.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. It mentions only the initialing, and not the numbering.

Mr. DANIELS. That applies to the initialing and not to the numbering. The declaration in the present law is simply that the judge of election shall not deposit in the ballot box a ballot which does not contain these two initials. And that is the extent of the prohibition. Now, the law as it has been construed by the courts of Missouri——

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that that injunction is simply directed to the judge of election.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I was simply getting at the facts.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If the voter were supplied with a ballot which did not contain the initials, what would he do? Would he go back and have the initials supplied?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, he could.

Mr. MAGNER. Does the gentleman contend that without a specific direction in the law, the omission on the part of the election officers to do their duty would in no case invalidate the ballot?

Mr. DANIELS. I do, unless the law has gone further and declared that the vote shall be void without it, or else that the vote shall not be counted.

Mr. MAGNER. Is not the gentleman familiar with the Onondaga cases, and the decision of the court of appeals, in which they held directly this way?

Mr. DANIELS. The gentleman is mistaken as to the effect of that decision. That decision, and all the decisions upon the subject are fully referred to in this case of Bowers against Smith, in 111 Missouri, page 46 to 61, in which this language is used——

Mr. MAGNER. If the gentleman will examine the Onondaga cases, he will see that there was an omission to comply with the law, even a willful omission by the election officials themselves, in which the voters had no part; and in that case the court of appeals held that, notwithstanding the willful act of transferring the ballots, it was incumbent upon the voter to show that he did not carry it out for himself.

Mr. DANIELS. Because the law provided that a vote not numbered according to the law was not a legal vote. That was the decision.

Mr. MAGNER. That is the provision of this law.

Mr. DANIELS. There is no such provision in this law.

Mr. MAGNER. That it shall be initialed?

Mr. DANIELS. That it shall be numbered and initialed, and that it shall then be voted. There is only one instance under that part of the law.

Mr. HAYES. Then I understand the other side claims that there is no such provision.

Mr. DANIELS. That is in the old law. The present law provides for one ballot, and then it declares:

Ballots other than those printed by the respective clerks of the county courts, according to the provisions of this article, shall not be cast or counted in any election.

If these ballots were not in form, according to the language of this statute, they could not be voted or counted; but there is no evidence that these ballots were not made in the form prescribed by this law. The law did not require the ticket to be initialed in order to make it regular.

Mr. MAGNER. The question included the initialing of the ballot, and the neglect to put in the correct number of the district in the Onondaga cases.

Mr. DANIELS. Which the Legislature declared should invalidate the ticket.

Mr. MAGNER. The Legislature did not.

Mr. DANIELS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. MAGNER. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DANIELS. That was the ground upon which the court of appeals decided.

Mr. DUNPHY. Will the gentleman allow me to read what the court of appeals said in that case?

Mr. DANIELS. The gentleman will please defer that. The supreme court of the State of Missouri have held this to be the law in the case to which I have already referred. The language of that court is:

If the law itself declares a specified irregularity to be fatal, the courts will follow that command irrespective of their views of the importance of the requirement.

In the absence of such declaration the judiciary endeavor, as best they may, to discern whether the deviation from the prescribed forms of law had, or had not, so vital an influence on the proceeding as to probably prevent a free and full expression of the popular will. If it had, the irregularity is held to vitiate the entire returns, otherwise it is considered immaterial.

And that is the situation under which this election was held. There was not a dishonest vote polled in one any of these precincts, unless it was in one of the precincts where it was claimed there was improper registration, and where all the forms of the law were observed.

But it will not do for me to consume the time of gentlemen who are behind me; and, therefore, I shall leave this subject in the hands of the members of the House, asking them only to consider these various provisions of the statutes and say whether it was not the intention of the Legislature when they passed the law of 1889 and 1891 to break away from this old system, so far as the form of the vote and the manner of voting were concerned, and to provide an entirely new system, which was in conformity with the language of the Constitution of the State of Missouri, which was adopted after this law was enacted, declaring that the vote should not be counted unless the registration and the number of the vote were indorsed upon it, that constitution being adopted in August, 1875, and these laws being enacted in March, 1875.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. Speaker, this contest involves the construction of the statutes of Missouri under which the election was held. Congress has left to the States, where it properly belongs, to furnish the necessary legislation relating to the conduct of elections. During this Congress all Federal election statutes have been repealed. Under the statutes of Missouri, until 1891, there were statutes relating to the conduct of elections in the cities of a certain class and statutes for the regulation of elections in the balance of the State. In 1883 the Legislature passed an act the title of which was, "An act to provide for the registration of all voters in cities having a population of more than 100,000 inhabitants, and to govern elections in such cities," etc.

A part of that act is section 1005 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri. It is as follows:

Section 1005, Revised Statutes 1889, provides:

The recorder of voters shall provide two ballot boxes for each election precinct, one of which shall be numbered No. 1, and the other No. 2, and it shall be the duty of the judges of election to select from their number two who shall be designated and known as "receiving judges," and two who shall be designated and known as "counting judges." The two receiving judges shall receive the ballots of each elector, and shall, upon receipt thereof, pronounce in an audible voice the name of the voter, and if the judges shall be satisfied that the person offering to vote is a legal voter, his ballot shall be taken and numbered in the order he offers to vote, and the ballot shall be folded, and one of the judges shall place the registration number on the back of the ballot, and then draw a horizontal line under it, and shall place the number of the ballot in the order in which it was voted, thus: $\frac{1}{1}$; said numbers shall be announced in a plain and audible voice by the judges, loud enough to be heard by the bystanders outside the polling place, and the ballot shall then be deposited in the ballot box, which shall be securely closed for the period of one hour after the opening of the polls.

The clerks of the election shall enter the voting number of the ballot, and the word voted, or rejected, as the case may be, opposite the voter's name on the registration lists furnished to them. At the expiration of such hour the receiving judges shall deliver said ballot box No. 1 to the counting judges, who shall immediately deliver over to the receiving judges ballot box No. 2, which shall, thereupon, be securely closed, in which all ballots received, until the ballots in ballot box No. 1 are counted, shall be deposited; and after the counting judges have counted the ballots in ballot box No. 1, they shall deliver the box to the receiving judges, and the counting judges shall count the ballots in ballot box No. 2, and so on alternating whenever the counting judges complete the count of the ballots in any box until all the ballots cast are counted.

All ballots shall be taken out and counted in the presence of all the judges and clerks, and party representatives, in the manner provided by law, and it shall be the duty of the counting judges to announce to the electors present the total number of votes polled at the close of each hour, but no information or statement of any kind shall be given or made by the judges or clerks of election revealing the number of votes received by any candidate at such election, or the name of any person who has not voted, or any information tending to show the state of the polls: Provided, That each political party shall have the right to select one representative to be present with the judges of election from the opening to the closing of the polls, who may challenge any person offering to vote, but shall not interfere with the judges or clerks in the discharge of their duties. Said representatives shall make oath before the judges of election that they will not directly or indirectly give any information showing the state of the polls: Provided further, That no ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted, and that the judges shall, in the presence of the electors, examine the ballot boxes at the opening of the polls, and before any ballots are received, to see that they are empty; and at the close of the polls the judges shall continue to count until all the ballots are counted without removing from the polling place.

This section makes provision for furnishing ballot boxes for the various precincts.

It designates the character of the judges of election by naming two of the four judges provided by law as "receiving judges" and two as "counting judges."

A clause is in the section regulating the reception of the ballots and the numbering thereof, and directs how the ballots shall be counted.

It is further declared that "no ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted."

Section 1010, Revised Statutes of Missouri, being part of the act of 1883, declares in substance that all elections in said cities shall be conducted in all respects as provided in this article, subject to all provisions of the Revised Statutes entitled "Elections," so far as the same do not conflict with this article.

Section 4747, Revised Statutes, in substance says that except as otherwise provided by law all provisions of this chapter (which is 60) shall be applicable to the city of St. Louis, the same as the counties.

This chapter, 60, is the one entitled "Elections," referred to in sections 1010 and 4747.

Section 4671 is part of chapter 60, which is as follows:

Each voter at any election, shall in full view, deliver to one of the judges of election a single ballot, which shall be a piece of white paper, on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons voted for, with a designation of the office which he or they may be intended to fill. Said ballot shall not bear upon it any device whatever, nor shall there be any writing or printing thereon, except the names of persons and the designations of the office to be filled, leaving a margin on either side of the printed matter for substituting names. Each ballot may bear a plain written or printed caption thereon, expressing its political character, but on all such ballots the caption or head lines shall not in any manner be designed to mislead the voter as to the name or names thereunder. Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted.

There is a distinct clause in this section, as follows:

Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent, and the same shall not be counted.

It is readily seen that the terms of section 4747 make the language just quoted apply to the city of St. Louis, as there is nothing in the act of 1883 and the preceding acts relating to elections in St. Louis which are in conflict with the foregoing provision.

We assume, then, that at the time of the passage of what is known as the Australian ballot law the provision declaring ballots fraudulent and shall not be counted was in force and applicable to the city of St. Louis, because, as stated, it is not in conflict with any preceding statutes relating to St. Louis nor section 1005, which only provides the penalty of exclusion from the count of any ballot not numbered, while this provision excludes the ballot from the count for any substantial variance from the provisions of this chapter—not article or section, but chapter.

Before proceeding to discuss the effect of the acts of 1889 and 1891, I call your attention to sections 4672 and 4673 of article 1, chapter 60, Revised Statutes, which apply to the State of Missouri outside of St. Louis.

Section 4672 among other things provides for the numbering of the ballots the same as section 1005, and declares that "no ballot not so numbered shall be counted."

Section 4673 is substantially the same as section 1005.

One was intended to apply to the city of St. Louis and the other to the balance of the State, each system requiring four judges of election.

Thus the law stood in 1889 when the Australian ballot law was passed.

This act is article 3, chapter 60, Revised Statutes, being thus incorporated by the thirty-fifth General Assembly of Missouri: This act is an amendment to the then existing laws in the State of Missouri relating to elections. It provides for an official ballot together with numerous details unnecessary to mention. It was made applicable to cities and towns of 5,000 inhabitants and over.

It repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with it.

It is not, nor does it purport to create a complete system of laws for the conduct of elections in Missouri. It makes changes in the laws in some respects, and additions thereto.

The act of 1891 has the following title, to wit:

An act to amend article 3, chapter 60, Revised Statutes of 1889 of the State of Missouri, entitled, "Elections in cities and towns of 5,000 inhabitants and over, and extending the Australian system of voting to all voting precincts in the State."

Section 1 is as follows:

SECTION 1. That sections Nos. 4762, 4766, 4773, 4775, 4776, 4779, 4780, 4781, 4784, 4785, 4792, 4794, of article 3 of chapter 60 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri be, and the same are hereby repealed, and the following sections substituted therefor.

Then there is a general repealing clause of all inconsistent acts, and it is made to apply to all election precincts in the State.

I will consider briefly the effect of the acts of 1889 and 1891 on the laws then in force in Missouri in relation to elections so far as this case is affected thereby.

By the terms of this law the State furnished the elector with a ballot instead of the elector furnishing it himself. The effect of this was to repeal so much of the law then in force as allowed the elector to furnish it.

Section 1004, Revised Statutes, provided for four judges of election. This was amended by the Australian ballot law by providing in section 4777 for appointment of two additional judges of election "at the same time and in the same manner as judges of election are appointed or elected," etc., thus recognizing as still in force the provision of the law in relation to the appointment of judges of elections, thus evincing a purpose to retain in force parts of sections of the existing laws.

Section 1005, I have said designates two of the judges of election as "receiving judges" and two as "counting judges." Section 4777 is amendatory of section 1005 in providing that "the judges of election shall designate two of their number * * * to have charge of the ballots."

Thus you see that part of section 1005 relating to receiving and counting judges is still in force. That part of section 1005 is repealed which required one of the judges to place the registration number on the back of the ballot, because there is a repugnant provision in section 4780, which requires the two judges having charge of the ballots to write their names or initials on the back of the ballots with ink or indelible pencil, "and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot, except the number of the ballot."

There is a declaration in section 4785 that "every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it is received." This is simply cumulative, as section 1005 has substantially the same provision, but neither this nor any other section in acts of 1889 and 1891 states who shall do the numbering, nor do they state who shall make the corresponding number on the poll or registration list.

Section 1005 provides that one of the judges shall enter the number on the ballot, and that the clerk shall enter the voting number on the registration list.

Section 1005 contains the only provision relating to the count of the ballots cast at an election in St. Louis.

Thus the purpose of the legislation is evidenced to retain parts of sections which are not repugnant to the subsequent statute.

Part of section 4671 has been repealed, not in terms, but by implication, the same as parts of section 1005. That part of it has been repealed which describes the ballot that shall be used.

That part of the section which declares "Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted," has not been repealed.

Neither the acts of 1889 or 1891 in terms refer to it, nor is there a word or clause in these acts repugnant thereto. The act of 1891, as heretofore stated, enumerates the sections which it repeals, and section 4671 is not one of them.

The tendency of the legislation in Missouri has been not to relax mandatory provisions of the election laws, but to make them more stringent in their operation, that the purity of the ballot might be preserved.

If the acts of 1889-1891 had provided that the voting should be viva voce and not by ballot, then section 4671 would have been repealed, as there would not have been any ballots used at an election, and no condition could have arisen under which to enforce the clause against "fraudulent ballots."

The acts of 1889 and 1891 are still providing for the use of the ballot with a different method from that theretofore in use for furnishing it, which acts, being amendatory of chapter 60, did not intend to repeal that part of the chapter which declared that "any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent, and the same shall not be counted."

The acts of 1889 and 1891 are amendments to the then existing law of Missouri relating to elections.

It follows that every section and every part of a section of the Missouri statutes relating to elections remain in force except such as are repealed in terms or by implication.

It is not contended that this part of section 4671 is by the terms of the acts repealed, but by implication.

This part not being repugnant to any part or parts of the acts of 1889 and 1891 remains in force.

Repeals by implication are not favored.

In Wood vs. The United States, 16 Peters, 362, Justice Story, speaking for the court upon a question of the repeal of the statute by implication, said:

That it has not been expressly nor by direct terms repealed is admitted, and the question resolves itself into the more narrow inquiry, whether it has been repealed by necessary implication. We say by necessary implication, for it is not sufficient to establish that subsequent laws cover some or even all of the cases provided for by it, for they may be merely affirmative or cumulative, or auxiliary. But there must be a positive repugnance between the provisions of the new law and those of the old law, and even then the old law is repealed by implication only pro tanto to the extent of the repugnancy.

In the State vs. Stoll, 17 Wallace, 431, the language of the court was that—

It must appear that the latter provision is certainly and clearly in hostility to the former. If by any reasonable construction the two statutes can stand together, they must so stand. If harmony is impossible, and only in that event, the former law is repealed in part or wholly as the case may be.

The same doctrine is laid down in Daviess vs. Fairbairn, 3 Howard, 646. The same rule is recognized in Chew Heong vs. United States, 112 U. S., 536: Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S., 556.

In Ex parte Yerger, 8 Wall., 105, it is said:

Repeals by implication are not favored. They are seldom admitted except on the grounds of repugnancy; and never, we think, when the former act can stand together with the new act.

My friend from New York, Judge DANIELS, contends that the statute which declares ballots not numbered shall be excluded from the count is repealed. He also contends that that part which declares ballots not conforming to chapter 60 are fraudulent and shall not be counted is likewise repealed. He cites the case of Fox's Administrator vs. The Commonwealth, 16 Grattan, 1–11, in which the court said:

Where it is manifest that the law is intended to embrace and include the whole legislation on the subject to which it refers, provisions of the former laws on the subject not embraced in it are repealed by implication.

He also cites the case of Tracy vs. Tuffly, 134 U. S., in which the court said:

While repeals of statutes by implication are not favored by the courts, it is settled, without express words of repeal, a previous statute will be held to be modified by subsequent ones if the latter was plainly intended to cover the whole subject embraced by both, and to prescribe the rules in respect to that subject which are to govern.

Before applying the rule laid down in these cases we would have to conclude that the acts by the terms of which these provisions were repealed were intended to and did embrace the entire subject regulating elections in Missouri. The act does not do this.

Article 1, chapter 60, provides for the election of State officers, the election of Congressmen, the establishment and designation of precincts, defining of election districts, the method of furnishing poll books, the administration of the oath to officers of election, the opening and closing of the polls. It defines the qualification of the voters. It provides for the appointment of the judges of election, states their qualifications and the method of ascertaining and announcing the result of the election. It defines the duties of the clerks of the county courts. It has a provision in relation to the certification and transmission of election returns. It imposes penalties of certain kinds upon certain officers, confers jurisdiction upon the circuit and county courts in contested-election cases; and many other things too numerous to mention, which are not even referred to in the acts of 1889 and 1891.

SEC. 4780. * * * Before delivering any ballot to the elector the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil. * * *

SEC. 4785. * * * No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear.

It might be argued with a good deal of reason that this section is mandatory without reference to any other part of the statute. It must be admitted that if the receiving judges deposit a ballot which does not contain the names or initials of the ballot judges, the ballot voted does not conform to the provision of chapter 60. If my contention is correct that the clause is not repealed which declares ballots not conforming to the forms of that chapter are fraudulent and shall not be counted, then such ballots should be excluded from the count, as I will hereafter show.

Mr. Speaker, it is conceded in the views of the minority that if certain votes in certain precincts are excluded under the operation of the statute which has been referred to here, then Mr. O Neill, and not Mr. Joy, is entitled to this seat. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] has admitted, in response to my question, that if the statute which declares that every ballot which does not conform to "the provisions of this chapter" is fraudulent and shall not be counted, is not repealed, then these ballots should be excluded. I think I have shown the statute by the terms of which it is claimed that these ballots should be excluded is still in force.

Except in these sections of the old law you find no method provided for counting a ballot in the State of Missouri, because the Australian ballot law, to which the gentleman has invited attention, does not provide a method of counting the ballots. It does, however, recognize the existing statute as to judges, and it amends that statute by providing that, instead of four judges as under the former law, there shall be an additional one, thus showing that the Legislature recognized as still in force that provision of the statute which was in existence at the time of the passage of the Australian ballot law.

The act expressly refers to the sections that it undertakes to repeal, and therefore it is clear that those sections alone are repealed. But even if that were not so, this would only repeal that part of the law which was in conflict with the provisions of the subsequent section. There is no conflict. The laws are in perfect harmony. Examine the law as amended and you will find that nowhere in it is there employed any language showing a purpose to repeal the penalty clauses of the old statute. There is a penalty denounced for failure to number the ballots, to wit, they shall not be counted: there is a penalty denounced against using any ballot not printed by the county clerk, to wit, they shall not be counted; there is a penalty denounced against placing in the box any ballot not conforming to the statute, which covers a case of failure to properly initial ballots.

The Legislature made an effort to provide for every contingency that might arise, with the view of making effective its purpose to preserve the purity of the ballot. The ballots when folded by the elector are required to display the names or initials of these judges. At precinct 98 the ballots were not properly initialed or numbered; 198 ballots were cast before any of them were numbered, and the only initial placed upon them was that of one judge—not the judge required by law, but a receiving judge. Therefore, in those cases there was a violation of the statute in two particulars.

Mr. PENCE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNTER. I do not believe I have time. Even as it is I have to hurry through so that I fear I can hardly make myself understood.

At precinct 98 Joy's majority was 75. At precinct 61 Joy's majority was 271. But 5 ballots were properly initialed, 3 for Joy and 2 for O'Neill. At precinct 39 there were 16 ballots for Joy improperly initialed. If my contention is correct this would take from Joy 361 votes, the effect of which is to make O'Neill entitled to the seat instead of Joy; Joy's certified majority being only 67.

THE STATUTE IS MANDATORY—NOT DIRECTORY.

It has been the uniform opinion of the House that the regulation of the matter of voting should be left to the State exclusively. The Committee on Elections have uniformly followed the decisions of the courts of the State wherein the election was held; and it has followed the interpretation of the law as given by the highest court of that State. The statute in relation to the numbering ballots has been passed upon by the supreme court of Missouri more than once.

A contest arose growing out of an election for county clerk; some ballots cast for the successful candidate were not numbered. It was conceded there was no fraud, but the failure to number the ballots resulted from the inadvertence of the inspectors. It also appeared that the number of ballots counted corresponded with the number of votes appearing on the poll list. The question involved the interpretation of the statute, and in passing upon the question in West vs. Ross (53 Missouri, 350) the court held the unnumbered ballots should not be counted, and said:

> This case may be a hard case, and doubtless it is, but the legislative enactment is clear, and although it may deprive a portion of the citizens of the county of their right to be heard in the election of a clerk at one election, it is better that they should suffer this temporary privation than that the court should habituate themselves to disregard or ignore the plain law of the land in order to provide for hard cases.
> In the present case the Legislature has provided and required that the ballots should be numbered, and then provides in express terms that no ballots not numbered shall be counted. Can we say that such ballots shall be counted without an attempt at judicial legislation? I think not, and it would be a misapplication of terms to say that such a statute is only directory.

In Ledbetter vs. Hall (62 Missouri Rep., 422), the court says:

> By the terms of section 15 of the chapter already under discussion, it is made the duty of the judges to cause to be placed on each ballot the number corresponding with the number of the voter offering the same; and no ballot not numbered shall be counted. All other grounds of contest were abandoned at the trial, except that the judges of election in Miller Township failed to do their duty in the particular just adverted to. The evidence adduced established this neglect of duty.
> The statutory prohibition must be enforced.

In this case the whole vote of a township was excluded.

In Gumm vs. Hubbard (97 Missouri Rep., 311), Judge Black, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

> The statute (section 5493) furnishes an absolute rule of evidence. It makes the ballot fraudulent without regard to intent when it has thereon any writing or printing except that specified.

In the case of Bowers vs. Smith (111 Missouri, 45) it is said:

> If the law itself declares a specified irregularity to be fatal, the courts will follow that command irrespective of their views of the importance of the requirement. (Ledbetter vs. Hall, 62 Missouri, 422.) In the absence of such declaration, the judiciary endeavor as best they may to discern whether the deviation from the prescribed forms of law had or had not so vital an influence on the proceedings as probably prevented a free and full expression of the popular will. If it had, the irregularity is held to vitiate the entire returns otherwise it is considered immaterial.

The law of New York requires the clerk of the court to have the ballots printed, and among other things the number of the precinct must be printed on the ballot.

In distributing the ballots the clerk had those for precinct No. 1 placed at No. 2 and those for No. 2 placed at No. 1. They were voted in that way.

In Nichols vs. Board of Canvassers (129 New York), the question was as to the right of counting these ballots which did not comply with the requirements of the law. The court said:

> The Legislature has forbidden the electors to cast such a ballot.
> It has prohibited the inspectors from placing it in the box and the canvassers from counting it. The case could be no stronger had it in terms declared such a ballot absolutely void for all purposes, but it is said that this result will disfranchise the electors who cast these ballots in good faith, believing that they were the proper official ballots. The answer is that when an elector attempts to express his will at an election by the use, through either design or accident, of ballots which the law declares shall not be counted, the courts have no power to help him.
> The law contemplates that the electors will not thereby rely upon anyone, not even the election officers, in the preparation of the ballot. If he is handed an official ballot with a distinguishing mark upon it or an improper indorsement he is not obliged to vote it, but may procure a proper ballot.
> In this case it can not be said that the electors were obliged to use these ballots or omit to vote at all.

While Chief Justice Ruger concurred in the opinion in the case of Nichols vs. Board of Canvassers, he gave his views, and, among other things, said:

> It imperatively requires that every ballot cast (with an unimportant exception) shall be of the same shape, size, and color, and have the same indorsement. The purpose of the act seems to require that these provisions should be held to be mandatory, and that a disregard of them upon any pretense whatever should constitute a violation of the law and cause a forfeiture of any benefits sought to be derived from such illegal ballots.

The Connecticut statute requires that a ballot shall have the names of the candidates, the officer voted for, and the name of the political party issuing the ballot.

The statute also provided that all ballots cast in violation of the statute, or which do not conform to the requirements of the statute, should "not be counted."

In Talcott vs. Philbrick (59 Conn., 477) the question was raised as to the counting of certain ballots which were issued by the Republican party with the word "citizen" on the ballot.

The court held the ballots should not be counted.

Among other things the court said:

> We are relieved of any obligation to inquire as to the necessity or reason of this or that requirement, and we are not at liberty to dispense with anything that is required, whether the reason for it may be—or even if without any apparent reason at all.
> The Legislature has spoken, and obedience is our first and only duty. It is at liberty to throw around the ballot box such safeguard and regulations as it may deem proper, and it is the duty of the citizens to conform thereto. Some inconvenience is not too great a price to pay for an honest, pure ballot.

There was a dissenting opinion in this case, but the judge who delivered it gave an expression of opinion that is so forcible and pertinent to this case that we here quote it, as follows:

> And when the Legislature has in clear and explicit words said that a ballot shall be void for any cause the courts must so declare, even though the cause seems to them unreasonable.

In California there is a statute which provides, substantially, that if the ballots are voted not of the kind that are required by law then they are to be rejected.

The court held when the ballots were not of the size required by the statute they should be rejected. (Reynolds vs. Snow, 67 Cal., 497.)

The Legislature intended that there should be no fraudulent ballots cast at elections in that State; that no ballot box should be stuffed. If there was a contested election and a question should arise as to the legality of a vote, by turning to the registration list his name and voting number can be found. By looking in the ballot box the ballot can be found, because if the law has been complied with there is a number on it corresponding to the one at his name on the poll or registration list. If the judges have complied with the law their names or initials are on the ballot in ink or indelible pencil. Fraudulent ballots can not be substituted unless the "ballot judges" the "receiving judges," and the clerk of the election are parties to the transaction. Then it would require the ballot judges to write their names or initials on the substituted ballot. In fact it is almost impossible to perpetrate a fraud by substituting ballots.

The Legislature regarded the writing of the names or initials by the judges so important, it required the voter to so fold his ballot that it should be seen when the ballot was placed in the box. These are wholesome provisions of the law. If they are not, an argument against them should be addressed to the lawmaking power in Missouri.

To give the seat to Mr. Joy, the law of Missouri must be nullified. We in effect say to the Legislature of Missouri, "You can not pass any law which seeks to preserve the purity of the ballot that we will respect or obey."

It seems to me in these days of ballot reform this body should show its respect for and obedience to a law which the Constitution of the United States—which we swore to obey—authorized the State of Missouri to enact. This body has attempted to enact no law to regulate the conduct of election of Representatives in Congress. The right to enact such laws is conceded to belong to the States.

It indeed comes with bad grace from this body to refuse to follow the law enacted by the States in relation to the election of its members. While we are made the judge of the election and qualification of members, yet in the exercise of this authority we must follow the laws which were intended to enable the people of the several States to enjoy their constitutional right of representation in this body.

To disregard them a chaotic condition must follow.

Mr. DANIELS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in rising to discuss this question, I do so neither as a lawyer (for I am no lawyer) nor as a Republican, because, in my judgment, election cases are not questions of party, but questions of right, such as appeal to the noblest instincts of justice and the highest sense of honor on the part of those called upon to decide them.

But as a Representative from St. Louis, that great and good city in which both the contestant and the contestee reside, I desire to make a few statements of fact, which the people of my city want this House and the country to understand before a vote is taken on the report of the Committee on Elections.

The proposition of the majority of the committee is, I notice, to unseat my colleague, Mr. Joy, a Republican, and to give his seat to the contestant, Mr. O'Neill, a Democrat. Those signing the majority report, it should be remembered, are all Democrats, but I shall draw no conclusions from this fact until the House has heard my statements.

Missouri has 15 Representatives on this floor, 13 Democrats and 2 Republicans, as the result of a gerrymander on the part of the Democratic Legislature such as has never been attempted in any State or by any party. To fully comprehend the scope of this political wrong, it suffices to say that the present Democratic executive head of the State is a minority governor by nearly 5,000 votes, although the vote of the third party amounted to only one-twelfth of the total vote cast. In other words, while the Republican vote is 83 per cent of the Democratic vote, our political arithmeticians on the other side have graciously condescended to let us have 15 per cent of their representation. Instead of 7 Republican Representatives, to which we are entitled according to our party strength, we have but two; and not satisfied with that, the majority of the Elections Committee now come and propose to relieve us even of one-half of that representation.

To unseat my colleague [Mr. Joy] will be a gross injustice, as I shall endeavor to show later on, and by unseating him unjustly you serve notice on the people of Missouri that the abuse of power by the dominant party there, as exemplified by the gerrymander, is to be sanctioned and continued by the same party here, and in supplementing the gerrymander by a political guillotine, the Democracy proclaims the maxim of the middle ages "might for right" as a new political principle in State and nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let me mention another fact before going into the merits of the case. The election machinery of Missouri is entirely in the hands of the Democratic party. And reverting to St. Louis, in which the Eleventh Congressional district is wholly situated, her half a million inhabitants, because of their Republican predilections, are denied the right of home rule by the Democratic governor stepping in and appointing for them a recorder of voters, who autocratically manages each and every election. Like himself, all his subordinates are Democrats, and he not only appoints all judges and clerks of election, but also locates at will all polling places. What latitude for political advantage this affords to the Democratic managers I leave to the imagination of the political minds of this House to determine.

An old citizen of St. Louis expressed it in this way some years ago: "The Republicans will have to elect their ticket by 6,000 majority in order to be credited with 2,000." With the very best intentions the recorder is unable to prevent the corrupt elements of his party from committing frauds under this system, such as were unearthed this spring, for instance, when in one case the tally sheets were forged by a corrupt election official, so as to give the office of president of the board of assessors to the Democrat, while the Republican candidate was clearly elected and since declared so by the courts after the fraud had been detected.

However, it is not the recorder, but the system which we attack, and which ought to be changed so as to allow us to manage our own elections without the interference of the State or to provide for a nonpartisan election board, such as exists in Brooklyn and other large cities. I shall not go into a history of recent election frauds in St. Louis; but, as a matter of fact, I may be permitted to state that all persons recently convicted of such crimes were Democrats, and all the contests for local offices instituted in the last ten years upon the allegation of frauds had to be instituted by Republican candidates against Democrats.

The Congressional elections of 1892 were held under the very system I have just described. A canvassing board, consisting of two Democrats and one Republican, returned Mr. Charles F. Joy elected by 67 majority. A Democratic recorder of voters certified his election to a Democratic secretary of state, and this official issued the certificate of election to the gentleman now occupying the seat. Then the contestant, Mr. John J. O'Neill, gave notice of a contest; an official recount was had, and the result of this recount was, mind you, not a wiping out of the contestee's official majority, but an increase of it from 67 to 212 votes and a corresponding loss to the contestant. In view of this important fact it is certainly very significant, to say the least, that the majority report is absolutely silent on the recount, while in the light of this statement, upon the other hand, it will appear less surprising that contestant should be so much inclined, as I understand he is, to deny the fact of the recount altogether.

It ought also to be stated in this connection that during the progress of the recount both parties agreed as to the salient points in doubt, and that the votes were counted or not counted, as the case may be, in accordance with such agreements, so that the outcome of the recount, i. e., the increased majority for Mr. Joy, was actually the result of the operation of rules and principles laid down and mutually agreed upon by conestant and contestee during its progress. To show precisely the form of such agreements, I ask the clerk to read the following lines from page 56 of the record.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am willing to take the intention of the voter right through.

Again, on page 70:

Mr. O'NEILL. It is agreed and announced that where the intention of the voter is apparent, that vote will be counted for the person for whom he intended to vote. It applies all through the entire ballots.

And again, on page 755:

Mr. O'NEILL. * * * wherever a ballot appears described in the record before the adoption of the rule, shall be now counted as if the rule had been adopted at first, if there are any such. Mr. Killoran's ballot is counted upon the unders anding that ballots described prior to the adoption of the rule between the contestant and the contestee shall be coun ed as they would have been counted had the rule been adopted at first—that is, at the beginning. This agreement shall go to all tickets described in the record.

These declarations of the contestant, Mr. Speaker, are most important, not only because they show how the count proceeded upon mutual concessions and agreements, but also because of their bearing upon the vital point of this controversy, which is whether certain ballots, alleged to be deficient in legal form, should be counted or not. There is no other way to unseat my colleague than to throw these ballots out, and consequently the majority of the committee decide that they shall be thrown out, thus practically proposing to disfranchise the voters of whole precincts.

The majority proceed upon the theory that the election laws of Missouri forbid the counting of ballots which are defectively numbered or initiated. It is true that our old election law contained such a provision, but it applied to a system under which the voter brought his own ballot with him, while under the present Australian system, which superseded the old one, all ballots are furnished by the State and under the absolute control of its officers. It is undoubtedly due to this very material difference that the old provision which declared unnumbered and deficiently initialed ballots void was not revived and incorporated in the new system. While it was a proper safeguard under the old law, it was practically superfluous under the new, and eminent jurists hold that it is not now in force.

But aside from that it is justly claimed that it could not have been the intention of the lawmakers to disfranchise any voter because of the neglect or inefficiency of any election official. Election laws are never framed for the purpose of preventing an honest expression of the voice of the people or of depriving any honest voter of his franchise, but they are framed for the sole purpose of preventing fraud and corruption. In this case no fraud is charged by the committee, and therefore I say these ballots should be counted on the side of the contestant as well as of the contestee. There is no doubt about the intention of the voters in these cases, consequently the votes should count, or in the language of the contestant himself: "Where the intention of the voter is apparent, that vote will be counted for the person for whom he intended to vote."

But these points, and how the majority of the committee propose to unseat my colleague from St. Louis upon a mere technicality, are more fully elaborated in the minority report, which I recommend to the closest scrutiny of the House. A few words more about the possible implication by which the majority might attempt to justify their findings, namely, that the ballots in question might have been fraudulently cast. In answer to that I say that one essential element for the commission of fraud was lacking on the Republican side, and that is the motive. The district was considered Democratic by about 2,000 majority, and consequently no great exertions were made to carry it.

My colleague, Mr. JOY, was nominated against his will; he declined the nomination, even after it was made; but being declared the nominee, in spite of his declination, was compelled to make the race. He did not himself believe in the probability of success, and therefore declined all offers of assistance. His expenditures of time and money and energy were perhaps smaller than ever incurred by anybody and in any struggle for so honorable a position as a seat in this House, because, as I intimated before, the feeling was general among Republicans that the contestant, Mr. O'Neill, would be re-elected.

The fact is, we had no idea of the extent of the disaffection in Democratic ranks, and the contestant himself seems to have been ignorant of the true state of affairs, or he would not have left his district in the midst of the campaign to make speeches elsewhere. Now then, under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, was it at all likely that anybody should hope, from the casting of a few hundred fraudulent ballots, for a change of the result which was considered a foregone conclusion? Is it not more natural to assume that the absence of hope and money deterred the bad elements, if there are any in the Republican party—which is a question of very serious doubt—from the employment of their corrupt methods? Is it at all probable that anybody should run the risk of breaking the law in favor of a candidate who would not even himself use all the honorable and legitimate means at his command to achieve success? These questions answer themselves; they also answer most forcibly, I think, all possible insinuations of fraud in favor of the contestee, and this being the case, remove the last prop from under the platform so artfully constructed by the eight lawyers composing the majority of the Election Committee.

Nowhere in their report, Mr. Speaker, do the majority of the committee deny that the contestee, Mr. Joy, has received more votes than the contestant, Mr. O'Neill; by their own arithmetic they admit that he has. Now, should not this be conclusive according to our American idea of majority rule? I tell you, gentlemen, it is conclusive with the people of St. Louis, who have watched this contest with an interest unusual even in such important cases. They had made up their minds when the recount was completed, and no amount of legal quibbling will now change their opinion that Charles F. Joy was fairly elected to the seat he now occupies.

I go so far as to repeat on this floor the assertion a prominent St. Louis Democrat made here a few weeks ago, that "if the Democrats of the Eleventh Congressional district were the judges of the right of possession in this case instead of the majority on this floor, they would render a verdict for Joy by a large majority." They would do that in the interest of justice and the future of their party. They know that the best way to help a man and his cause is to make a martyr of him. As Democrats, they fear the answer of the people of St. Louis and Missouri to the wrong of ousting a member of this House who was elected by an honest majority of votes. As good citizens they would rather see their party do right and go down than to do wrong and be successful. They would rather see you sacrifice the doubtful advantage of an additional member than to profit by ill-gotten gains. They appeal to you to maintain your honest majority of 95 rather than to increase it to 97 by an act which you can not defend at the next elections.

And right in line with this, let me read here what another very prominent Democrat from our city said here only a few weeks ago: "It is foolish," said he, emphasizing the "foolish" by an additional word, "to get a vote we do not deserve when we do not need it and thereby give to the other side a vote at a time when we need it badly," again with the emphasis on the word between "it" and "badly." The Democracy of the gentleman who uttered these words has never been doubted; he evidently thinks of the future and refers to the next Congress and its political complexion.

Gentlemen on the other side may remind us of what they call similar sins committed by Republican majorities here; but let me say in answer to that that a majority of nearly 100 can, it strikes me, much rather afford to be generous than a majority of 3, and that if my party has sinned it has paid dearly for it. But we do not even expect you to be generous; all we ask is justice. We point to the fact that in the very precincts whose vote you throw out the contestant ran ahead of President Cleveland and the contestee behind President Harrison, and we ask you how you can possibly reconcile the recommendations of the majority report with the fact that both Mr. Harrison and Mr. Warner, the Republican candidates for President and governor, carried this same district, where the contestee justly enjoys an extraordinary popularity and where hundreds and hundreds of Democrats who stood by their Presidential and State tickets declared for and actually voted for him? You simply can not make the people believe that under the circumstances of the case he should have failed where others succeeded.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I beg to submit that personalities should have as little to do with a case like this as party politics. It is well known that my personal relations are as friendly to the contestant as to the contestee, but that is not the question. It is immaterial to me, and, I believe, to the House, too, who occupies a seat upon this floor, whether Mr. Joy or Mr. O'Neill. I even go further and say that if I were to consult party advantage, the martyrdom of Mr. Joy is worth to us thousands and thousands of votes not only in St. Louis, but in the whole State of Missouri, and will result this fall not only in his re-election without an effort, but in that of three or four more Republicans from Missouri. So we will gain more than what we lose, and you will lose more than what you gain; but this, too, is irrelevant now.

The only question before us is, who has received the majority of honest votes, and in determining this question we exercise the highest constitutional functions of the lawmaker. We sit in judgment over one of our peers, and we owe it to him, to ourselves, to the dignity of our position, we owe it to the people and our own consciences, that our votes should be cast irrespective of personal feelings or party considerations, and with a sole view to doing justice and right. Remember that honesty is the best policy; remember, also, that that party is not worthy to live which would exact from any of its adherents the obligation to vote against the dictates of his conscience; and do not mistake the temper of the American people, whose sense of right and justice always has been, and I hope always will be, stronger than their party fealty. It is neither a political nor a legal question that confronts us, but a question of fact, and woe to him who in deciding it occupies the bench of partisanship instead of the high and lofty platform of a just, independent, and honorable man! [Applause.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENSON].

Mr. DANIELS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I have begged five minutes from the other side of the House, as I can not conscientiously vote for the majority report, and I ask unanimous consent that I may have ten minutes more, if I need the time.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the time be granted.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I wish to justify myself before my party for the vote which I shall cast unless I receive further light hereafter from the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OUTHWAITE). The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object. There are any number of men here begging to be heard.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Inasmuch as I expect to cast a vote against the prevailing views of the party to which I belong, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection to five or ten minutes more than the five minutes I am already allowed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will consent to ten minutes to be added to each side.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right.

Mr. REED. Why not extend the time an hour? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the time be extended for ten minutes on each side. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULICK. Is it understood that that time is given to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN]?

Mr. SPRINGER. Ten minutes of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN] is extended ten minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the minority report, and concede that section 1005 of the statutes of Missouri is now in force. That law provides that no ballot shall be counted which is not numbered; and the supreme court of Missouri, in West vs. Ross, 53 Missouri Reports, has decided that inasmuch as the law itself declares that the ballot should not be counted, the count would hold this provision of the statute mandatory. But as my learned friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON], says, there are but a few votes which are affected by this decision, and these votes will not change the result. Therefore I pass that question, except that I ask the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] to that case which decides substantially, by implication, that if the statute itself had not said in so many words that the votes should not be counted, then it would have been proper to count them, and not disfranchise the voters.

I am asked now to vote to disfranchise 937 of the citizens of Missouri; the question involved rises above any consideration to be extended to the parties to this contest. These citizens put in their ballots in good faith and honestly. There is no suspicion even of fraud. If this can be done, point the statutes or law of the State which will authorize it.

I ask my friend if I am not correct when I say that he bases his right to reject votes upon which there is only found the initials of one of the judges of election on the provision of the statute found in section 4671. It is said in the case in 111 Missouri that when the Australian ballot was adopted it was adopted only for cities of over 5,000 inhabitants, and that it was not until 1891 that the Legislature regarded it as a sufficiently successful experiment to extend it throughout the State.

Prior to 1891 there was a law providing for the method of voting in the country precincts and a different law providing for the method of voting in cities of over 5,000 inhabitants. The ballot that was to be cast in the country precincts is controlled by section 4671. As respects this ballot the statute, among other things, provides:

> Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted.

This ballot was furnished by the voter himself, and the object of this statute was to guard against any device or writing put upon the ballot by the voter himself, whereby the ballot might be distinguished. Now, the provision with reference to voting in cities under the Australian ballot system is careful to omit this provision because the ballot is furnished by the proper authorities and at public expense.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOATNER. Do you contend that this provision of section 4671 which reads:

> Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent, and the same shall not be counted—

does not apply to the election in the city of St Louis?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly, I do. The ballot provided for the cities is mentioned in section 4680.

> On any day of election of public officers in any election district each qualified elector shall be entitled to receive from the judges of the election one ballot. It shall be the duty of such judges of election to deliver such ballots to the elector, etc.

I show you Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1889. Here is section 4671, headed in capitals, Ballot. To contain what? And here is section 4680, applying and headed in the same way—Ballot. To contain what? But it will be observed that the sections are quite different in their provisions. The Legislature itself with good sense substantially says we will not disfranchise the voter under this Australian ballot system by reason of the fault of the judges if the will of the voter can be ascertained by his ballot and was cast in good faith.

We have a statute of this kind in Michigan, which was passed in 1891. It provides, among other things, that each ballot shall have a vignette at the head of the ticket, and expressly provides that the ballot shall not be counted if any other device or writing appear. The provision that a ballot shall be fraudulent or shall not be counted if there is an absence of the initials of the judges is purposely omitted in the Missouri law where the Australian ballot is used. In two of the counties of Michigan another vignette was put upon the county tickets, in addition to the regular vignette, and the supreme court was asked to throw out the vote. The learned judge delivering the opinion says:

> The question presented is whether the voter who votes a ticket appearing upon the official ballot, duly certified by legal authority, can be disfranchised by the failure of the election commissioners to comply strictly with the statute, and whether a candidate who is not shown to have participated in any fraud can be defeated on his election on the same ground.
> It may be stated, as a general rule, that the provisions of law relating to the manner of conducting elections will not be held so far mandatory as that a departure therefrom will result in the disfranchisement of a district or a class of voters, or the defeat of a candidate himself free from fraud, except in cases where the legislative intent that such departure shall have that effect is clearly and unequivocally expressed.

There is no clearly and unequivocally expressed legislative intent appearing in the Missouri statute that the voter is to be disenfranchised or the vote not counted because it is initialed by only one of the judges. Indeed, as before observed, I regard this as purposely omitted. It turns out, in the case before us, that the ballots which the majority report in favor of rejection were initialed by only one judge. The ballot was received in good faith and voted in good faith. The ticket was handed to the judges and the judges announced the name of the voter and put the ticket in the ballot box. To say now that it should be rejected because it contained only the initial of one judge would be no more reasonable than to say that it should be rejected because the voter did not fold his ticket so as to show the initial of either judge.

I contend, therefore, that there is no law in the State of Missouri, and I hope there never will be a law anywhere, that will disfranchise 936 citizens who are otherwise entitled to vote, and who have voted in good faith, by reason of the neglect or inadvertence of the judges or inspectors in not writing the initials of both upon the ballot.

I have trespassed thus far upon the attention of the House simply to explain the reason of my vote, unless I can secure some further light upon the question. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DANIELS. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. DANIELS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JOY].

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I feel some hesitancy in rising to speak in a case in which I am personally to some extent involved, but as it has been deemed best that I should say something, I will confine myself to one or two suggestions only. The discussion of the law of the case has been had to as great an extent as time will allow, and the question as to whether, under the law of Missouri, ballots which are not strictly numbered in accordance with the statute or strictly initialed in accordance with the provisions of the statute shall be counted, or whether, if they are not to be counted, it is the desire of this House to disfranchise those voters, is a question that I can not discuss any more fully.

I desire to assume, for the purposes of the argument which I shall make, that the law is either mandatory or is not mandatory.

Take either horn of the dilemma you choose, the law is mandatory or it is not. But, to go into another phase of the case, I will state the point that I desire to make. On the 9th day of January, 1893, the contest between the contestant and myself was commenced by the service upon me of two notices—one a notice to take testimony at the office of the contestant's attorney, and the other in the following words:

[John J. O'Neill vs. Charles F. Joy, Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri.]

To the Hon. CHARLES F. JOY or his attorney:

SIR: You are hereby notified that I shall, on Saturday, January 14, at 10:30 o'clock, at the office of James L. Carlisle, recorder of votes, in the city hall, city of St. Louis and State of Missouri, before Andrew Dugan, a notary public, ask that the ballot boxes containing the ballots cast for members of Congress in the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri at the election held on the 8th day of November, 1892, shall be opened and the ballots therein counted.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN J. O'NEILL.

Pursuant to that notice the parties met at the office of the recorder of voters at the hour named, and the recount of the ballots was commenced. The first question put to the recorder of voters immediately upon the opening of the ballot box was, as appears from this record:

> I will ask you now to open the box in precinct 98 and produce the ballots at that election contained in that box.
> The witness opened box and produced ballots.

Then follows the record of the recounting of every ballot in that ninety-eighth precinct. That was the notice served by the contestant. What I have read is taken from his own record and this was his own witness. That precinct having been completed, we reach, on page 53 of the record, precinct 82. There the form is again gone through, to prove that the ballots and the ballot box are in the same condition as when the votes were returned. The question is asked of the recorder of voters by the attorney for the contestant:

> Now, I will ask you to open the box and proceed to count the ballots that were cast for Member of Congress for the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri for the Fifty-third Congress, on the 8th day of November, 1892.

Following that is a complete recount of every ballot in the box. So with the one hundred and twenty-eight ballot boxes in the Eleventh Congressional district, only eight ballot boxes being left uncounted. One hundred and twenty-eight were recounted, and every ballot in them was recounted and put in the record which is offered here by the contestant. Finally, over one-half the time of the contestant having been consumed, he ceased counting the ballots further, and after the close of the count of the one hundred and twenty-eight ballot boxes, this announcement is made in the record by the contestant himself:

The absolute necessity for using every moment of time remaining will prevent my continuing the further counting of the boxes. There are about four boxes remaining which I hope my friends on the other side, who will have ample time, will open, and so complete the final count of the vote.

Now, I say there was a recount had of every ballot in the district with the exception of these few precincts, and they were omitted for lack of time. It has been already stated by my colleague that the result of that recount did not wipe out the paltry majority of the contestee, 67 votes, but, on the contrary, built it up to 212. That is in the record produced by the contestant before this body. The point has been made by the majority of the Committee on Elections that the law is mandatory, and that therefore the votes in the three precincts can not be counted. I desire to read just three lines of law applying to contested-election cases.

And any such notice [of contest] shall specify particularly the grounds upon which he [the contestant] relies in the contest. (United States Revised Statutes, section 105.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is not a line nor a word nor a syllable in the notice of contest presented in this case and served upon me by the contestant which complains of a single ballot not having been properly initialed. More than that, this may seem a little outside of the record, but it is on record at St. Louis and it is true, very few precincts were shown to have the ballots initialed: there are four others where there was only one initial upon the ballots. Why did not they bring that into the contest? Let me tell you; but I will preface what I have to say upon this point by a word. A day or two of the recount had passed. Ballots which were a little informal, the scratching not having been perfect, and containing other little informalities, had to be described in the record. The record was being built up unnecessarily, as those ballots were evidently intended to be cast either for me or for the contestant.

So on page 56, the third day of the recount, the following agreement was made, which will be found in the record presented to this House by the contestant:

Mr. O'NEILL. I am willing to take the intention of the voter right through.

That was where a ballot had been scratched.

Mr. JOY. When I can see the plain intention of the voter I am perfectly willing to take it.

That was the first agreement. The matter ran on until page 70 of the record was reached—four days afterwards—when the agreement was repeated and strengthened. I quote from the record as made and presented by the contestant to this House:

By Mr. O'NEILL. It is agreed and announced that where the intention of the voter is apparent, the vote will be counted for the person for whom he intended to vote. It applies all through the entire ballots.

By Mr. JOY. Both parties agree to it.

Not only was that agreement made, but from that time on, until the last box was closed and locked, every ballot was counted in accordance with the agreement. And for that reason the initials upon other ballots are not presented in this record. To strengthen this still more, as I have stated, during the first three days these ballots were described. In the rebuttal testimony, however, a witness, Mr. Patrick Killoran, was called to prove how he intended to vote, whose ballot had been described in the record. He was called by the contestant, placed on the witness stand, and sworn, when the following colloquy took place:

By Mr. JOY: It is agreed that the witness, Patrick Killoran, cast his ballot properly, and that the ballot was described in the record, and that this witness's ballot so described would have been counted for the contestant—under the rule adopted later between the contestant and contestee. And it is further agreed that all described ballots during the first three days and prior to the adoption of the rule shall be counted in accordance with the rule adopted afterwards in the count, as appears by the record.

Not for Mr. Joy, but for the contestant—

By Mr. O'NEILL: I would strike out the words "the first three days." Wherever a ballot appears described in the record before the adoption of the rule shall be now counted as if the rule had been adopted at first, if there are any such. Mr. Killoran's ballot is counted—upon the understanding that the ballots described prior to the adoption of the rule between the contestant and the contestee shall be counted as they would have been counted had the rule been adopted at first; that is, at the beginning. This agreement shall go to all tickets described in the record.

I therefore have reason to state with some positiveness that there was a recount of the ballots, although a majority of the committee have not deemed best to mention the fact in their report. I will leave that question, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] will rise and answer it. I would like to have his statement, whether there was or was not a recount. There was a recount; and ballots were taken even in the rebuttal upon the basis of the agreement and counted under the agreement which was to relate back to all described tickets.

Now, I will state another thing; and the record offered by contestant shows it. The recount gave to the contestee, not a plurality of 67, but a plurality of 212; and although the law cited by the majority of the committee may be mandatory, I say there is no pleading that entitles this testimony to be introduced; but if the pleading were ample, the question has been entirely and repeatedly waived by the contestant; and again, if it had not been waived, the recount had by him and presented by him to this House gives the contestee, even under the majority report, a majority of 2 votes over the contestant. After disfranchising 937 voters they still seat him by only 210; and taking the testimony of the contestant himself the contestee is entitled to be seated upon the report of the majority of this committee by a majority of 2 votes. I thank the House for the kind attention it has given to me. [Applause.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, the reports in this case, majority and minority, mainly deal with the questions growing out of the Australian ballot laws of the State of Missouri, and this for the reason that it is conceded that if the contention of the contestant in this regard is sustained, he is entitled to the seat. In the minority report it is distinctly said that if the ballots claimed to be invalid under this law are to be excluded, "then it is a conceded fact that Mr. O'Neill, and not Mr. Joy, has been elected to this seat in Congress."

On account of these views, and the fact that upon its full consideration the majority of the committee unanimously came to the conclusion that the law of the case was with the contestant—from this point of view—the other material facts of the case from Mr. O'Neill's standpoint have been lost sight of, and he done an in us ice and made to appear as standing upon the technical construction of a law with in fact a minority of voters only in his favor, whereas in fact, in my opinion, he has not only a strong but an overwhelming case outside of these questions and voters; and before I conclude I shall call attention at least briefly to some of these other points, so that the record may be complete and the position of Mr. O Neill at least stated.

The first question in this contention is naturally as to what the law actually is as it stands upon the statute books of the State of Missouri and, parodoxical as it may seem, this is a disputed and even a vital point in the correct dete mination of the issue here; and then this being settled, there remain questions of construction and correct practice under the law.

The reasons underlying Australian ballot laws and their necessity should not be lost sight of, and these have been so concisely and forcibly stated in the report of the committee and the law as it stands set out, that I will adopt its language as a preface to the discussion of the points as before stated by me:

In recent years there has been a growing necessity for legislation securing more perfectly the sanctity and purity of the ballot. In former times, when the population of cities was not so large, when corporate influences were not so great, when class legislation was practically unknown, and the intelligence and independence of the voters secured a larger proportion of their number from sinister influences than now, laws were considered entirely adequate for the protection of the ballot which are now admitted to be ineffectual.

The large influx of foreign population during the last twenty-five years, the extension of the elective franchise to the colored people, and the congregation in the cities of heterogeneous masses, together with the fierce struggles for advantages which often take place at elections, have resulted in an epidemic of election frauds unknown before in our history and which are rightfully considered hurtful if not dangerous to the permanency of our free institutions. This condition of affairs has been fruitful of much legislation in the respective States looking to the protection, the purity, and the intelligence of the ballot. This legislation marks a distinctive era in our legislative history, and while in the process of development it has often been crude and ill advised, it has in the main been in the right direction and productive of much good.

The State of Missouri, in respect to the better protection and security of the ballot, especially in the cities, is in advance of many of the other States. It is not necessary for the purposes of this report to call attention to the various laws enacted from time to time on this subject. It is sufficient to say that the State of Missouri, by successive attempts at ballot reform, has at length evolved a system of voting in large cities which, perhaps, as nearly approaches perfection as that of any other State. In such cities there is an officer appointed by the governor, called the recorder of voters, whose business it is to register the voters in the municipality. The office is kept open at all times for this purpose. The registration is sufficiently descriptive as to furnish the identity of the voter and the exact place of his residence.

There is no second or other registration required for subsequent elections, but the recorder from time to time, in cases of death or removal, or other disqualification, corrects the registration. Where a voter moves out of one percinct into another, he can, on application to the recorder, have the transfer made on the registration books. Prior to an election registrars are appointed in each of the several voting precincts of the city to register such voters as have not applied to the recorder for registration, and these registrars make returns of the voters registered by them to the recorder.

When this is done the recorder proceeds to make a registration list for each voting precinct in alphabetical order, which is forwarded to the officers of the election before the polls are opened.

Aside from the necessary clerks and officers holding the election there are six judges of election appointed in each precinct, three of whom are selected from each of the two leading political organizations. Two of these judges, one a Democrat and the other a Republican, are designated as distributing judges. They are the custodians of the official ballots, charged with the duty of distributing them to the voters. When a citizen presents himself as a voter and asks for a ballot, the judges can see at a glance whether he appears on the registration list, and if so the distributing judges take one ballot, and after writing their respective signatures or initials on the back of the ballot, they deliver it to the voter. The voter then retires to a booth, where, unmolested and unobserved, he prepares his ballot to suit himself. If by accident or carelessness he so mutilates his ballot as to render it useless he can return it to the distributing judges and receive another, indorsed in like manner. In this way the distributing judges are required to keep track of every ballot.

When the voter has prepared his ballot and folded the same he is prepared to vote, and it is offered by him to two other judges who also belong to opposing political parties, called the receiving judges. The ballot is by them examined to see if it is indorsed by the signatures or the initials of the distributing judges. It is proper to observe in this connection that the requirement of the law is that both judges shall write their signatures or initials on the ballot, otherwise one of the judges might collude with fraudulent voters. The requirement is that judges opposed to each other politically shall concur in issuing the ballot.

If the ballot is legally indorsed by the distributing judges it is received by the receiving judges, who are required to call out in an audible voice the name of the voter. Then the receiving judges indorse on the back of the ballot the voting number, or the number of the ballot in the order in which it is offered, this being the only writing which the law permits them to indorse on the ballot; and at the same time the voting number is entered on the registration list opposite the name of the voter with the word "voted." Then the receiving judges, or one of them, call out the voting number in a voice sufficiently loud to be heard by the bystanders and the ballot is placed in the box.

There are two other judges, called the counting judges, belonging in like manner to opposite parties. In order to facilitate the counting of votes there are two ballot boxes provided for by law. When the polls are opened the counting judges, who have the custody of the boxes, deliver box No. 1, empty and securely locked, to the receiving judges, and ballots voted are deposited in this box for one hour and then it is delivered to the counting judges, who in like manner deliver box No. 2 to the receiving judges, and thus the boxes alternate every hour from the counting to the receiving judges and back from the receiving to the counting judges until the polls are closed. In the meantime, while the ballots are going into one box, the ballots in the other box are being counted, but the result of the counting is withheld from the public until the election is over.

So under this system, when the polls are closed the ballots are all practically counted. When the election is concluded and the returns made out the ballots are all placed in a box securely locked, and this box, properly labeled and identified, is turned over to the recorder. He is required to keep the ballots securely for the period of twelve months, to be offered, if required, in evidence should there be a contest. Should there be no contest instituted within twelve months the ballots are then destroyed.

The efficiency and simplicity of this system is apparent. By requiring the distributing judges to write their signatures or initials on the ballot before delivering it to the voter the election is protected from the use of any but an official ballot by properly and duly registered voters.

By numbering the ballots in the order in which they are voted and then writing the number of each ballot at the time it is cast opposite the name of the voter on the registration list with the word "voted," the identity of the voter and the exact place of his residence is made susceptible of easy proof. In this way the ballot is so hedged about that fraud on the part of the voter is almost impossible. Should the counting judges be corrupt the voter can trace his ballot and see that it is counted as voted. If the receiving judges place any other ballot than the one voted in the box the absence of the signatures or initials of the distributing judges, on the substituted ballot, would at once expose the fraud. So not only is fraud almost impossible on the part of the voter, but it would be necessary, in order to accomplish fraud in the election, to have all six of the judges, belonging to opposite political parties, to act in collusion.

It is plain that the imposition of fines on officers of election who violate the law by designedly or carelessly omitting its formalities would not make a system such as this effective. The officers elected through a violation of the law would often be able to screen their confederates from punishment. Where the voter and the officers of the election are all interested in understanding and conforming to the law the result will be different. The system can only be made effective by peremptorily declaring that the legality of the ballot shall depend on the observance of the law in vital particulars. This is precisely what the State of Missouri has done. In section 988, revised statutes, 1889, it is provided that the voter—

"Shall not vote elsewhere but in the election precinct where his name is registered and whereof he is registered as a resident."

In section 4785, revised statutes, 1889, as amended by section 11 of the act of April 4, 1891, it is expressly provided that—

"Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear."

In section 1005, revised statutes, 1889, it is provided that—

"No ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted."

In section 4671, revised statutes, 1889, chapter 60, it is further enacted—

"Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and void."

Section 4780, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60, as amended by section 8 of the act of April, 4, 1891, reads as follows:

"On any day of election of public officers in any election district, each qualified elector shall be entitled to receive from the judges of election one ballot. It shall be the duty of such judges of election to deliver such ballot to the elector. Before delivering any ballot to the elector the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil, and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot except the number of the ballot."

Now, these provisions of the law of Missouri are plainly and emphatically mandatory. This is too clear for discussion, and we refrain from citing authorities or quoting decisions in support of a proposition so free from doubt. It may be said that to enforce these statutes according to their plain intent and purpose will work injustice to the voter, and that he ought not to be held responsible for the failure of the distributing judges to write their signatures or initials on his ballot, or the failure of the receiving judges to number it.

But it must be borne in mind that no man has the natural or inherent right to vote. The voter is an agency of the State, clothed by the State with the elective franchise, and the same power which prescribes who shall have the franchise can also prescribe the manner of its exercise and throw such safeguards around the ballot as will protect it from fraud and dishonesty. Again, the voter is presumed to know something of the law which secures to him the elective franchise and prescribes the conditions on which it is to be exercised. When he receives his ballot he can plainly see whether it bears the names or initials of the distributing judges. The receiving judges are required to announce the number of his ballot in a voice sufficiently audible as to be heard by the bystanders.

As the voter is the nearest bystander it may well be presumed he will hear the announcement of his number, and as the numbering is required to be consecutive there is neither temptation nor opportunity to write other than the proper number and announce it to the bystanders. The opportunity of the voter to inform himself and to guard against the loss of his ballot by complying with the law is ample. Especially is this true in view of the fact that at least one of the judges is his political associate and friend and is there to protect him. But aside from all this we have nothing to do with the severity or the hardships of the law. It is plainly mandatory, and precedent and sound public policy alike demand that it should be enforced and obeyed.

(See Ledbetter vs. Hall, 62 Missouri, 422; State ex rel vs. Cook, 41 Missouri, 693; West vs. Ross, 53 Missouri, 350; Gumm vs. Hubbard, 97 Missouri, 311. McCrary on Elections, section 126.)

The election in controversy took place on the 8th day of November, 1892, and the district was entirely in the city of St. Louis, which had a population of several hundred thousand people, all of which facts have a bearing upon what the law actually is or was.

The provisions of the constitution of Missouri, adopted in 1875, bearing upon the qualifications of voters, conduct of elections, registration, etc., are as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 2. "Every male citizen of the United States, and every male person of foreign birth who may have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States according to law, not less than one year nor more than five years before he offers to vote, who is over the age of 21 years, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections by the people:

First. "He shall have resided in the State one year immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote.

Second. "He shall have resided in the county, city, or town where he shall offer to vote at least sixty days immediately preceding the election.

SEC. 3. "All elections by the people shall be by ballot; every ballot voted shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received, and the number recorded by the election officers on the list of voters, opposite the name of the voter who presents the ballot. The election officers shall be sworn or affirmed not to disclose how any voter shall have voted, unless required to do so as witnesses in a judicial proceeding: Provided, That in all cases of contested election the ballots cast may be counted, compared with the list of voters, and examined under such safeguards and regulations as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 5. "The General Assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all voters in cities and counties having over 100,000 inhabitants, and may provide for such registration in cities having a population exceeding 25,000 inhabitants and not exceeding 100,000, but not otherwise."

The laws upon these questions are contained in the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1889 and the act of April 4, 1891, which last law was passed to extend Australian ballot provisions to the State at large, it having previously been confined to cities of 5,000 inhabitants and over. These laws, so far as material to this inquiry, are as follows:

REGISTRATION—WHERE HAD.

Section 987 of the Revised Statutes, 1889:

In all cities of the first class and all cities whose population entitles them to become cities of the first class, there shall be a registration of all the qualified voters, and the registration of the voters, and the conduct of the elections held in such cities shall be governed by the following provisions, subject to the general law concerning elections:

QUALIFICATION OF VOTERS.

Section 988, Revised Statutes, 1889:

Every male citizen of the United States and every person of foreign birth who may have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States according to law, not less than one year nor more than five years before he offers to vote, who is over the age of 21 years, who has resided in this State one year next preceding the election at which he offers to vote, and during the last sixty days of that time shall have resided in the city, and during the last twenty days of that time in the precinct at which he offers to vote, who has not been convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime, nor serving at the time in the regular Army or Navy of the United States, shall be entitled to vote at such election for all officers, State or municipal, made elective by the people, or at any other election held in pursuance of the laws of this State; but he shall not vote elsewhere but in the election precinct where his name is registered, and whereof he is registered as a resident.

Section 989, Revised Statutes, 1889:

The register of any such city, not in a county, and the county clerk of the counties in which all other such cities are located, shall provide a suitable registration book for each election precinct in the city, which shall have written or printed thereon the following oath: "We, the undersigned, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that we will support the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Missouri. We do, furthermore, swear (or affirm) that we have registered in no other election precincts; that we and each of us have given our true names (as hereto subscribed); that we live at the places herein designated by us, and that we and each of us have truly answered all questions propounded us touching our registration;" and it shall be the duty of the recorder of voters and his deputies to call the special attention of each person who may offer to register to the nature of this oath.

The registration books and the registration lists of poll books, as hereinafter provided to be delivered to the judges of election, shall be in the following form:

Registration No.	Number of the ballot in the order in which it was received.	Name and residence.	Rejected.	Voted.	Peculiar marks of identification.

BALLOT BOXES—ENUMERATION AND MARKING OF BALLOTS—PROCESS OF VOTING.

Section 1005, Revised Statutes, 1889:

The recorder of votes shall provide two ballot boxes for each election precinct, one of which shall be numbered No. 1, and the other No. 2, and it shall be the duty of the judges of election to select from their number two who shall be designated and known as "receiving judges," and two who shall be designated and known as "counting judges." The two receiving judges shall receive the ballots of each elector, and shall upon receipt thereof, pronounce in an audible voice the name of the voter, and if the judges shall be satisfied that the person offering to vote is a legal voter, his ballot shall be taken and numbered in the order he offers to vote, and the ballot shall be folded, and one of the judges shall place the registration number on the back of the ballot, and then draw a horizontal line under it, and shall place the number of the ballot in the order it was voted, thus: 308-12; said numbers shall be announced in a plain and audible voice by the judges, loud enough to be heard by the bystanders outside the polling place, and the ballot shall then be deposited in the ballot box, which shall be securely closed for the period of one hour after the opening of the polls.

The clerks of the election shall enter the voting number of the ballot, and the word voted, or rejected, as the case may be, opposite the voter's name on the registration lists furnished to them. At the expiration of such hour, the receiving judges shall deliver said ballot box No. 1 to the counting judges, who shall immediately deliver over to the receiving judges ballot box No. 2, which shall thereupon be securely closed, in which all ballots received, until the ballots in ballot box No. 1 are counted, shall be deposited; and after the counting judges have counted the ballots in ballot box No. 1 they shall deliver the box to the receiving judges, and the counting judges shall count the ballots in ballot box No. 2, and so on, alternating whenever the counting judges complete the count of the ballots in any box until all the ballots cast are counted.

All ballots shall be taken out and counted in the presence of all the judges and clerks, and party representatives, in the manner provided by law, and it shall be the duty of the counting judges to announce to the electors present the total number of votes polled at the close of each hour, but no information or statement of any kind shall be given or made by the judges or clerks of election revealing the number of votes received by any candidate at such election, or the name of any person who has not voted, or any information tending to show the state of the polls: Provided, That each political party shall have the right to select one representative to be present with the judges of election from the opening to the closing of the polls, who may challenge any person offering to vote, but shall not interfere with the judges or clerks in the discharge of their duties. Said representatives shall make oath before the judges of election that they will not directly or indirectly give any information showing the state of the polls: Provided, further, That no ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted, and that the judges shall, in the presence of the electors, examine the ballot boxes at the opening of the polls, and before any ballots are received, to see that they are empty; and at the close of the polls the judges shall continue to count until all the ballots are counted, without removing from the polling place.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES TO BE APPOINTED.

Section 4777, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60:

At the same time and in the same manner as judges of election are appointed or elected, two additional judges of election for each election district in the State shall be appointed or elected; three of the judges shall be taken from the political party that polled the largest number of votes at the last preceding election, and three of the judges from the party that polled the next largest vote. The judges of election shall designate two of their number, not of the same party, whose duty it shall be to have charge of the ballots, and to furnish them to voters in the manner hereinafter provided.

Section 4671, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60:

Each voter at any election, shall in full view, deliver to one of the judges of election a single ballot, which shall be a piece of white paper, on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons voted for, with a designation of the office which he or they may be intended to fill. Said ballot shall not bear upon it any device whatever, nor shall there be any writing or printing thereon, except the names of persons and the designations of the office to be filled, leaving a margin on either side of the printed matter for substituting names. Each ballot may bear a plain written or printed caption thereon, expressing its political character, but on all such ballots the caption or head lines shall not in any manner be designed to mislead the voter as to the name or names thereunder. Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent, and the same shall not be counted.

FRAUDULENT BALLOTS.

Section 4677, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60:

Where two or more ballots are found placed or folded together, such ballots shall be considered as fraudulent and shall be rejected; and if two or more ballots appear corresponding with the same number, all such ballots shall be rejected as fraudulent; and in all cases where there are two ballots corresponding to the same number it shall be the duty of the judges of election to have the party called and the question determined upon his evidence under oath.

BALLOTS.

Section 4780, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60, as amended by section 8, act of April 4, 1891, reads as follows:

On any day of election of public officers in any election district, each qualified elector shall be entitled to receive from the judges of election one ballot. It shall be the duty of such judges of election to deliver such ballot to the elector. Before delivering any ballot to the elector, the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil, and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot, except the number of the ballot.

Section 4785, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60, as amended by section 11 of the act of April 4, 1891, reads as follows:

Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for, does not appear.

The election law of 1891 in direct terms and in its first section repeals sections 4762, 4766, 4773, 4775, 4776, 4779, 4780, 4781, 4784, 4785, 4792, and 4794 of the Revised Statutes, and substitutes sections of the same numbers therefor, and instead of containing the usual clause repealing inconsistent laws, amends that section, 4794 of the Revised Statutes, by providing that it shall read "all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed," clearly indicating that this 1891 act of itself repealed nothing but what was stated in direct terms, and that this usual clause was adapted to the old or then existing law, except as specially repealed, and which law contained sections 4671 and 4672, neither of which was mentioned in repealing clause.

The argument made before the committee for contestee and the minority report very ingeniously contend that section 4671, Revised Statutes, with its provision, "any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted," is repealed, and that the provision in law of 1891, that a ballot not numbered as provided shall not be deposited, does not take its place or carry any penalty except as against the judge.

In other words, that it does not affect the voter, and that his ballot is to be counted.

I do not controvert this provision. The provision just quoted was not a part of the law at the time of the election. This argument is founded upon the idea that said section applied when passed to those portions of the State that did not have the Australian system, and where the voter furnished his own ballot, and that when this system was applied to the whole State this provision became obsolete, and that the punitive part before quoted fell with it. There is no doubt but that the provisions of this section preceding the punitive provision had become obsolete; but it is equally as clear that the punitive provision remained and is a part of the Australian system of Missouri.

I think a fair consideration and application of the following reasons will demonstrate this:

1. The fact that certain provisions of a law become obsolete does not necessarily make them repugnant to the new law, and a distinct portion of a section may be inconsistent and go out of use and another distinct provision of the same section not do so. It might be awkward, but not illegal.

2. The latter provision of section 4671, quoted, making fraudulent the ballots mentioned, does not limit the condemnation to those not conforming to that section, but to those "not conforming to the provisions of this chapter."

3. In the law of 1891 the sections repealed are expressly stated and this section is not mentioned, and a repeal by implication by the passage of a later law only repeals where repugnant or inconsistent, and no more necessarily repeals a whole section than a whole chapter of a law, and only those portions obnoxious to the later law are affected, and there is no legal or other reason why one distinct portion of a section may not fall and another stand.

4. It is said in the printed argument for contestee that "by the act of 1891 all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith are repealed." This is a mistake. As I have before mentioned the usual provision of this kind in laws is utterly lacking, but in place thereof a section in the revised statutes is amended so as to make this repealing provision apply to that chapter of the revised statutes in which this section was left and to which a provision that any ballot not conforming to its provisions shall be considered fraudulent and not counted is not in any wise inconsistent or repugnant, but possibly and presumably very harmonious, proper, and salutary.

5. The courts of Missouri have so decided, and held these very provisions mandatory. In the case of The State vs. Dennerlein, St. Louis criminal court, the defendant was indicted under several counts for abstracting from a ballot box ballots for the purpose of changing the lawful result of an election, contrary to a statute upon that subject. Upon the trial it appeared that the ballots were initialed by both judges, but not on the back. It is not quite clear from the record I have of the case, but I think one judge put his initials on the back of the ballot and the other on the inside corner, but possibly both so on the inside. It was contended that a conviction could not be had because these ballots, not conforming to the law, could not be counted, and so their abstraction could not change the result of the election, and this point was sustained and a verdict of acquittal ordered.

In this case it is sought to count ballots for the contestee so illegal and against the provision of the statutes of Missouri, as held in this case, that it is no offense to steal them out of the ballot box. I have the complete record of this case—indictment, pleas, testimony, rulings, etc.—but with the brief statement I have given it is not necessary to incorporate or specially call attention further to the indictment, or at all to the evidence; but the objections made, the arguments, and rulings are not only important, but interesting and easily understood and applied in connection with what I have said, and are as follows:

Mr. KRUM. I object to the testimony on the ground that it is immaterial, for this reason: That neither of these ballots is a lawful ballot; that neither of them could lawfully be deposited in a ballot box; consequently, even if they were in a ballot box, not being lawful ballots, there is no offense in their abstraction by anybody; there is no offense in one's countenancing their abstraction by anybody; there is no offense in one's aiding their abstraction on the part of anybody. Your honor will see by an inspection the point of the objection.

(Mr. Dyer handed the ballots to the court.)

Mr. KRUM. It will be conceded by the prosecution that they are all alike and that there is only one initial.

The COURT. Is that conceded, Col. Dyer?

Mr. DYER. I have not examined the ballots myself to see whether the names of the judges are written across the ballots or not.

Mr. KRUM. It is not there; there is only one initial on the ballot, and that is all there is.

Mr. Dyer said he had not offered them yet. When that time came, the objection might be more properly made. He (Mr. Dyer) admitted that these ballots were the ballots that are claimed to have been abstracted from the box.

The COURT. Do you claim that this is a legal ballot?

Mr. DYER. I do. I claim it is a legal ballot for all the purposes for which it is used here; that when that ballot went into the box, with the number of the voter placed thereon, it became a legal ballot.

The COURT. Do you claim it was a legal ballot and should have been counted by the judges in casting up the votes cast and declaring the result of the election?

Mr. DYER. I am not going into that now.

The COURT. Col. Dyer, this charge is for illegally, willfully, and fraudulently abstracting, or aiding in it, or assenting to it, from any ballot box any legal ballot for the purpose of changing the result of any election. That necessarily implies that the ballot should be a legal ballot, and that it should be one which ought to be counted and which must be counted. If you admit that the ballot should not be counted, then it could not possibly change or affect the result of the election.

Mr. DYER. I have not examined every provision of the statute in reference to this matter. These ballots, I find, have the initials of some one person, and the numbers written by two judges required, but I do not find that they have the name of any judge or the initials of any judge on the back of any of the ballots. That is the first time I discovered that. Inasmuch as this is about the hour of your honor's adjournment, I would like time to look at the statute, if your honor will permit me or give me until 2 o'clock.

Q. By the COURT. Did you state that this Eichelberger was one of the judges?

ANSWER. Yes, sir.

The COURT. I suppose that "C. E." stands for Chris. Eichelberger?

Mr. DYER. No; in my judgment it does not. "C. E." were the initials that were selected by Weule, was not put on by one of the judges. I will state to your honor that that is my information. I don't know that that is true.

At this point court cautioned the jury and took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

Further proceedings in the case at bar were had, as follows:

Mr. DYER. Unless your honor shall hear no argument on the question that was a little prematurely brought to your honor's attention, I desire to say that from conference with those who understand this matter, and upon an examination of these ballots that were before your honor awhile ago, I find that the initials of two of the judges are upon these ballots—not 2 inches exactly from the top of the ballot, but we shall be able to show that the initials of two of the judges of election are indorsed upon these ballots, and so I shall proceed with this examination, but this question may be raised at the time I offer the ballots.

The COURT. Col. Dyer, only this, if you concede that those are the ballots?

Mr. DYER. Yes, sir.

The COURT. And the court has seen those ballots and is supposed to know what is on them.

Mr. DYER. Your honor will see that on the reverse side of those is this "C. E." I suppose it was written by the clerk. It turns out to be, as I can establish, it turns out was written by one of the judges of election, Eichelberger. And on the corner is the initials of Fricki, another one of the judges. I find that on each of those ballots are indorsed not only "C. E.," but are indorsed also with the intials of Frederick Fricki.

Mr. KRUM. That I deny.

Mr. DYER. I know you deny it, but if I do not show it you are entitled to an acquittal.

Mr. KRUM. Where is the theory of the secrecy of the ballot, if that is a compliance with the law?

Mr. DYER. What do you mean?

Mr. KRUM. I mean, when a ballot is given to the voter it is not opened by the judge in that way. That's what I mean.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman now says that notwithstanding the initials of the two judges appear upon the ballot, because it don't appear exactly on the back of the ballot within 2 inches of the top of the ballot, therefore the ballot is illegal. It being conceded, for the purposes of this argument, that these ballots had been indorsed before or at the time of receiving the ballots by the initials of the two judges, then the point is made on the statute, that they have to be within 2 inches of the top.

Mr. KRUM. I don't make that point.

Mr. DYER. The law is peremptory as to one as to the other. The only question now presented to your honor is the fact that they bear the initials of two of the judges of election, as I will show you.

Mr. KRUM. What I mean by that is this, that they must be indorsed upon the back.

Mr. DYER. And it says 2 inches from the top. You might as well claim that, too.

Mr. KRUM. No; I do not care about that. And because the ballot is secret, the judge has no right to see what he gives to the voter. For the purpose of the election, all he has to do is to indorse his initials on the ballot. It is upon the back of it, the statute says.

Mr. DYER. Such a strained construction of the law would lay wide, and very wide the door for every ballot-box stuffer that might care to be elected in this city. To contend that it is not a legal ballot because the initials are written on the corner and not on the back, would not be held by any court of justice.

Mr. KRUM. The gentleman has only the supreme court and the Legislature to blame, and any diatribe as to them will not avail. There is the law, and it is as plain as the nose even on Col. Dyer's face.

Mr. DYER. I may also call your honor's attention to the statute in reference to the elections in cities of this class, and that while the election is to be held under the general election laws of the State of Missouri passed in 1889, that the law is especially applicable to cities of this class, as you will find under section 1005, "Of city elections;" that no such requirement is made of the judges of election appointed by the recorder to hold city elections in the city of St. Louis; that under the other section, 1005, it is required of them to number the ballot in the manner indicated on the back of that ballot. No further requirement is held of them. The section itself provides that the election shall be held under the provisions of the statute in regard to general elections.

Mr. KRUM. Your honor will also see that the statute makes the law in relation to holding of elections in cities having over 5,000 inhabitants applicable to the cities having over 100,000 inhabitants.

The COURT. I think that section of the statute is mandatory. It says that it shall be the duty of the judge of election to deliver such ballot to the elector. Before delivering the ballot to the elector, the two judges having charge of the ballot shall write their names or initials on the back of the ballot, within 2 inches of the top thereof. The other section says no judge of election shall permit the deposit of any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges, as hereinbefore provided for, do not appear.

Mr. DYER. Then, if I understand your honor's decision, it is, the statute itself is mandatory, requiring either the name or initials of the judge of election to be indorsed on the back of the ballot, within 2 inches of the top of the ballot?

The COURT. Well, I do not know about 2 inches of the top; but it does not use the word "indorsed." It says, "shall be written on the back of the ballot." And the other section states that the names or initials of the judges, as hereinbefore provided for, shall appear on the back of the ballot. It practically says, it shall appear or be written as required by the preceding section.

Mr. DYER. Then, if a judge of election shall put his initials, as these were put, on the inside corner of the ballot, at the time and before he delivers it to the voter, without ascertaining or finding out or knowing anything of what the voter intended to vote—if that name is put on by the judge of election, when the voter comes and applies for the privilege of voting, that if the judge puts his initials on the corner, on the inside of this thing, before the ballot is delivered to the voter, that, therefore, that is not a sufficient compliance with the statute?

The COURT. I think not, sir.

Mr. DYER. Your honor has the ballots before you. That is the question.

The COURT. If these are the ballots that the State intends to offer as having been abstracted by the ballot box.

Mr. DYER. Yes, sir; these are the ballots that the State intends to offer at the proper time, that were illegally abstracted on the day of election, by the judge of election in the seventy-seventh precinct of the Sixteenth ward of this city. Those are the ballots that we expect to offer.

Mr. KRUM. Then, the inquiry is irrelevant.

The COURT. The question with me is, whether this court should pass upon that point, or whether a higher court should pass upon it?

Mr. DYER. The question is not properly raised; and my view of this matter is that the statute having in effect—in reality, if not in letter—been complied with by these two judges of election on those ballots, with a view of the identification of the ballot, so that they must bear the initials somewhere on the ballot of the judge of election, so that if the ballots are undertaken to be counted thereafter that they must show the initials of the judges somewhere on that ballot, with the view of the identification; that that was the purpose and object of the Legislature in requiring the names to be put there, so that they could not be substituted by those who abstracted from the ballot boxes the ballots with other ballots bearing initials of the judges of election. Whether it be on the top or bottom, on the inside or outside of the ballot, it was made by the Legislature out of great precaution for the purpose of protecting the purity of the ballot, in that it must be identified by the judge who wrote his name upon it.

And here, if your honor takes that view of the statute which says that it must be upon the back of that ballot—the identification of this ballot written upon the front part of it, written in the corner of it, written probably before it was delivered to the voter, that that is not a sufficient compliance with the statute—I call your honor's attention to the fact that while we can not weigh the legal proposition in the manner presented to your honor, that in the manner and in the idea of these elections it has been the purpose and intent of the Legislature to throw such safeguards around the ballot that the man is assured who cast the ballot that upon proper application his ballot should be identified by the judge of election.

The COURT. If the Legislature intended that the names should be written on the ballot, they would have so stated. And, in addition to that, after the judge has indorsed his name on the ballot and received it, then the other judge, on the pretense of having the right to open the ballot and write his name over the face of it—if he had the right to write his name on the face of it—he could claim that privilege, and so find out how the voter voted, which would be a good reason for having it written on the back. The custom in voting is, one judge writes his name on the back and hands it to another, who writes his name on the back and who delivers it to the voter, etc. The law is very clear, and anybody that can read could see it was the duty of a judge of election to write his name on the back of the ballot. The statute does not use the word "indorse"—the word "indorse" would have the same meaning—but it says that the name shall be written on the back of the ballot. That is my view of the matter, and it is based on that ground.

As I understand you, you want to offer testimony to the effect—so that you will thoroughly understand the court—testimony to this effect: That those ballots were properly voted and properly deposited in the ballot box, and that the defendant either abstracted them or assisted in abstracting them or assented to their being abstracted. That being the case, and it refers to these ballots, the court holds that the offense is not committed, as charged.

Mr. DYER. Then your honor can give such directions as you please to the jury. I do not know how this question could be raised. Your honor said something about whether your honor should pass upon it now.

The COURT. It struck me that way at first: perhaps the Court should decide in favor of the State here and let the case be taken up to the Supreme Court; but I believe it is such a clear case as not to call for that, and that an injustice would be done to the defendant by bringing the case to the Supreme Court, even if the facts were made out.

Mr. DYER. We submit to your honor's ruling.

The COURT (to jury). Gentlemen, the court gives you this instruction: The court instructs the jury that under the evidence in this cause they must acquit the defendant.

Mr. PENCE. Is there no general repealing language?

Mr. HAYES. No.

Mr. GRIFFIN. There is no claim that there was anything repealed by the act of 1891. The claim is that there were two acts, one adapted to the country precincts and the other to cities of over 5,000 inhabitants.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Another reason why it may be said that this was not repealed grows out of the fact of the entire absence, in this law of 1891, of the usual provision repealing all laws inconsistent with the law then passed.

This law has no such provision, although it was stated in the printed argument upon behalf of the contestee before the committee. That is a mistake. What this law does is this: It repeals a certain section in the law of 1889, which was a section saying that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with that should be repealed, and re-enacts in its place these words:

All acts or parts of acts conflicting or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

That is, not inconsistent with the act of 1891, but that were inconsistent with the law of 1889, as amended by this law. In other words, it says that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with that chapter are repealed, and still it in no wise repeals this portion of section 4671, and that is not inconsistent with any other provision in the law, for it is certainly just as competent for the Legislature of the State of Missouri to determine that a ballot should be fraudulent and not counted that did not comply with the provisions of that law as it would be to say that it was so if it did not comply with the provisions of the latter law.

Mr. HUDSON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSON. Did the committee find any evidence which warranted them in assuming that there were fraudulent votes cast at this election, or that the judges of election had acted fraudulently?

Mr. HAYES. Well, that is a very difficult question to answer, for this reason: There was a voluminous record in this case, a great amount of testimony, covering questions of fraud, covering cases of men that had voted on other men's numbers and names, men that were registered from livery stables, vacant lots, lumber yards, and such places; and, as I said, the committee lost sight of all that in the discussion of the other question, and upon the concession that if it was found that these ballots were in the condition that they actually turned out to be, and if it was found that this provision of the law was in force, that it would settle the case, and the majority of the committee so held; and consequently the other questions were lost sight of.

Mr. HUDSON. Then, as I understand you, the committee proposes now, by its report, to disfranchise over 900 voters, simply on the ground that a technical mistake has been made in voting?

Mr. HAYES. Not at all; but on the ground that the law was not complied with, a law of the State of Missouri that was made for the purpose of protecting the voter, a law that was made in the interest of honest and pure elections, on the ground that those provisions had not been complied with.

Mr. HUDSON. One more question now.

Mr. HAYES. Let me finish my answer. I will say that if the result had been carried out which the gentleman speaks of, simply saying that all these things must be brushed aside because they would disfranchise voters, then we might just as well abolish entirely all laws relating to the Australian ballot system.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Do you not agree with me that under the new law, under which all the ballots are furnished by the State, that provision is practically superseded which requires the judges to initial and number the ballot?

Mr. HAYES. No; and in the criminal courts of St. Louis they have held to the contrary.

It follows from what I have said that I believe the provision declaring votes fraudulent and noncountable that do not conform to the terms and provisions of the Australian ballot law is in force, and that a failure to initial by the two judges giving out the ballot is such a failure, and that these ballots can not be counted, and the same result follows as to those not numbered as provided by the law.

On the face of the returns the contestee had 67 majority over the contestant, and a table made a part of the majority report shows the effect of applying these principles to this case, and I quote it in full, as follows:

I have said that I would like, in justice to Mr. O'Neill, to call attention to other points showing that his claim was not entirely technical, but time forbids any extension on these points, and I will incorporate a statement used before the committee on behalf of Mr. O'Neill, and which at least states some of the claims made, as follows:

MEMORANDA.

Precinct 98, where the unnumbered ballots are found, furnishes a most extraordinary spectacle, not alone of irregularity, but of deliberate intention to perpetrate fraud. An examination of the poll book in this precinct shows that the first 191 voting numbers are distributed throughout the entire poll book, and yet follow in regular order beginning at the top of the first page with No. 2, and then interspersed throughout the book but following one another, a condition which could only happen where the first 192 voters had formed in line, arranged themselves in alphabetical order, even to the extent of having the names vowelized and then voting one after the other without any other voter coming between them—a thing that in the element of chance might happened about once in a million years.

The judges attempted to explain that by stating that the first 191 ballots they did not number at all, but fixed the box and the tickets after the polls closed at night; but stated that following 192 they numbered all the ballots, and the arrangement of the numbers of the poll books bears out the theory that the ballots were numbered as they state.

Singular as it may seem, every numbered ballot between 191 and 394 has disappeared from the ballot box, and we find in place of them tickets without any number whatsoever. In this precinct 14 voters who are credited with ballots for Mr. Joy testified that they voted for Mr. O'Neill and that their ballots must have been changed. One voter testifies that when he went to vote in the morning they did not deposit his ballot in the box, but threw it on a pile of tickets already voted lying on the table.

Another states that the judges of election were asleep, and he deposited the ticket in the box himself. Several others who went to vote found their names already voted upon. It is charged in the testimony that all of the ballots in that precinct seemed to have been marked by the same person, and not by the voter, and the description on the ballots as appears in the record bears out that idea.

All of the counting and tallying of the votes was done by Republicans; the judge that issued the ballot to the voter testified that not in a single instance did they initial a ballot that they issued, and the only ballots that have double initials are those that are affixed by the Republican judge and the Republican clerk after the polls closed.

Precinct 61. It is fortunate that rascality usually leaves some trail by which it is detected. In precinct 61, where the single initial formed such an important feature, a glance at the testimony furnishes conclusive evidence as to how that election was conducted. The printed testimony on page — discloses the fact that a bundle of unused ballots already fixed with the one initial on them were found in the box ready for use. It is evident that it was not necessary to find names upon the poll books of legitimate voters; but that these tickets were already for whoever might come in and be willing to use them.

The minority of the committee in their report have evidently taken most of their figures from the contestee's brief, and, like the Chinese tailor, copied the patches into their own report.

The statement in the contestee's brief, which is copied into the minority report, of his alleged gains by an examination of the ballots, is untrue. On the contrary, when the ballots rejected by the judges, and those that are proven to be duplicates are deducted his entire alleged majority disappears, there being not less than 125 voters who are credited with 2 ballots for Joy after offsetting all duplicates found for Mr. O'Neill with a corresponding number for Mr. Joy; and if you add to that the described ballots that appear in the record, gives Mr. O'Neill a substantial majority, there appearing in the record the testimony of more than 40 persons, voters, accredited with ballots for Mr. Joy, who testified that they voted for Mr. O'Neill.

These duplicate ballots represent in many cases the ballots of Democratic voters that have disappeared, and have probably been substituted for them. In other cases an examination of the poll books shows a disappearance of ballots marked "voted." Two precincts will serve as examples. In precinct 144 there are 18 less ballots returned by judges than are marked "voted" on the books; in precinct 14 there are some 17 less ballots found in the box than were returned by the judges as having been cast.

The record furnishes the testimony of about 30 Democrats who voted for Mr. O'Neill whose names are marked "voted," and whose ballots have mysteriously disappeared. The testimony gives the names of 50 votes cast for Mr. Joy by parties registering from vacant lots, stables, lumber yards, etc.

Many instances are given of repeating, one voter, F. W. Peters (page 234), a reputable merchant, testifying that when he went to vote at 8:30 in the morning he found his name voted upon, and was informed by the judge of election that that was the seventh case of that kind that had occurred that morning.

The railway postal clerks out of the city (St. Louis) were attended to, and in two instances ballots were found in the box deposited for Mr. Joy. Some voted on lapsed declarations to become citizens; ballots were deposited in the boxes and counted for Joy, where the names did not appear at all upon the books, and the judges simply added the numbers on the ballots to the poll books.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] took a large portion of his time in condemning an alleged gerrymander in his State in the interest of the Democratic party, and mourning over the fact that his party was not given districts according to its per cent of votes. If this is true it is unfortunate and unjust, but has very little application here, in fact no bearing upon this question. We have to deal with the district as we find it. Then, if this charge is true the Republican party, as a whole, have nothing to complain of. Missouri is certainly no worse off than is Iowa or probably most other States where the Republican party have controlled and formed the districts.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, local self-government is threatened in the house of its friends. In an election so well guarded that fraudulent ballots could not have been cast; on a pure technicality which has no apology in justice and no strength in law; by an order of priesthood that has burned incense at the altar of State rights for more than a century, it is now proposed to disfranchise the people of the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri. If this attempt was made to right some wrong, or even to correct some mistake, the worthy motive might mitigate the political offense. But it is conceded by the committee that every vote was cast by a qualified elector, that every ballot was furnished and marked by a judge for identification and consecutively numbered on the books of the poll list. It is a case where there not only was no fraud, but where the ample safeguards that were complied with made fraud impossible. Because there was not two identification marks instead of one on every ballot a confessed majority vote is to be dishonored and dethroned.

If this disfranchisement was proposed by the Republican party, which in a sense believes in a far-away central government, it would not be so strange. But when that other party, whose every heart-beat is for State rights, whose exuberance of ardor for local self-government has carried it sometimes to the extreme of nullification, sometimes to popular sovereignty, and sometimes to rebellion itself, when such a party slips its bands, flies from its bearings, and goes tearing down the corridors of the empyrean, we may be pardoned for our amazement and excused for our lack of faith in the whole mechanical outfit.

By the report of the committee this case is made to turn on a single technical point that involves the validity of 937 votes, and the point is whether these ballots were sufficiently marked for identification so as to entitle them to be counted. In other words, whether the initials of one judge were sufficient, or whether the initials of both judges were indispensable, it being conceded that in every other respect the votes were genuine, and that the simple addition of one initial more on each ballot would have entitled the contestee to retain his seat in this House.

If this point is well taken the first thought that naturally arises is that the greater the number of safeguards provided the greater the danger, since the accidental omission of one would defeat the end for which all safeguards were provided. But the courts have never taken such a disastrous view, and from the days of Lord Mansfield till now the rule has been "that whether a statutory direction must be literally followed or may be omitted depends on whether the thing directed to be done was of the essence of that required." Applying this rule to the case in hand it may be said that the essence of the transaction was the casting of ballots furnished by the judges and that the identification of these ballots by indorsed marks was not of the essence of the transaction. Or, again, if the essence of the transaction was the identification by marks, then this identification was accomplished by one initial, for more than that would be cumulative and not essential to the essence of the transaction.

That this is the law is clearly implied in the case of West vs. Ross, 53 Missouri, 350, where Judge Vories held "that unnumbered tickets could be counted notwithstanding the statute of 1855 required them to be numbered."

I read from this report at bottom of page 353, as follows:

It is admitted by the respondent in this suit that the ballots cast in Miller Township were not numbered as required by this statute; and that the ballots so unnumbered were counted; and that, without counting them, the appellant would have been elected; but it is contended by him that the statute requiring the ballots to be numbered is merely directory in its provisions, directing the judges of the election in a matter of form which does not form an essential ingredient in the right of the judges to count the votes, and therefore these ballots could be lawfully counted, notwithstanding they were not numbered.

This might be true if the statutes, as the statutes of 1855 did, in reference to elections in St. Louis County, simply directed the judges of elections to number the tickets, without declaring what consequences should result in cases where the ballots were not numbered.

But it is claimed that by the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1889 it is provided—that any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and void.

And again—

No ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted.

And therefore a line of decision are relied upon to the effect that where the statute provides expressly that an irregularity shall be fatal the law will be enforced accordingly.

Our reply is that the statutes cited were superseded in 1891 by the Australian system which was adopted in the State. The new law consists of entirely new and distinct sections, provides a complete system of voting, in itself radically differing from the old system, which is no longer in force.

The new law provides "that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." But were there no repealing clause still we hold that where one system of law is enacted as a substitute for a preceding law the rule of construction is that the preceding law is repealed. This being the fact the new law omits these old provisions and fails to declare the consequences which are to follow any irregularity.

It is, therefore, clear, and we believe no case can be found where the omission of an officer in reference to any particular act in the absence of fraud vitiates the ballot, unless the law so expressly provides.

Again, it should be remembered that when the Australian ballot was first adopted in 1889 it only applied to cities of over 5,000 inhabitants. So that from that period to April, 1891, there were two kinds of ballots in the State—the Australian ballot for large cities, and the old ballot with the penalty for nonconformity for the balance of the State. In 1891 the law was passed extending the Australian ballot throughout the entire State. This ballot not only had no penalty for nonconformity, but the reason for any such penalty ceased in view of the multiplicity of safeguards which were thrown around the new ballot. Thus the old ballot disappeared with all of its belongings, and no election has been conducted in pursuance of it since 1891.

But, it may be said that it is provided that unless the ballot contains certain initials it shall not be deposited by the judge, and that this is equivalent to saying it shall not be counted. This construction will not do. The act of depositing the ballot is only one of a series of acts. A violation in this particular is no more and no less than a violation in any other particular. A ballot wrongfully deposited may just as well be counted as one wrongfully unnumbered, and this we have seen would have been allowed by the supreme court of that State in the case of West vs. Ross had there been no penalty for the omission. In New Hampshire it was decided in the case of Morrill vs. Haines (2 N. H., 299) that a judge of election might be fined for violation of duty and still the vote be rightfully counted.

In the present case we do not believe the failure to reënact the provision that "any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this act shall be fraudulent and void," was the result of oversight. They were about to adopt the Australian system with at least twelve safeguards against fraudulent voting. They knew the law of their own State as laid down in Ledbetter vs. Hall (92 Mo., 422), and preferred to leave the enforcement of their election law to the good sense of the people and the construction of the courts rather than to make mere aids and helps to justice formidable instruments in the hands of politicians for the defeat of justice. And that brings me to say that if there is any fraud in this case it must have reference to the omission of one of these judges to write his initials on the ballot.

If that will defeat an election then 937 votes may have been nullified intentionally, and the defeated candidate counted in without corrupting a single voter. Such a system might be entitled, "Political chicanery made easy and comparatively safe; for particulars see case of O'Neill vs. Joy." With such a construction of the law the corrupting of a single officer would make it possible to defeat any election, and the greater the number of safeguards to be complied with the greater the opportunity for manipulation and fraud.

Turning now from this particular view let us take a more comprehensive survey of the case and of its surroundings. It was tried before the returning board at the city of St. Louis, a city which is not only the commercial but the legal metropolis of the State of Missouri. That that board had before it the statutes of the State, the Supreme Court decisions, and all the law that is contained in McCreary on Elections, together with all the facts in the case, can easily be presumed. The candidates and the electors not only had every opportunity to be heard before the board, but access to the highest courts of the State. For reasons satisfactory to themselves the returning board have decided that every ballot was sufficiently identified and marked. From this decision no appeal was taken, and the certificate of election was awarded to Charles F. Joy.

The defeated candidate comes here and asks that the unquestioned majority vote of his district shall be turned down, and that the honest vote of nearly 1,000 electors of the State be thrown out, through no fault of their own, but upon the most barren and bloodless technicality that ever floated into the House of Representatives. If there was any pretense of fraud, if there was any merit whatever in this contention, this House, as a part of a supervising government, charged with constitutional duties, might properly inquire at least to ascertain whether a fair trial had been had. But I submit that it is beneath the dignity of this House to take from the Missouri waste basket a case thrown there, because it was without merit, and spit upon because it was an outrage on justice, and grant it a hearing here that it dare not risk in the courts of its own State.

In surveying the field of American politics it is obvious that too much care can not be bestowed upon maintaining the just balance between the local and general governments. The right of local self-government, properly defined, is as essential to the preservation of our liberties as the supremacy of the General Government. For it is possible to conceive of a civilization that shall center, not in armies or navies, but around the home, the church, and the school.

The extent to which man in his individual capacity can be trusted and honored is the true measure of that advancing civilization. To disfranchise the great metropolis of Missouri on a quibble is to turn back the hands of progress on the dial of the Republic; is to emphasize the Capitol at Washington and ignore Jefferson City; is in effect to put a new battalion in the field and spread discouragement over unfortunate provinces; is to put on the records of this House a precedent, the citation of which may some day help a tyrant to establish a throne.

Two principles which are indeed correlative, but which have been unfortunately used in antagonism, are fundamental in this Republic: One is great, powerful, and central; the other kind, beneficent, and universal. One executes the will of man as lightning does the will of God; the other descends like a summer shower upon hill and valley and mountain-side. One is Power, clad in armor, standing in the van of a new civilization; the other is Liberty, unawed by dictation, seated upon the white throne of Peace, and most radiant at the noonday hour of human progress.

Hannibal, when a prisoner at Rome, was allowed to visit Carthage on his promise that he would return again to prison. When he began his preparations to return his countrymen besought him to remain, urging that a promise made under such circumstances was not binding; but he would not violate his word of honor and returned to prison and to death.

The contestant in this case entered into a solemn agreement at the time of the recount, and pleged himself that no ballot should be thrown out on account of informality, and that he would abide by the intention of the voter throughout the entire count. (See Record, pp. 56 and 70.) To-day the temptation is strong to trample the votes of his countrymen under his feet and rise on their supposed mistake to a seat in this House. If he possesses the Carthagenian spirit he will scorn the temptation, stand by his agreement, and win for himself a name of honor. But if, in a moment of weakness, his itching hand takes the partisan gift, he will learn too late that beyond the Mississippi dwell a people who, in their determination to avenge the outrage, will break down all party lines, and teach the offender that none can escape—

> The patient search and vigil long.
> Of him who treasures up a wrong.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, at the Congressional election held in November, 1892, in the Eleventh Congressional district of the State of Missouri, Joy and O'Neill were opposing candidates for Congress, which resulted in Joy's receiving, as shown by the official returns, a majority of 67 votes over O'Neill, upon which a certificate of election was duly issued to him. This constitutes his title to the seat now occupied by him in this Congress. To destroy Joy's title to his seat O'Neill prosecutes this contest. The first step taken in the contest proceedings was to have a recount of the ballots. This met the approval of both parties, who seemed at the time to be willing to accept the result of the recount as a settlement of this contest, neither desiring to claim a seat in this House unless based upon the majority vote of the electors of their district. This was certainly commendable in both parties, and should meet the approval of all men who esteem right and justice above victory.

The ballots cast at sixty-two voting precincts, being all the precincts in the district but four, were opened and counted. It is conceded the ballots counted were the ballots cast, the result of which was to increase Joy's majority from 67 to 212. This increase of his majority over the official count arises from the fact that during the recount it was found that a great many ballots were scratched. It was therefore agreed by Joy and O'Neill that the intention of the voter should be taken in all cases where from the face of the ballot it could be determined for whom the voter intended to vote, and his vote should be counted for Joy or O'Neill as the case might be. This resulted in counting a great many votes that were not counted by the precinct officers.

This agreement was called by the parties, as appears from the record, "agreed intentions." It seems, however, that after the recount the contestant became possessed of a second thought to accomplish his object, and that was to throw out of the count 1,649 ballots that were cast by legally constituted voters at precincts 98, 95, 61, and 39, not for any act of commission or omission of the parties casting the ballots, but for the innocent technical omission of the two judges of election to write their names or initials or number the ballots in the order in which they were received upon the back of each ballot before they were deposited. The failure of the election officers to do one or all of these things the contestant insists, under the law of Missouri, forfeits the ballot and disfranchises the voter. The majority of the committee seem not to be willing to go quite so far, but are willing to compromise and join O'Neill in throwing out of the count 937 ballots, as shown by the following table taken from the fifth page of their report, as follows:

Number of ballots received by the contestant and contestee, which were either not properly signed by the distributing judges or not numbered by the receiving judges, as required by law.

	Joy.	O'Neill.
Precinct 98.
Ballots with only one initial	119	106
Ballots with no number and one initial	64	38
Ballots with no number and two initials	43	45
Ballots with no number and no initial	1	2
Ballots with number and no initials	0	1
Total illegal ballots	229	192
Precinct 61.
Ballots with only one initial	362	138
Precinct 39.
Ballots with only one initial	16	.....
	607	330

In this indiscriminate slaughter of the right of suffrage O'Neill loses 330 votes and Joy loses 607 votes, a gain for O'Neill of 277 votes, which gives him a majority of 210 on the basis of the official count. This result is required, we are told by the majority, in order to satisfy the mandatory provisions of the election laws of Missouri, which are attempted to be collated on page 4 of the report of the majority for the information of the House, as follows:

In section 11 of the act of April 4, 1891, it is expressly provided that—

> Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear.

In section 1005, Revised Statutes, 1889, it is provided that—

> No ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted.

In section 4671, Revised Statutes, 1889, chapter 60, it is further enacted:

> Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and void.

Section 8 of the act of April 4, 1891, reads as follows:

> On any day of election of public officers in any election district, each qualified elector shall be entitled to receive from the judges of election one ballot. It shall be the duty of such judges of election to deliver such ballot to the elector. Before delivering any ballot to the elector the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil, and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot except the number of the ballot.

The majority say—

> These provisions of the law of Missouri are plainly and emphatically mandatory. This is too clear for discussion, and we refrain from citing authorities or quoting decisions in support of a proposition so free from doubt.

It is at this point in the case that the committee divides. If we are to ignore the will of the electors and decide this case upon the technicalities of the Missouri law, and I believed the law of Missouri to be as stated in the majority report and as insisted by my distinguished colleague on the committee, Col. PATTERSON, I would not stand on this floor for a single moment in defense of Joy's election. It is of importance to note at this time that this was the first election held throughout the State under the new election law known as the Australian system, to which we will call attention further on. Upon a careful study of the Missouri statutes governing elections, keeping in view the radical changes in the system of holding elections introduced by the new law, I am forced to the conclusion that sections 1005 and 4671 and the mandatory provisions of the statutes referred to by the majority, being a part of the sections just referred to, were superseded and repealed by the provisions of the new law and were not in force at the time of the holding of the election in controversy.

It appears that prior to 1889 Missouri had substantially two election systems—one applied to the city of St. Louis and to all other cities containing a population of 100,000 and over, and the other to the remainder of the State. The elections were all held under the old system, where each party or set of candidates furnished their own ballots, and the voter procured his own ticket and prepared it to suit himself. Now, section 1005 is a part of the old local law that applied to elections held in the city of St. Louis, and never applied to the general election system of the State. It reads as follows:

SEC. 1005. Ballot boxes—Process of voting.—The recorder of voters shall provide two ballot boxes for each election precinct, one of which shall be numbered No. 1, and the other No. 2, and it shall be the duty of the judges of election to select from their number two who shall be designated and known as "receiving judges," and two who shall be designated and known as "counting judges." The two receiving judges shall receive the ballots of each elector, and shall, upon receipt thereof, pronounce in an audible voice the name of the voter, and if the judges shall be satisfied that the person offering to vote is a legal voter, his ballot shall be taken and numbered in the order he offers to vote, and the ballot shall be folded, and one of the judges shall place the registration number on the back of the ballot, and then drew a horizontal line under it, and shall place the number of the ballot in the order in which it was voted, thus: ⅟; said numbers shall be announced in a plain and audible voice by the judge, loud enough to be heard by the bystanders outside the polling place, and the ballot shall then be deposited in the ballot box, which shall be securely closed for the period of one hour after the opening of the polls.

The clerks of the election shall enter the voting number of the ballot, and the word "voted," or "rejected," as the case may be, opposite the voter's name on the registration list furnished to them. At the expiration of such hour, the receiving judges shall deliver said ballot box number one to the counting judges, who shall immediately deliver over to the receiving judges ballot box number two, which shall thereupon be securely closed, in which all ballots received, until the ballots in ballot box number one are counted, shall be deposited; and after the counting judges have counted the ballots in ballot box number one, they shall deliver the box to the receiving judges, and the counting judges shall count the ballots in ballot box number two, and so on, alternating whenever the counting judges complete the count of the ballots in any box, until all the ballots cast are counted.

All ballots shall be taken out and counted in the presence of all the judges and clerks, and party representatives, in the manner provided by law, and it shall be the duty of the counting judges to announce to the electors present the total number of votes polled at the close of each hour, but no information or statement of any kind shall be given or made by the judges or clerks of election revealing the number of votes received by any candidate at such election, or the name of any person who has or the name of any person who has not voted, or any information tending to show the state of the polls: Provided, That each political party shall have the right to select one representative to be present with the judges of election from the opening to the closing of the polls, who may challenge any person offering to vote, but shall not interfere with the judges or clerks in the discharge of their duties. Said representatives shall make oath before the judges of election that they will not, directly or indirectly, give any information showing the state of the polls: Provided further, that no ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted, and that the judges shall, in the presence of the electors, examine the ballot boxes at the opening of the polls, and before any ballots are received, to see that they are empty; and at the close of the polls the judges shall continue to count until all the ballots are counted, without removing from the polling place.

The majority takes the expression "No ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted," just ten words, from this section containing over five hundred words, and puts those into their report as the law applicable to the official ballot under the new law of Missouri, which requires a very different indorsement on the back of the ballot than that required by the section just read, to which we will call attention further on. The words as used in this section, "A ballot not numbered as herein provided," can have but one meaning, and that is the number of the ballot, the horizontal line, and the registration number. No amount of jugglery with words can give it any other.

Section 4671 is a part of the old law that was of general application throughout the State. It reads as follows:

SEC. 4671. Ballot shall contain, what.—Each voter at any election shall, in full view, deliver to one of the judges of election a single ballot, which shall be a piece of white paper, on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons voted for, with a designation of the office which he or they may be intended to fill. Said ballot shall not bear upon it any device whatever, nor shall there be any writing or printing thereon, except the names of persons and the designations of the office to be filled, leaving a margin on either side of the printed matter for substituting names. Each ballot may bear a plain written or printed caption thereon, expressing its political character, but on all such ballots the caption or headlines shall not in any manner be designed to mislead the voter as to the name or names thereunder. Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent, and the same shall not be counted. (Revised Statutes 1879, section 5193—d.)

This section defines a ballot, what shall be printed on the face of it. Section 1005 prescribes what shall be put upon the back of it. This constitutes an old law ballot complete. "Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent" means a ballot not conforming to the definition in the section just read where these words are found, and not to the new law ballot as claimed by the majority. I have given these sections of the old laws in full in order that the House may see their import and the connection and meaning of the quotations therefrom in the majority report. The form of ballot provided by the new law is set out in section 4773, as follows:

SEC. 4773. Ballots to contain, what.—Every ballot printed under the provisions of this article shall contain the name of every candidate whose nomination for any office specified in the ballot has been certified or filed according to the provisions of this article, and no other names. The names of candidates nominated by each party shall be grouped together upon the proper ballot, and each group be headed by the name of the political party by which the candidates composing said groups are placed in nomination. Every ballot shall also contain the name of the party or principle which the candidates represent, as contained in the certificates of nomination. Underneath the name of each candidate shall be left a blank space large enough to contain a written name. (Amended, Laws 1891, page 134.)

This constitutes a complete ballot under the new law; that is, so far as the face of the ballot is concerned.

It is also provided by section 4785 "that every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received;" and section 4780 requires "that the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil, and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot except the number of the ballot. These sections give the form of the ballot, and what indorsements shall be placed upon the back of the ballot under the new Australian law. We see that the form of ballot required by the new law is very different from the form required by the old law. It would have been a fraudulent ballot under the old law, and the forms of ballot required under the old law would be a fraudulent ballot under the new law as well.

Hence, the absurdity of the contention that the provisions of of the old law as to the form of ballot and writing on the back thereof, to which I have called attention, are still in full force and applicable to the ballot under the present election system in Missouri is apparent. Were it not wicked, I would be almost persuaded at times to believe the chief strength of the very able report of the majority lies not in the law, but innocently concealed in the fifth line of the report, in the following words: "The contestant a Democrat and the contestee a Republican." In 1889 the Legislature of Missouri passed an act substituting what is known as the Australian ballot system in all cities and towns containing a population of 5,000 and upward for the old system, which act was amended in certain of its sections in 1891, and as amended was made to apply to the whole State and repealing all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith, thus giving to Missouri for the first time so far as the history of this case is concerned a complete and uniform system of elections throughout the State.

This new law provides a complete system, from the nomination of candidates, the furnishing of tickets, their form, what they shall contain on their face and back, to and including the duties of the several officers of election, which we have heretofore stated. I insist that the new system is a plain substitute for the old system and repeals the old law so far as it is in conflict with the new law, and therefore repeals sections 1005 and 4671. I know that the repeal of statutes by implication is not favored by the courts, yet courts universally hold where there is a new system created by legislation, as in this case, for the accomplishment of a given purpose in place of an old or prior system it operates as a repeal of the prior law; and it is not necessary that the new enactment should cover the entire ground of the preceding law to be considered exclusive. (Traly vs. Tuffy, 134 U. S., 207–223; 16 Gratton, 1–11.)

Section 4785 of the new law prescribes the duty of the judges of election as to the depositing of the ballots, which reads as follows:

SEC. 4785. Ballot not to be deposited without names of judges. Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges, as hereinbefore provided for, does not appear. (Amended Laws 1891, p. 135.)

Now, if we are correct in our conclusions that the new system suspends the old system so far as they cover the same subject-matter or are in conflict with each other, we have no affirmative legislative declaration as to what consequences shall follow the failure of the judges of election to write their names or initials and the number on the back of the ballot as required by the provisions of the section just read other than the punishment that may be imposed upon such judges which may be, if the neglect is willful, imprisonment in the county jail for a term not less than six months, or by fine of not less than $250 and not more than $3,000, or both such fine and imprisonment.

The proper construction to be given section 4785 is the vital and controlling question in the case. Are the provisions of that section mandatory in the sense that the failure of the election judges to write their names or initials on the back of the ballot operates as a forfeiture of the ballot and a disfranchisement of the voter? I do not think the new statute will warrant such construction: or that the Legislature ever intended that such consequences should follow; if so, it would have so stated in the law. The majority feeling that that result does not follow by force of the provisions of the new law, have gone to the dead letter of the old law for that power, as we have seen.

The old law when in life imposed the penalty of forfeiture and disfranchisement, which the supreme court of Missouri characterized as a harsh and unjust provision. With this decision as a part of the contemporaneous history before the Legislature at the time of the enactment of the new law, and the absence of such a provision in all of its sections, it must be presumed it was intentionally omitted by the lawmaking power, and that the new law fully expresses the legislative intent, and matters not expressed therein must be deemed to have been excluded.

I submit that the supreme court of Missouri, in the case of Bowers vs. Smith, 111 Missouri, 45, has given a rule of construction of the Missouri election law that is applicable to this case. If we are correct in this, the contestant is without remedy. The case referred to was a statutory contest to determine the rights of the parties to the office of sheriff of Pettis County, Mo. The contestant in that case contended that the ballots cast in the city of Sedalia should be thrown out and not counted, for the reason that the official ballots furnished by the county clerk, and used at the voting places in that city, contained the names of the candidates of the Union Labor party, and that that political party had not polled 3 per cent of the vote cast at the last general election, as required by law, and was therefore illegal and should not be counted. The statute on this subject makes it the duty of the county clerks to provide printed ballots, and that the ballots shall contain the names of the candidates of all political parties that cast 3 per cent of the vote at the last general election, which names shall be grouped together upon each ballot, and that ballots other than those printed by the respective clerks of the county courts, according to the provision of the statute, should not be cast or counted.

In passing upon this case it was conceded that the ballots were liable to the infirmity charged; that they did not conform to the requirements of the statute in that they contained the names of the candidates of the Union Labor party, which did not cast 3 per cent of the votes at the last general election; hence they were in the face and in violation of the strict letter of that mandatory provision of the statute, "should not be cast or counted." Yet the supreme court, in considering the question whether this omission of the clerk should work a forfeiture of the ballots and disfranchise the voter, said, in course of its opinion, "that the living question was what construction should be given the Missouri statute and to what extent the constitutional rights of voters depends upon the correctness of the county clerk in preparing the official ballot; and it might be proper to note just here that the right to vote is guaranteed by the constitution of Missouri.

The court further says in the same opinion:

That the ballot reform law was intended to improve the methods for giving expression to the popular will in the choice of public officers and should be construed to promote, not destroy, the great object in view in its passage. If for every error of a county clerk, or harmless irregularity in election proceedings, citizens having no control over are to lose their right of choosing public officers, the "reform ballot" instead of being found an improvement of the machinery of popular government will justly be denounced as a snare to entrap the unsuspecting voter. While it is well enough to insist on a proper and strict performance of duty by officers conducting elections, we are not of the number of those who imagine that such performance will be promoted by disfranchising the whole body of electors in any locality for errors such as here charged, and the court held these ballots valid under their new election system.

This would be a stronger case, upon the strict letter of the law, for the contestant than his own now before us. In this case the ballots asked to be rejected did not contain the names or initials of both judges or number it is claimed. This naming or initialing and numbering of the ballot is done by the election officers, and not by the voters. All the voter is required to do is to prepare the face of his ballot in the way he desires to cast it, and fold it so the names or initials of the judges may appear, and hand it to the judges to be deposited. Now, the only command of the statute in this case is, "No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges do not appear." No mention is made of the number. The command in the Bowers case is much stronger: "Shall not be cast or counted," if it did not conform to the requirements of the law.

The reasons for a strict construction in the case of Bowers, in addition to the imperative command of the statute, is also much stronger than in this case; in that case it was to prevent fraudulent ballots from being published and voted during the election; in this, it is simply to preserve their identity after the election. We must not forget in this case the statute does not state what shall be the effect if the judges of election do deposit a ballot that does not contain the names or initials of both judges. To reject the ballots and disfranchise the parties casting them we must add that power to the statute by construction. On this subject the supreme court of Missouri has also spoken, as follows:

When the Legislature has not plainly declared such a purpose, we think it should not be imported into the statute by construction.

I feel like I am safe in saying that no case can be found where the voter has been deprived of his vote by the omission of an election officer to perform a duty imposed by law where no injury has resulted to anyone as in this case, unless the statute in terms provide that such omissions shall render the ballot void or prohibits its being counted. The chief purpose of our elective system is to obtain a fair expression of the popular will, as paramount in importance to the formal steps to reach that end. That purpose has been accomplished in this case. The suffrages of a free people whose government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed should be guarded with a jealous care, and should be so regarded by their Representatives and by all who are intrusted with the power of preserving their sovereign rights.

Speaking for myself I would, from the standpoint of good conscience, that justice might be done, brush aside all technicalities of the law and stand by the will of the majority of the electors of the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, as expressed at the ballot box. In this case, where it is conceded the election was fair, no one voted who was not entitled to vote and no one deprived of a vote that was entitled to vote. I believe this House, before it commits the unconscionable act of disfranchising 937 legal voters, should rise up and assert its constitutional prerogative of judging of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and duplicate by its act the certificate issued by the governor of Missouri to Joy of his election to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress of the United States. The wisdom of this suggestion may not be apparent to the House. We may turn Joy out if we will, and let O'Neill take his seat. But uneasy must rest his crown when he reflects that he won it by the assassination of the suffrages of 937 free American citizens. We may turn Joy out, but the people of his district will rebuke the act by returning him again not with a majority of 67, but with a majority equal at least to the number whose political rights we have denied as the price of our injustice.

Mr. DANIELS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the attention of the House for just one moment, to present one idea in addition to that which I presented in the consideration of the rule.

The House will see, after having listened to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES], that he has absolutely made no addition to the facts which I originally presented to the House, nor any contradiction of them. I desire to add to what I have already said a suggestion arising out of a copy of the statutes of the State of Missouri which has been scattered broadcast over the House. Section 4780 of the statutes provides:

Before delivering any ballot to the elector, the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil.

In section 4785 it is provided:

No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear.

So that every voter whose ballot it is proposed to cast out here was presented by the judges of the election with a ballot which contained the initials of but one of the judges, the fault, not of the electors, but of the judge. When the voter presented it to the judge whose duty it was to receive it that judge was forbidden to deposit that ballot because it lacked the initials of the two judges.

Why was that statute couched in that language? It does not say that he shall not count the ballot. It says that he shall not deposit the ballot. If he refused to deposit the ballot the voter would at once have known that he had an improper ballot, and might have an opportunity to rectify his mistake and deposit a suitable ballot. When the judge failed to notify the elector, and deposited the ballot, the elector had every reason to believe that he had cast a proper vote. If the judge had handed him back his ballot, refusing to deposit it, there would have been an opportunity offered him to obtain the signature or initials of the other judge.

Now, the elector being entirely guiltless of anything but mistake, the judge having misdirected him, the judge who is to receive the ballot having failed to comply with the law, this House is asked to disfranchise 900 voters in that contest. It seems to me that it is impossible to be believed.

Mr. DENSON. Look at this [exhibiting a paper] and read it, and it will show you whether they are going to do it or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has two minutes remaining.

Mr. DANIELS. I yield that to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

[Mr. MCCALL withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has thirteen minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Has the other side exhausted its time?

The SPEAKER. It has

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, the right to vote is not a natural right. It is purely a conventional regulation, which society has adopted in organizing itself into a state. The state creates laws and makes regulations for its safety and its comfort. The prime object of society is to provide some mode by which laws can be created and enforced, and government established and maintained for the safety, happiness, and prosperity of all the people.

In this country the election has been resorted to as the primary means of accomplishing these purposes.

An election is a special proceeding. The law providing for it is a special act, and is always to be strictly construed. The law is the offspring of the government, binding upon the citizen and the government alike, and if the citizen in attempting to vote loses his vote without neglect on his part, it is the government's fault and responsibility. Let us look at this case in the light of these principles. All that has been complained of by the very able gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and by others about electors being disfranchised in Missouri, if it is true, is attributable to the law of the State of Missouri, and to the officers that Missouri has selected to administer her law. We can not make or unmake the law of Missouri, but we must administer it as we find it.

The minority of the committee have stated this case, Mr. Speaker, and I invite the attention of the House to that statement in order that it may be seen how far some gentlemen who have spoken here have drifted away from the real point in controversy. The very able and accomplished gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS], in stating the views of the minority of the Committee on Elections, says:

> The law of the State of Missouri required each vote to be indorsed with the initials of the two judges—> who were required to pass it to the person appearing and intending to vote.

Not the initials of one judge, but the initials of the two judges—

It was the business of the elector when he received his ballot to look and see that it contained the initials of the two judges. Such was the law of the State of Missouri, and it was the bounden duty of the elector to obey that law. It was his duty to be careful that he did not lose his vote. Again, the gentleman from New York says in the minority report:

> There was a failure in precinct 98 and precinct 61 to place this indorsement upon the ballots.

Mr. REED. Suppose the judge had placed the wrong initials on the ballot?

Mr. BROWN. It would not have changed the case from what it would have been if he had put none on the ballot.

Mr. REED. And the ballot would have to be rejected?

Mr. BROWN. Undoubtedly so, in the opinion of every man who believes in the proper administration of the law of elections.

Mr. REED. So that the voter must take notice of the initials?

Mr. BROWN. Exactly. Is the gentleman from Maine so forgetful that he does not know that when he goes to the election officer to get his ballot that it is his duty to look and see that the ballot has been prepared according to law?

Again, Mr. Speaker, calling attention to the duty that the law of Missouri imposes upon all electors of that great and good State, I refer to section 9 of the act of 1891. All agree that this act was in force at the election in question, and is in force now. This act provides, in speaking of the duty of the elector, that—

> After preparing his ballot the elector shall fold the same so that the face of the ballot will be concealed and the initials of the judges may be seen.

This is another duty enjoined by law upon all the voters of the State of Missouri. It is the business of the voter of Missouri to discharge this duty according to law. This is a duty enjoined by law upon all electors of the State, and each voter owed it to the State whose citizen he was as well as to himself to see that he cast a ballot free from all suspicion, a ballot which could not be afterwards called in question. And this he could only do by being careful to see that his ballot was properly numbered and had the initials of the judges on it.

Mr. Speaker, it is conceded by the very able gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] that these statutes are mandatory and not merely advisory or directory; so that question is out of the way. It is conceded that the words that I am now about to read are a part of the statute of 1891, and are and were applicable to the election in controversy. The language of the statute is:

> Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it is received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear.

We all agree that this law is and was applicable to the election under consideration. "But," says the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS], able and ingenious as he is, "that simply imposes a duty upon the election officers, and the elector is in no wise connected with the performance of that duty." I have already shown, I think, that the elector was connected with the performance of that duty; that the elector owed it to the State to be connected with the performance of that duty—owed it to the State as well as to himself in the exercise of the great right which the State had conferred upon him. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the point that my friend from New York makes is too small to live long. He says that the judge should not put that ballot in the box. Why? Because the ballot was not a legal ballot according to the law of Missouri.

Very well; but an illegal, false, fraudulent, spurious ballot has found its way into the ballot box. It is clearly discernible from the legal ballot. But, says the gentleman from New York, this bastard ballot is here; it is without parentage or respectability, but you must count it all the same in determining the election of a Representative to Congress. As I said before, upon the mere statement of the matter that is too small a point to grow to any great dimensions. It is fundamental that the ballot box must be purged of all fraudulent or illegal ballots.

The remarks of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HAYES] have made it a matter of supererogation that I should speak upon the subject of the repeal of these statutes; but just a word in addition to what he has said. So far as the provisions of this act of 1889 which might be applicable to this case are concerned, the contention of the other side is that these provisions of that act have been repealed by implication of law. On the contrary, we contend that they are in full force and effect. There is no general repealing clause to the act of 1891. In addition to that our contention is strengthened by the fact that this act of 1891, in its first section, explicitly recites certain sections of the act of 1889 that it intends to repeal, beginning with section 4762 and ending with section 4794.

In the case of each of these enumerated sections intended to be repealed the act substitutes another section and gives it the very number of the repealed section. Therefore I contend that this act of 1891 embodied itself in the act of 1889, and is part and parcel of that act.

Mr. DANIELS. Does not the act of 1891, by the last or next to the last section, provide that all laws inconsistent with it are thereby repealed?

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman is right as to that. The next to the last section provides that—

> All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Now, if I am correct in saying that this act of 1891 is embodied in the act of 1889 (and I think there can be no mistake about that), then the two acts, so to speak, form but one; and wherever words are found in this act referring to the election laws of Missouri, they refer to chapter 60 of the act of 1889 of Missouri's election laws. Now, let me state very briefly what the law is on the subject of repeal by implication. Where the subsequent act legislates upon the same subject-matter contained in the former law, without an express repealing clause, only so much of the former law is repealed as stands in a position of antagonism and absolute repugnancy to the last act. It is the duty of the courts to construe the former act and the amendatory or repealing act as being in pari materia, and to make all parts of each law stand, except where there is an absolute repugnancy between the last and the former law. In each case the former law must give way.

Let us see if the parts of the election law of 1889 of Missouri were not in force at the time the election was held, as is contended for by the contestant.

In section 1005 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri it is provided:

> No ballot not numbered as herein provided shall be counted.

This is a part of the act to which the act of April 4, 1891, is supplementary or amendatory. Will the contestee or any of his friends point out wherein these words of the act of 1889 are antagonistic or repugnant to the act of 1891? The act of 1891 is entirely silent on the subject of numbering ballots. It is idle to say that the act of 1891 covers the entire subject-matter contained in the act of 1889. It is worse than idle to say that the act of 1891 creates an entirely new system of conducting elections. It simply adds some new features to the election law of 1889, and repeals so much of that law only as is in conflict with the new features added.

The honorable gentleman from New York, Judge DANIELS, says these words of the act of 1889 which I have quoted have reference to the ballot used before the act of 1891 was passed; that they have reference to the ballots which the political parties prepared for and furnished to the voters. So they did so long as those ballots were in use, but when an official ballot by reason of the act of 1891 took their place, then these words became applicable to the official ballot. If the Legislature of Missouri had not so intended it would have repealed them by the act of 1891. The same reasons with additional ones exist for the numbering of the official ballots that existed for the numbering of the ballots formerly used.

In section 4671 of the Statutes of Missouri, 1889, it is stated:

Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and void.

For reasons already stated these words of the act of 1889 are still in force. The act of 1891, as I have shown, is a part of the act of 1889. It has placed itself in the very body of the act of 1889. Therefore the ballots not properly numbered and not containing the initals of the judges are fraudulent and void. The friends of the contestee must insist on counting ballots which are fraudulent and void in their efforts to maintain contestee in his seat here.

Section 4780 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1889, chapter 60, as amended by section 8 of the act of April 4, 1891, reads as follows:

On any day of election of public officers in any election district, each qualified elector shall be entitled to receive from the judges of election one ballot. It shall be the duty of such judges of election to deliver such ballot to the elector. Before delivering any ballot to the elector the two judges of election having charge of the ballots shall write their names or initials upon the back of the ballot with ink or indelible pencil, and no other writing shall be on the back of the ballot except the number of the ballot.

It is plain to be seen what the duties of the electors and officers are in respect to the conduct and holding of elections in Missouri. The ballots must be numbered and the initials of the judges must be written on them. There is a concurrent duty resting on the voters and election judges to see that this is done, and if the election fails, or the result of it is otherwise from what it would have been, the fault, if any there be, is with Missouri, her laws, her people, and her election officers. Congress can not intervene to strike down the laws Missouri has made for herself, nor relieve her people and election officers from the duties her laws impose.

My friend, Judge DANIELS, further says in his report for the minority of the Committee on Elections:

The law of the State of Missouri also required each vote to be indorsed with the initials of the two judges, who were required to pass it to the person appearing and intending to vote. There was a failure in precinct 98 and precinct 61 to place this indorsement upon the ballots. But they were indorsed with the initials of one of the judges, and placed in the ballot box after the return of the ballot by the voter, with only this single initial upon the vote. In precinct 39 there were also 16 ballots indorsed in the same manner, with the initials of but one of the judges, and if these ballots, in addition to those not numbered at all, are all to be rejected, then it is a conceded fact that Mr. O'Neill, and not Mr. Joy, has been elected to this seat in Congress.

All else, says Judge DANIELS, must be resolved in favor of Contestant O'Neill except the mere question as to whether the ballots not numbered and not containing the initials of the judges shall be rejected, and if that question stands in his favor that he and not Joy has been elected to this seat in Congress.

In section 4785, Revised Statutes, 1889, as amended by section 11 of the act of April 4, 1891, it is expressly provided that—

"Every ballot shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received. No judge of election shall deposit any ballot upon which the names or initials of the judges as hereinbefore provided for does not appear."

I submit with great deference and respect to the House that the laws and parts of laws of the State of Missouri, set out in the report of the Committee on Elections in that case and referred to by me at this time, are in full force and effect, and that they clearly stamp the ballots in question as being fraudulent and void, and that they should be rejected from the count.

This being so, in the language of the very able lawyer, judge, and gentleman from New York, Judge DANIELS, "then it is a conceded fact that Mr. O'Neill and not Mr. Joy has been elected to this seat in Congress."

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, the debate is now closed. The first question is upon the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH] as a substitute for the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask unanimous consent that two gentlemen who have not had the opportunity to address the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS], may be allowed to insert their remarks in the RECORD, and that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] may be allowed to extend the remarks delivered by him.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. WAUGH. I ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHEELER] also have leave to print remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. I request that gentlemen who have spoken in support of the majority report may be permitted to extend their remarks.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to retain his seat in this House.

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was not legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. A division of the question being called for, the vote will first be taken on the first of these resolutions.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 147, not voting 105; as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KYLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COKE, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the bill for the relief of William Ludgate, in the Fifty-first Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules, and transmitted to the House of Representatives.

IMPORTS FROM COUNTRIES WITH DEPRECIATED CURRENCY.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the cash value, determined by the average price of the New York and London markets, of all imports classified under their respective heads from all countries having a depreciated paper as a circulating medium during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; and also a table showing by months the rate of exchange with those countries during the same period.

CAPT. SCRIVEN'S REPORT ON NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is directed to send to the Senate a report on the Nicaraguan Canal in its military aspects, made by Capt. George P. Scriven, now on file in the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2561) for the relief of Moses W. Carpenter, of Johnson County, Ark., Mexican war veteran;

A bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother;

A bill (H. R. 4780) to pension Thankful Robbins;

A bill (H. R. 5860) to amend sections 4, 6, and 10 of the act of February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 574) for the relief of Dwight Hall;

A joint resolution (S. R. 8) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the settlement of the accounts of Special Agents Moore and Woodson, under the treaty of 1854, with the Delaware Indians, etc.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 37) to provide for the printing of a history and digest of the international arbitrations to which the United States was a party, and for other purposes.

ISSUE OF BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PEFFER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to prepare and report as soon as practicable a bill to repeal all laws authorizing or permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government, and to prohibit any and all such issues in future without express authority by act of Congress first had and obtained.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the resolution may lie over until the next legislative day and retain its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LABOR UPON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday adopted the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. FRYE, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence between the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and engineers in charge of works of public improvement being prosecuted by the General Government relating to the discharge or employment of individuals upon such works where such discharge or employment has been ordered against the recommendation of the local engineer in charge, and that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers be directed to report whether in their opinions the discharge and employment of subordinate officers and laborers upon works of public improvement should be made for political reasons.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the resolution which has been read.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

DONATION LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. DOLPH. Yesterday morning I reported from the Committee on Public Lands House bill No. 69, which is purely a local matter, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be announced by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read at length for information.

Mr. DOLPH. As the bill is reported with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause, I ask that the amendment simply may be read, which is the bill to be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Public Lands report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That in all cases where persons under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," approved September 27, 1850, or the various acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, have made proof of settlement on tracts of land in either of the States of Oregon, Washington, or Idaho, and given notice, as required by law, that they claimed such lands as donations, but have failed to execute and file in the proper land offices proof of their continued residence on and cultivation of the lands so settled upon and claimed, so as to entitle them to patents therefor, such claimants shall have, and they are hereby given, until the 1st day of January, 1896, the right to make and file their final proofs and fully establish their rights to donations of lands under the aforesaid act of Congress, and no longer; and all claimants who shall fail to make and file final proof and perfect their claims to lands, as donations under the acts aforesaid, before the said 1st day of January, 1896, shall thereafter be held to have abandoned their claims to the lands embraced in their notices: Provided, That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act notices shall be mailed to all such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, where their names and residences are known or by reasonable diligence can be ascertained by the register and receiver of the land office for the district in which the donation claims are situated, and shall be published at least once a week for four consecutive weeks in at least three newspapers of general circulation published in the land district, requiring such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, and all persons making claim to such donation claims, describing such claims, to appear and make final proof for such claims within the time herein provided, and that in default of such final proof such donation claims will be held to have been abandoned.

SEC. 2. That all such donation claims held to have been abandoned for failure to make and file final proof as hereinbefore provided shall be restored to the public domain and shall be subject to disposal under the then existing laws providing for the disposition of the public lands: Provided, That where any such donation claims or any part thereof are claimed by descent, devise, judicial sale, grant, or conveyance, in good faith under the original claimant, and are at the date of this act, and for twenty years prior thereto have been, in the quiet adverse possession of such heir, devisee, grantee, or purchaser, or those under whom they claim, such heirs, devisees, grantees, or purchasers, upon making proof of their claims and adverse possession as aforesaid, shall be entitled to patents for the land so claimed and occupied by them: Provided further, That where any portion of any such abandoned donation claim shall have been settled upon prior to January 1, 1894, by any person under an erroneous claim of right and has been used as a bona fide residence by such settler where final proof shall not be made by the original claimant, and such settler has exhausted his or her homestead right, such settler may, within ninety days from the 1st day of January, 1896, file with the register of the land office of the district within which the lands are situate their affidavit and the affidavits of at least two disinterested witnesses establishing the facts of their bona fide settlement, occupancy, and improvement of said lands, and pay to the receiver of the proper land office $1.25 per acre for the land so settled upon, occupied, and improved, not exceeding 160 acres, and shall thereupon receive patent therefor.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the regulations governing contests in land cases, of his right to allow or direct hearings to be instituted to show that a donation claimant has abandoned the lands described in his notice, or prevent the Commissioner, when it is proven that such a claim is invalid or abandoned, from canceling the same upon the official records and thereafter disposing of the lands as a part of the public domain: Provided, That where hearings are allowed contestants shall pay the expenses incident thereto in the same manner that costs are paid in other contested land entries; and this act shall not be construed to affect any case now pending before the Land Department in which final proof has been furnished.

SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall issue the necessary rules and regulations to give full force and effect to the provisions of this act.

Before the reading of the amendment was concluded,

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, how is the bill now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] asks the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill, and the bill is being read for information.

Mr. TURPIE. I object. I object to the further reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire unanimous consent to say to the Senator from Indiana that it is purely a local measure, and it is required by the Land Office to wind up some old claims that were settled on forty years ago. It is nothing of general interest.

Mr. TURPIE. The bill is exclusively local. It ought to go back to the courts instead of being here in the Senate; and it has no privilege to be made special or to take the place of the unfinished business.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not hear a word the Senator says.

Mr. TURPIE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill being objected to, I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. It is merely a local matter and the amendment has been half read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I do not think anything but a perusal of this bill is necessary to show the objections to it upon its face. The fourth section relates wholly to the disposition of lawful rights of parties under the entry laws of the United States. It proposes to make adverse possession and to make the proofs of adverse possession under the act conclusive evidence in the issuing of patents.

All entries made under the land laws of the United States are presumed to be lawful entries. If they are not lawful, then the question of their legality is one for the courts and not for this body. I admit that it would be a great deal more expeditious and much easier to get a majority vote here on the trial of land cases than to take them into the courts of the States where the lands are situate and try them there; but I do not think such is the theory of our Government. We have all along insisted on the division of the Government into different departments, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. The legislative decides no case; it determines no rights; it does not perform, and should not perform, any of the offices of the court.

The principal section of the bill converts this Senate into a court for the purpose of trying and determining ejectment cases and for the purpose of quieting title.

I take it that there can be no consideration and has been no such consideration of this bill and no evidence in relation to the facts to be determined in it submitted here upon which the Senate could act if it had jurisdiction in the trial of titles of real estate. That is the reason I think the interest, as the Senator from Oregon says, in this bill is purely local. As I remarked, it is exclusively local; it does not belong to the Congress of the United States at all; it belongs to the courts and the juries of the States of Oregon, Idaho, and others which are recited in this bill, to determine the questions apparent in it upon the principal sections.

I hope, therefore, the bill will not pass.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] were the subcommittee having charge of this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. I see the Senator from Oregon is present, and I yield the floor to him to explain the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, this bill is to carry out the recommendations of the Land Department of the Government. It relates only to claims which were taken up forty years ago and segregated from the public domain, and affects not a foot of the public domain aside from these claims.

The principal object of the bill is to get rid of abandoned claims, that is of claims where parties under the donation act of September 27, 1850, went upon land in Oregon and gave notice of settlement, and then failed to make their final proof of four years residence and cultivation, which is required by the act. The main object of the bill is to get rid of those claims and have them declared abandoned, so that the land will be restored to the public domain and made subject to settlement. All the other provisions of the bill are to prevent any injustice being done to any claimant who has neglected to make his final proof, as the original law provided no time in which that should be done. So here is a provision that after notice all these claims shall be declared abandoned and restored to the public domain, that is providing the final proof is not made within the time named in the bill.

Then follows a provision that if a man has resided upon and has cultivated for twenty years such a donation claim, claiming under a judicial sale or deed from the original claimant, who may now be in his grave, shows a chain of title from the original donation claimant, he may show these facts in lieu of the special proof that the original claimant resided four years upon the land. This provision applies only to the case of a cultivated farm now worth probably from $10 to $40 an acre; and there is another provision that if anybody has gone in possession under an erroneous claim of title to an abandoned claim or a portion of one he may obtain title to 160 acres by paying for it. That is all there is in the bill.

The bill only, in the first place, applies to old donation claims which must have been taken up forty years ago. I think there could have been no settlement after 1854, and that would make forty years now since any claim could have been initiated. It only refers to claims taken up forty years ago upon which final proof has not been made. The object of the bill is to terminate private title to claims and declare the claims abandoned and restore the land to the public domain.

The only other provisions of the bill are to prevent injustice being done to a man who is equitably entitled to the land and who has had a home upon it being turned out and somebody else getting it. That is all there is in the bill.

The bill passed the House of Representatives without opposition, and came here, but there was so much repetition in some of the sections that the committee thought it best to substitute a new bill, and it will have to go to conference with the House.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I think I understood the honorable and learned Senator from Oregon to say that these claims were initiated over forty years ago. That is only an additional reason why there should be no legislation at this time. After claims have become so stale and antiquated, certainly there should be ample provision in the ordinary laws of the country in the limi ation of actions, and especially of real actions, to determine them without bringing them here for legislation.

The honorable and learned Senator from Oregon affects to feel great anxiety about injustice being done to actual settlers on these lands. What I propose is that the actual settlers shall be sent back to the courts of their own creation and to juries of their own selection to try the cases which are pending in this bill.

I wish to refer for a few moments to the actual language of the bill. These people can certainly suffer no injustice in the administration of the law in their own country. They are more apt to get full justice and a better administration of justice for their claims there than here.

There has nothing been heard here except the very general statement before the committee, nothing in respect to the particular cases, nothing upon which the Senate can base an adjudication in regard to the matters which the Senate, under the terms of this bill, are bound to adjudicate and to determine the title to real estate. If this title be questioned, why is any legislation needed here?

The substitute provides, beginning in section 1, line 11, after the word "Idaho," that notice shall be given—as required by law, that they claimed such lands as donations, but have failed to execute and file in the proper land offices proof of their continued residence on and cultivation of the lands so settled upon and claimed, so as to entitle them to patents therefor, such claimants shall have, and they are hereby given, until the 1st day of January, 1896, the right to make and file their final proofs and fully establish their rights to donations of lands under the aforesaid act of Congress, and no longer; and all claimants who shall fail to make and file final proof and perfect their claims to lands, as donations under the acts aforesaid, before the said 1st day of January, 1896, shall thereafter be held to have abandoned their claims to the lands embraced in their notices: Provided, That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act notices shall be mailed to all such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, etc.

It is further provided:

That where any such donation claims or any part thereof are claimed by descent, devise, judicial sale, grant, or conveyance, in good faith, under the original claimant, and are, at the date of this act and for twenty years prior thereto have been, in the quiet adverse possession of such heir, devise, grantee, or purchaser, or those under whom they claim, such heirs, devisees, grantees, or purchasers, upon making proof of their claims and adverse possession as aforesaid, shall be entitled to patents for the land so claimed and occupied by them.

Other provisions go on to make the decision of the Department in this case a finality and strip the courts of their lawful, customary, and usual jurisdiction in trying title to real estate. I do not know that I have ever heard in the Senate a bill so fully serried and saturated with objections to the jurisdiction. How can these claims be adverse except to each other? Who else has title, except those who forty years ago made some settlement there? If A holds land and B claims having made a prior settlement, who is to determine between these two claimants? Is the Senate of the United States to make such determination? Granting that we have capacity to do it, granting that we could make a better settlement, granting that we could make a juster settlement, a more equitable settlement of these claims than could the courts, are we to determine as to the title either in the individual owners or their devisees or heirs or assigns? I answer that it is simply not our province—neither our province nor our duty to make any adjustment of these adverse titles or hear or determine anything in relation to them.

This is not the ordinary language of an act of Congress in relation to the public lands. Questions in relation to the lawfulness of entry or in relation to the legality of donation or in relation to adverse possession or actual use of the premises are strictly questions at law so far as they are not modified by questions of equity, and they are no such issues as may properly be determined by the action either of a committee of the Senate or of the whole body.

I think this bill is dangerous as a precedent. I think it destroys and erases those lines between the legislative and judicial provinces and the Departments of the Government which were so wisely drawn and have been so sacredly observed both by the courts and the people of the United States under the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

I therefore renew as well as I can and as earnestly as I may my protest against even the consideration of legislation of this kind. So far from being entitled to special consideration, so far from having any claim to set aside the unfinished business and be made the special order, it is a bill, sir, which is entitled to no consideration at any time by any member of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. TURPIE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, but if he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], whom I do not see in his seat, and therefore withdraw my vote. I wish also to announce while on the floor that my colleague [Mr. BATE] is absent under the order of the Senate, and that he is paired, but I do not remember with whom.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Allen,	Dubois,	Manderson,	Quay,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Hale,	Murphy,	Squire,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Cullom,	Hunton,	Platt,	Vilas,
Davis,	Lodge,	Power,	Washburn,
Dolph,	McPherson,	Pugh,	Wilson.

NAYS—7.

Camden,	George,	Kyle,	Turpie.
Coke,	Gray,	Roach,

NOT VOTING—37.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lindsay,	Sherman,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Bate,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gordon,	Mills,	Vance,

Cameron,	Hill,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Carey,	Irby,	Palmer,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,
Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. ALLEN were appointed.

EXCLUSION OF CHINESE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back favorably House joint resolution 146, providing for a special deficiency, and to ask for its present consideration. It simply appropriates, in the language of the law, $10,000 additional to aid in the Chinese exclusion service, which the Secretary of the Treasury says is absolutely necessary to enable him to complete it within the time prescribed by law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. Res. 146) providing for the payment of salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act of May 5, 1892, as amended by the act of November 3, 1893.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The joint resolution was read, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEXARKANA AND FORT SMITH RAILWAY.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1919) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Caddo Lake at or near Mooringsport, La., and Cross Bayou, near Shreveport, La.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, line 22, after the words "to such direction and," to strike out "as nearly as practicable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MARTIN. Yesterday I reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia a bill to authorize the appointment of women as public school trustees in the District of Columbia. It provides for the appointment by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of three women as school trustees. The bill has been examined and reported favorably by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and it has the indorsement of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is only a half dozen lines in length, and can be disposed of in less than five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public school trustees in the District of Columbia, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill what is the present number of trustees?

Mr. MARTIN. I am not prepared to state the present number of trustees. The bill was prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and at their request it was presented here. It has been passed upon by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I see no objection to it at all.

Mr. HOAR. There certainly can be no objection to the appointment of women as school trustees. I do not know what is the number of school trustees in the District of Columbia and what is the proportion here proposed.

Mr. HARRIS. I can not give the Senator accurate information, but I can state to him that the three women as trustees would be a very small minority of the board.

Mr. HOAR. That is my objection. It has been said, and I suppose truly—I have never seen it contradicted—that of the whole number of teachers in all the schools in my own State 95 per cent are women. At any rate there is a vast preponderance of women among our teachers, and I suppose the same thing is true or will be true everywhere where there is a common school system in which women take their ordinary share. If that be true, I do not think the number of three, if we are going to make a provision for women as trustees, ought to be fixed as a limit, when, as the Senator from Tennessee thinks, that is a very small minority of the board.

I move to strike out the words "not exceeding three," so as to leave the matter to the discretion of the Commissioners. They are all men, and are likely to have the feeling which prevails so extensively in regard to keeping the ordinary functions of government in the hands of men. So there is no danger of their abuse of the power. I do not think there should be a legislative declaration that there shall be only a very small minority of women on the board. Let the thing take its own natural course. If it is abused we can correct it hereafter. I move to strike out the words "not exceeding three." Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Kansas to let the bill go over for this morning. There is a matter I should like consider in reference to it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be good enough to entertain my motion to amend the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be stated from the desk, and then the bill can go over if there is objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that unanimous consent has not been given for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Chair's pardon; I thought the bill had been taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read for information. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. I object.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Maryland allow the present consideration of the bill to proceed so far as to have my amendment moved?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts can offer the amendment and have it pending when the bill comes up.

Mr. HOAR. I may not be here when the bill comes up. I should like to have the amendment appear with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "appoint," strike out the words "not exceeding three;" so as to read:

Authorized to appoint women as members of the board.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. There is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from Maryland did not mean to object to the bill so far as to have my amendment moved and pending, and then let the bill go over.

Mr. GORMAN. There is no objection to that, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment is simply pending, and the bill goes over with the amendment pending.

Mr. HOAR. That is all right.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 2561) for the relief of Moses W. Carpenter, of Johnson County, Ark., Mexican war veteran;

A bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother; and

A bill (H. R. 4780) to pension Thankful Robbins.

The bill (H. R. 5860) to amend sections 4, 6, and 10, of the act of February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maryland to withhold the motion for one moment.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly, I withdraw it.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. GORMAN). Withdraw it for the present.

Mr. GORMAN. I will withdraw the motion altogether if the Senator desires.

Mr. HARRIS. There was a unanimous consent agreement that a certain matter should come up to-morrow, and I think it very important that it should be disposed of before Monday.

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

Mr. KYLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,800, to Albert E. Redstone, of Tulare County, Cal., for loss sustained by the incorporation of his preëmption claim within the limits of the Sequoia Park Reservation, Tulare County, Cal.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The SECRETARY read the following report, submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW March 14, 1894:

The Committee on Public Lands have had the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone under consideration, and report the same back without amendment, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill appropriates $2,800 to pay Albert E. Redstone for damages resulting from the passage of the act of Congress of 1890, establishing the Sequoia Park Reservation in Tulare County, Cal.

Albert E. Redstone, on the 6th of April, 1889, at the land office at Visalia, Cal., filed his preëmption declaratory statement, No. 10184, upon the north, east quarter and the south half of the northeast quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 28, township 24, range 31 east, containing 160 acres, and afterwards made extensive improvements thereon; building a house, barn, and other buildings; planting trees, shrubbery, and crops of various kinds; building a ditch over a mile long for irrigation and water power, and putting up a 12-foot water wheel, and resided upon said land with his family.

After said reservation was created, embracing the land occupied by said Redstone, the Interior Department caused said Redstone and his family to be removed therefrom, and refused to allow him to perfect his title to the same.

The committee believe the loss resulting to said Redstone by reason of these acts of the Government is fully $2,800.

The papers hereto attached are made a part of this report.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

I, Albert E. Redstone, being duly sworn, on oath depose and say, that I am the identical person who, on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1889, in the Visalia land office in the State of California, did file declaratory statement No. 1016, embracing the land described as follows: NE. ¼ NE. ¼, S. ½ NE. ¼, NW. ¼, SE. ¼ of sec. 28, T. 24 S., R. 31 E., Mount Diablo meridian, containing 160 acres of land, according to the United States Government survey.

That from the day of filing my declaratory statement, No. 1016, on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1889, until the reservation known as the Sequoia National Park was made, myself and my family resided thereon continuously; that during the time of my residence thereon I built a frame cottage 14 by 36 feet, containing three separate rooms, with porch attached; also a frame storehouse 10 by 12 feet; also a log stable with hayloft, 20 by 24 feet, 2 miles of post and rail and picket fence, an overshot water wheel to drive a mill (mill was not quite complete and finished). I planted and had growing about 4,000 vines and trees of different varieties; also 60,000 hills of choice strawberries, and a great number of other varieties of berries. I built and dug an irrigating ditch, fully a mile in length; also an improved water power. Had all necessary farm and garden implements, and wagons, mules, horses, cattle, chickens, etc.

Deponent further says, that for reason that the Sequoia National Park reservation having been made to embrace the NE. ¼ NE. ¼, S. ½ NE. ¼, and NW. ¼ SE. ¼ of section 28, T. 24 S., of R. 31 E., Mount Diablo meridian, the lands held by virtue of declaratory statement No. 1016, issued by the Visalia land office on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1889, to Albert E. Redstone, that all the foregoing described property became a loss and great ruin to himself and family.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE. [SEAL.]

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 12th day of February, 1894.

JOHN H. ROGERS,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

WHITE RIVER, March 5, 1894.

I, the undersigned, depose and say that I have been on the premises owned by Albert E. Redstone, a preëmption now within the limits of the Sequoia National Park Reservation; that I saw the following improvements made by the said Albert E. Redstone, viz: A cottage house, a stone house, a stable, 12-foot overshot water wheel, picket dooryard fence, corral, rail fences, irrigating ditch, fruit trees, grapevines, strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, barley, wheat, and many kind of vegetables; that he owned mules, horses, and cattle, farming utensils, wagons, etc., and that the said Redstone was continually making improvements on the said reservation up to the time that the said reservation was made.

That the above preëmption is in the county of Tulare and State of California.

W. D. PARSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public, this 5th day of March, 1894.

[SEAL.] J. E. SHUEY,
Notary Public in the County of Tulare, State of California.

WASHINGTON, D. C., —— ——, 1893.

Senator J. H. KYLE:

Please find the amounts of actual loss to me and my family when the "Park Reservation" was made in Tulare County, Cal., that rendered my house worthless. I had worked on this preëmption for about two years as hard as any man ever worked, and had nearly everything improved to suit us for a homestead when the reservation was made and the land incorporated in the 7,000 sections, for no just reasons of benefit to the United States and to the detriment of many actual settlers, and I hope a bill will be presented by you or Senator S. M. WHITE for my relief, as a precedent, that the other settlers injured in like manner and same cause may find relief for their loss.

House and storehouse	$550
Barn	100
Vines and trees	600
Fences	300
Water wheel	100
Loss on stock and implements	500
Ditch, 1 mile long	150
Water power	500
Total	2,800

No labor is valued, as the ranch was self-supporting and could produce a good living; soon would have been a source of considerable profit, and a good home.

If I could be placed back on my ranch as when I was compelled to leave it, I would not willingly leave it for $5,000.

The land-office entry inclosed will show the quarter section, and that it was all done according to law. I should have proved up the month the reservation was made; had resided on the land constantly for two years up to the time the reservation was made.

This, at my age, was the hardest blow I have ever felt. I had made a great effort to beautify a home and subdue the wild land. But the ruthless and savage disregard of the rights and interests of citizens at the representations and request of a corporation, or their manipulation, robbed us and drove us from our rightful heritage. Let the Government now show a disposition to redeem its honor in doing justice to all these injured citizens, as good citizens as the United States affords in all respects.

Hoping you will draft a bill and secure a speedy settlement in these cases,

I am, with great respect, yours, etc.,

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

83.] LAND OFFICE, VISALIA, CAL., April 6, 1889.

Mr. Albert E. Redstone has this day paid $3, the register's and receiver's fees, to file a declaratory statement, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged.

No. 10164.]

Mr. Albert E. Redstone, having paid the fees, has this day filed in this office his declaratory statement, No. 10164, for NE. ¼ and S. ½ of NE. ¼, and NW. ¼ of SE. ¼, section 28, township 24 S. of range 31 E., containing 160 acres; settled upon April 6, 1889, being unoffered.

Under the provisions of the preëmption laws, the time within which final proof is required to be made on unoffered lands expires in thirty-three months from date of settlement, or from date of filing of township plat in district land office in case of settlement on unsurveyed lands, and on offered lands in twelve months from date of settlement, and under act of March 3, 1879, notice of intention to prove up must be given by publication in a newspaper, to be designated by the register, for a period of thirty days, or in six consecutive issues of said paper, which notice must also contain the names of the witnesses by whom the necessary facts will be established.

Notice is, therefore, hereby given that this preëmption filing expires on January 6, 1892, after which date the tract will be subject to the claim of any other qualified party.

Very respectfully,

E. O. MILLER, Register.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to the present consideration of the bill; and I shall object to it whenever it comes up until it has been referred to the Interior Department and we have a report from it, and until we have some additional evidence to sustain the value of the property aside from a letter of the claimant himself.

Mr. KYLE. We have an affidavit here sworn to March 5, 1894, by Mr. W. D. Parson, of White River, Cal., as to the property that Mr. Redstone had upon the land. My own personal judgment in the matter is that the sum due him is more nearly $5,000 than $2,800.

Mr. COCKRELL. The matter does not come to the Senate in a proper way. Here is a reservation made, and a man claims, and it is proposed to pay him, $2,800 for improvements made on a preëmption upon which he had simply filed his declaration. It is within the range of a reservation. The report discloses the fact that there are other claimants here. It may be the entering wedge for claims to the amount of a million dollars. We have no report from the Department. The report of the Committee on Public Lands does not give us any information as to how many claims there are of the same class that originated as this has done. There has been no investigation made by the Government. I must object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). There is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Missouri withdraw his objection in order that I may make a brief statement?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator may make his statement, but I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the claim which is now before the Senate brings to mind a series of injustices that have been practiced upon the citizens in this section of California. Most of the parties who settled within the present limits of the Sequoia National Park Reservation and in the Yosemite National Park Reservation filed, not under the preëmption law, but under the timber law of June 3, 1878. I believe there have been only about nine claims filed within the Sequoia Park under the preëmption law, which required them to make final proof within thirty-three months. The claim before us is that of a wealthy man from the city of Indianapolis, Ind., who went down in the crash of 1873. He took what little he had, went to the State of California, and settled upon land which was offered by the Government of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon; the committee state in the report here and the man swears that they were unoffered lands.

Mr. KYLE. They had never been offered to anybody, but were opened to settlement under the preëmption law. He went and made his filing, as is shown in the report of the committee, and it was accepted. He went upon the land and lived there for a period of more than two years, nearly thirty-three months, complied with the law in every particular, built his house and his barn, dug an irrigating ditch a mile long, built his overshot water wheel, planted out 4,000 vines of different kinds, strawberry plants, grape, blackberry, and raspberry vines, expending in all, in my judgment, more than $2,800. Now, after he had done this the Government of the United States, by the act of October, 1890, withdrew the land from settlement and drove off the settlers who had not secured patents for their land. These men are helpless under the laws of the United States. They are put off their lands by no fault of their own.

Mr. President, I was out in that section of the country a year ago as a member of the committee to investigate these troubles. The committee, of which Mr. Felton, then a Senator from California, was chairman, and of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and I were members, for a period of two weeks listened to the testimony of these poor settlers who are subjected to this injustice. I know of the hardships these men have undergone from the testimony they have given. Now, when a bill is brought before Congress to pay one of them a mere pittance, only about one-quarter, perhaps, of what is due him, with no claim whatever for the preëmption itself or the time he has spent upon the land, then the objection is raised that there is nothing due him or any of these settlers. Let the matter go by for one, two, or three years, and then it will appear here as one of the old claims which will be objected to because it is old. We know how these things go. We have had hundreds of such cases before us, and in my judgment the greatest injustice is practiced on the part of the United States Government toward poor and helpless claimants. I think there should be no objection to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The remarks of the Senator from South Dakota show that the bill ought to be objected to. Here he is picking one man out of a dozen sufferers and showing him some personal preference. Why did not the Senator, after he had been in California with the special committee, bring before the Senate the claims of all these men who, he says, have been so outraged, so that we could consider the whole of them at once, and not bring in here one individual claim as a mere entering wedge without having all the facts before the Senate and without enabling the Senate to vote intelligently and conservatively upon the question? The Senator's own report shows the bill ought not to be considered.

Mr. KYLE. I will answer the Senator from Missouri. A bill has already been introduced and referred to the Committee on Public Lands for the appointment of a commission to appraise and pay the damages which have been sustained by the settlers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why does not the Senator wait until that is done?

Mr. KYLE. The fact is, it brings in a large number of claims within the Sequoia Park of Kaweah colonists, a coöperative colony which settled upon these lands, and against whom there has been a great deal of objection on the part of the Secretary of the Interior and the Committee on Public Lands. Therefore it is thought best not to bring in at this time the whole of these objected claims. But this claim is one to which there was absolutely no objection on the part of the Secretary of the Interior or the Committee on Public Lands. There is not one Senator on the Committee on Public Lands to-day who will object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KYLE. I move to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to take up the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my own vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with that Senator, and withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair, after having voted in the affirmative). The Chair will announce his pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. The Chair does not see the Senator from New Jersey in his seat, and therefore withdraws his vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the absence of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] I ask leave to transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], so as to allow the present occupant of the chair and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair votes "yea."

Mr. VILAS. I do not think, perhaps, in view of the arrangement made between the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and myself, that I ought to withhold my vote if no quorum has voted. I will therefore vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allen,	Daniel,	Martin,	Ransom,
Allison,	Davis,	Mitchell, Wis.	Roach,
Berry,	Dubois,	Morgan,	Squire,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call attention to this claim.

WASHINGTON, D. C., ——— —, 1893.

Senator J. H. KYLE:

Please find the amounts of actual loss to me and my family when the "Park Reservation" was made in Tulare County, Cal., that rendered my house worthless. I had worked on this preëmption for about two years as hard as any man ever worked, and had nearly everything improved to suit us for a homestead when the reservation was made and the land incorporated in the 7,000 sections, for no just reasons of benefit to the United States and to the detriment of many actual settlers.

There were "many actual settlers" there—and I hope a bill will be presented by you or Senator S. M. WHITE for my relief, as a precedent, that the other settlers injured in a like manner and same cause may find relief for their loss.

House and storehouse.....$550

Five hundred and fifty dollars is the charge for it. The house in the affidavit of Mr. Redstone is stated to have been—a frame cottage 14 by 36 feet, containing three separate rooms, with porch attached; also a frame storehouse 10 by 12 feet.

That is, $550; I read from his account:

Barn.....$100

The only barn he describes in his affidavit is "a log stable with hay loft, 20 by 24 feet. For that barn (he calls it a barn in his account to the Senator from South Dakota) he claims $100.

Two miles of post and rail and picket fence, an overshot water wheel to drive a mill (mill was not quite complete and finished).

Again I read from his account:

Vines and trees.....$600

He says in his affidavit:

I planted and had growing about 4,000 vines and trees of different varieties; also 60,000 hills of choice strawberries, and a great number of other varieties of berries.

For that there is claimed $600. I read again from his account:

Fences	$300
Water wheel	$100
Loss on stock and implements	$500

Five hundred dollars for loss on stock and implements! The stock was not taken by the Government. The stock was not dedicated to the use of the park. I have seen a great many claims come before Congress, and I have seen them reported, but I have never yet seen where an imaginary injury or an inconsequential loss upon mere personal property which was movable has been compensated for by act of Congress; and if the Senator from South Dakota can point to one solitary instance I will thank him or any other Senator to do so. I read from his account:

Loss on stock and implements	$500
Ditch, 1 mile long	150
Water power	500

Mr. BERRY. My understanding is that the last item is not in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. My good friend from Arkansas says it is not in the bill. That is exactly why I wanted to make an explanation, and to have the bill go over. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, who is so watchful and careful, now states that it is his understanding the item is not in the bill. It is in the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. This claim was referred to a special committee. My understanding of what the committee intended was to allow for the actual damages to the property taken. This man, under the laws of the United States, took this preëmption claim, which he had a right to take. He invested all that he had. He built the house; he built the fences; he put out the fruit trees and smaller fruit, and made the improvements of the water wheel, and had his barn. It was every dollar that he had on earth. The United States, after he had occupied the land some two years, passed a law reserving the land for a park. He was forced away from there by the soldiers of the United States and not permitted to remain on it. I believe that the Government ought to pay him his actual losses. My understanding was, however, as I said, that when the bill was reported back by the Senator from South Dakota he had taken out the damages that referred to the injury to the stock and also for the water power to which the Senator refers; at least there was some conversation to that effect in the committee and I was under the impression that the allowance had been reduced by that amount.

I think the Government ought to pay him for the balance of the property. I think it was an outrage for the Government to destroy the man's property in that way, turn him out of house and home when he had entered the land under the laws of the United States, when he had a right to go there under the preemption laws. He went there and complied with every law in force at the time. The land was afterwards reserved, and when he was removed in the manner he was I think he ought to be paid what he was actually damaged. But if the items mentioned by the Senator from Missouri go to make up the total of the bill I think the Senator from Missouri is right and that part ought to be stricken out, because I think the actual damages are all he ought to be compensated for.

Mr. COCKRELL. I indorse everything the Senator from Arkansas says, as I knew I would do.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas if this man was rightfully on the land under the law of the United States how could the United States put him off?

Mr. BERRY. My information is that the courts have held that in preëmption claims until the patent is issued the party has no such vested right that the law would protect him; that the Government afterwards reserved the land, and under the decisions of the court they had the power to remove him and destroy his property. That is my information as to the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the word "dollars," in line 6, I move to strike out "2,800" and insert "1,800." That will correspond exactly with what the Senator from Arkansas has said and to which I make no objection. I am not raising the point and denying that a fair, equitable, and just compensation should be made for actual losses, but not for inconsequential or remote damages. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will agree to the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. What item does the Senator from Missouri propose to strike out?

Mr. COCKRELL. I propose to strike out two items which are included and make the amount $2,800, one for water power, $500, and the other loss on stock and implements, $500.

Mr. KYLE. If I could have my way I would move an amendment to put in $1,000 more, instead of striking out $1,000. I believe in justice to the settlers of the United States who go upon the public lands. This man has not referred to the equity in his case, as far as the land is concerned. The claimant had gone upon that land according to the invitation of the United States Government, and had lived there for a period of two years and more. He has a right, therefore, in addition to his movable property, to bring in a bill of equity against the United States for his right in the land itself. So that there can be no question in regard to the amount named in the bill.

Mr. CALL. How about the water power?

Mr. KYLE. Well, in regard to that, he puts in $100 for a water wheel, which is a very low estimate indeed for an overshot water wheel, and $500 for his water power. The water was a part of his vested right in consequence of having filed upon the land under the laws of the United States; and in addition to that, getting water to the wheel ready to operate the mill is sufficient to warrant the amount charged.

Mr. GEORGE. He puts that cost at $500.

Mr. KYLE. He puts that at $500, including labor expended in securing the water necessary to run the wheel. I do not think that $500 for the water power and $100 for the wheel is an overcharge.

Mr. BERRY. The wheel is all right.

Mr. KYLE. Now, as to the moving of the stock, we learned a few things about stock removals on our trip to California one year ago. We found that settlers had filed upon lands within the Sequoia and Yosemite National Parks, and that when the law of 1890 was passed they were driven off by the bayonets of the United States troops, and were forbidden under direction of the United States Government to cross the reservation either to or from their claims, whether patented or not.

This is the injustice practiced by the United States Government. More than that, they not only drove their cattle off the lands, but drove them across the mountains, according to the testimony given. Several hundred cattle were driven across the mountains, which have not been heard from since. They were driven by the soldiers.

Mr. GEORGE. Did this man lose his cattle?

Mr. KYLE. This man was driven off his claim by the soldiers of the United States. He was forced to take his cows and his chickens, his horses and mules, and move them forthwith somewhere. He did not know where he was to go. Nobody knew where he could go; and before it was possible to dispose of the property in a legitimate way in order to realize from it or to get upon land again, he lost a valuable team of mules and also certain small stock to the value, in his judgment, of more than $500; but he has been considerate enough here to place the damage at $500.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether this claim has been investigated by the Interior Department or by any Department of the Government, and if so what report has been made upon it. I have glanced over the report, but I failed to see any statement from the Interior Department or the Land Office, which it seems to me should give us some information upon the question which we could perhaps regard as sufficient.

Mr. KYLE. The Interior Department can give no further examination than we have here. The Land Office has given its sanction in the report to the effect that these settlers filed upon the land according to the invitation of the Government April 6, 1889. The Interior Department would be able perhaps to send special agents out to California and investigate the matter and take affidavits as to the amount of property he had. We furnish here the affidavit of the claimant himself and other citizens as to the amount of the property.

Mr. COCKRELL. One other.

Mr. KYLE. There is the affidavit of Mr. W. D. Parson right underneath his own.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is one affidavit. The Senator said "other affidavits."

Mr. KYLE. There can be a hundred gotten from that immediate community.

Mr. COCKRELL. But they have not been gotten.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say in this connection that a committee was appointed by the Senate of the United States, the committee being composed of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], the Senator from California [Mr. Felton], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who went out and looked into this matter in a general way. I presume that my colleague can give some information in that direction in regard to this case. I do not in the report——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 341) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to proceed with the bill which has been under consideration. I think it would not take more than ten minutes perhaps to finish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill which was before the Senate at the expiration of the morning hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in his seat, who is in charge of the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Colorado, in charge of the bill, is in the Chamber, but he is not giving attention to what is going on.

Mr. TELLER. I think I shall have to insist upon going on with the regular order. I know the bill which has been under consideration is bound to take some time. The Senator from South Dakota thinks it could soon be disposed of, but I know it will take time. I think I shall have to call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from South Dakota. The bill which has been before the Senate will retain its place on the Calendar, and the unfinished business will be proceeded with.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 144) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive at the subtreasury in the city of New York, from R. T. Wilson & Co., or assigns, the money amounting to $6,740,000, to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, and to place the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 147) to transfer furniture to United States courts at Chicago, Ill.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 341) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I have no desire to make any record in respect to this bill or to make any speech in opposition to it; but it became my duty to examine it, and I found myself forced to a certain conclusion in regard to it. I desire to ask the attention of the Senators to the nature of the bill, as it is written with a view to considering certain amendments which, I think, should be made before it is passed, if it is to be passed, as seems indicated.

No one of us who has met day after day for years the unobtrusive, gentle, and kindly-looking old man who is interested in this bill but feels moved—at least I do very much—toward him as a long claimant of what he esteems to be his rights; and I could not take the position I am obliged to assume without having made a careful examination of the case—indeed, an examination entered upon rather with the hope that it would lead to a conclusion different from that which has been forced upon me.

Let me say another thing. The Judiciary Committee consented to the report of this bill as an old matter with which the Senate is very familiar, and although no minority report was made, it was understood that members who did not agree with the report were not bound by it in any sense.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to state that at a former session of Congress the Judiciary Committee made a thorough examination, through a subcommittee, of the bill, but at this last session we did not do so; we acted upon it as having been formerly reported favorably.

Mr. VILAS. As I said, the only object I have in making any observations at all upon it is in the hope that, old as this claim is, long hammered as it has been before Congress, hackneyed and trite as it is, it may yet be possible to gain attention sufficient to cause those amendments to be made to this proposed measure which certainly ought to be made before it is enacted by Congress.

Let me state, in a word, the first proposition that I think must challenge every one's attention who listens to me. This claim has been in regular and due form of law litigated before the courts of the United States from beginning to end. The Supreme Court of the United States, upon an investigation of the evidence presented in support of it, decided that no grant was made by the governor of that portion of Mexico in which this land lay before it became parcel of the territory of the United States; or, to speak a little more exactly, they decided that the proofs which were presented did not prove any grant to have been made. Therefore they ordered the petition to be dismissed; a final judgment which, if it had been rendered between two private citizens, would have been so effectually a bar against the reconsideration of any question involved that Congress would have possessed no power to reinstate that litigation.

Mr. GEORGE. What was the date?

Mr. VILAS. The decision was made in 1865, I believe. I will presently call attention to it.

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator means the last decision.

Mr. VILAS. I mean the decision in the case of Gomez against the United States, in which under the statute enacted by Congress he prosecuted in regular form of law his petition for this grant.

I presume the proposition will be disputed by no one. It can not be disputed successfully, and I have no idea that any of the Senators who represent Mr. McGarrahan's interest in this matter will dispute it. But it is said that inasmuch as the United States were one of the parties to the litigation, then Congress does possess the power, for one of the parties to waive the benefit of the judgment which has been rendered in favor of the United States, and even to grant this land in controversy to the claimant. Mr. President, perhaps as matter of power there may be no doubt about that proposition, and yet it ought to be remembered that in the exercise of that power Congress is the trustee of the people of the United States and is bound to deal with this subject and their interests in a faithful manner.

But what, then, is the claim of right of Mr. McGarrahan or the claim to the grace of the United States on the part of Mr. McGarrahan? It is that a mistake was made in that judgment whereby his just rights were denied to him. Mr. President, a challenge of that kind on the part of the claimant, in the first place, is a challenge of the Supreme Court of the United States. It challenges the intelligence with which they considered the case if it does not (and I am sure that will be disavowed) challenge the fairness with which they considered it.

I doubt if the Senate, with a due sense of self-respect, is likely to indulge the notion that the Supreme Court of the United States failed to give to that case, with all the interests which it involved, argued before it by as able counsel as those great interests could secure, an intelligent examination, and have so far failed as that the Senate can be warranted in overthrowing their judgment, especially upon such an examination as is likely to be given to the case by individual Senators. Surely there ought to be a plain reason for such a view. However, I shall not enter at any particular length into that. For one, although I do not think this proposed legislation ought to be passed, I should care very little; I would make no observation against it, provided only the one method were pursued in the bill upon which alone, as it seems to me, the Senate of the United States can decently proceed, and not arraign impliedly the intelligence, wisdom, or fairness of the Supreme Court, the greatest judicial tribunal perhaps in the world, certainly unexcelled by any.

The proposition from the claimant ought to be only that he asks a perfectly open, fair, retrial of the case de novo. I am willing he should have it in deference to the opinions of those Senators who have expressed themselves in the past as well as in the present Congress, in favor of the idea that some right may have been denied the claimant. I would be quite willing that there should be no risk that any right was denied him, and, therefore, that he should have this extraordinary measure given him after the full and complete judicial investigation of which I have spoken, notwithstanding the perfect bar upon his claim in law—if it be a reëxamination upon the merits. All that I propose to urge in respect to the bill is that it shall be so amended as that that reëxamination shall be fair upon the merits, and it certainly seems to me that no Senator can reasonably object to that proposition.

Now, let me observe, first, that the second section of the bill, instead of turning this case over to the tribunal to which it is to be committed unfettered and unprejudiced, declares that that tribunal shall accept as evidence, what? Not only the documents which would unquestionably be evidence in themselves, but all the various affidavits, all the various ex parte representations, proofs, depositions, or what not, that have been taken at any time in the course of all the protracted litigation and consideration of this subject for forty years, whether taken before any notary public or before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, thus turning upon the tribunal to which is committed the task of reinvestigating an ancient controversy like this a stream of testimony which is from its very nature polluted and stands opposed to every principle of evidence by which causes are examined in court and the truth ascertained.

I shall move, therefore, to amend the second section of the bill. I do not care to enter at any length upon the discussion of the detail of it beyond what I have said. I shall ask the Senate to amend it so that instead of its being a mandate to the court to receive as evidence (for that is the present language of it) these matters of the nature indicated, it shall simply provide that the court may admit in evidence all of those documents and papers with an addition to the effect that the court shall ascribe to any and all such evidence only such weight and effect as it shall, in the judgment of the court, require, the purpose of this act being only to afford a fair trial of the claim to said land and not to either make a grant or create any presumption in favor of one.

I can conceive of no objection to that language which can be urged by any friend of the bill who is ready to say that all that is sought by this litigation is to ascertain the truth.

I also most cordially support the proposition for an amendment to the bill submitted by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and I think that no one of his fellow Senators here but must have felt in a greater or less degree the admiration which his sturdy conduct in the defense of the public interests has excited in me, at his age and under his weight of years contesting with the vigor and power he has shown in presenting his objections to the passage of this bill. Enough has been said by that Senator; but let me add this: The supreme court of California has passed upon this very proposition, and they held that the survey which the claimant procured himself, and paid for under a law of Congress which permitted it, is not a survey such as finally determines the boundaries and limits of the grant, but is to be accepted as merely prima facie evidence. The survey so procured, which has no other quality than that of prima facie evidence, this bill proposes to incorporate into the very bone of the case, which ought to be submitted to the court for a trial de novo, for original investigation.

The proposition of the distinguished Senator from Vermont is to strike out the clause which thus commands the acceptance of that survey and to insert instead the regular procedure which the law in regard to the land claims coming with our Mexican conquest requires, namely, that when a grant shall have been established so that it is entitled to be located, the proper method shall be pursued by which that location shall be determined, not at the instigation and cost merely of the claimant, but according to the regular procedure of the General Land Office by its proper surveyors, and with the understanding that it is to determine the boundaries and limits of the grant.

Strangely, sir, a map exists in which this same grant is found twice located, as I am advised, and in one instance it was placed in a different quarter from that where it was fixed by the survey which the claimant obtained to be made.

Mr. TELLER. That was the New Idria Mining Company's map, and not the map of the claimant. The claimant is not responsible for their map.

Mr. VILAS. It is enough. The Senator from Colorado may be correct in that. I am charging the claimant with no responsibility for the map of the New Idria Mining Company, but I am observing that the uncertainty in reference to the true location of the grant is evidenced by that map, and if there be opportunity given to contest the claim of this claimant, a survey which he procured as a private survey, and which has no other quality than merely prima facie evidence, ought not to be fixed by the pending bill as a thing into which the court can not inquire.

Mr. President, those two propositions with reference to the pending bill appear to me to be absolutely unanswerable. I do not understand how anyone with all the sympathy he may feel for the claimant, should be unwilling when granting the extraordinary privilege of an entire new trial of this claim which the Supreme Court has decided absolutely and forever against him as a matter of law, to provide simply that the trial shall be a fair one.

The late Chief Magistrate, Gen. Harrison, vetoed a bill, among other reasons, because it contained provisions giving arbitrary directions in respect to an examination which ought to be free and open. It seems to me that no Executive could take a different view in respect to a measure which, professing to institute an inquiry in the interest of justice, accompanies that profession with such directions as foreclose the inquiry from the beginning. All I ask in respect to this bill is that in dealing with this old rejected claim the United States shall be given a chance to prove what the Supreme Court has once decided as a fact—that there never was a grant made, or that no evidence justifies taking from the Government its possessions; and that the claimant shall have only what he shows clear right to.

My distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] yesterday discussed, as if this case involved it, the proposition that the United States ought to observe the faith of its treaties. Nobody has the slightest objection. It is in no sense involved; there is no question of the faith of a treaty. Nobody contends for an instant that if there was a grant, the United States shall withhold from the grantee his right to the land contained in that grant. The whole proposition is that there never was a grant. It is only another instance, so it is said, of those numerous claims which were fixed upon the United States and prosecuted by fraud hardly ever surpassed in the history of the world, arising out of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, by which grants made prior to the Mexican cession were to be confirmed by the United States. Here is a case in which only one man testified before the board of commissioners to investigate it that he had seen anything which was claimed to be a grant. No grant has been produced; the terms of no grant have been recounted; the contents of a paper containing an alleged grant have never been revealed by any witness; but only a statement has been made that a witness had seen a paper which the Mexican claimant, Gomez, said to him was a grant of land, and that was for 4 leagues of land, when the written request for the grant, which does abide, was for 3 leagues. Such is the testimony.

That witness testified also to the fact that he saw affixed to that grant the diseño, or map, which is in fact found affixed to the expediente, or application, which does survive. No wonder the Supreme Court said there was nothing of evidence to warrant the idea of a grant.

There have been in this business many charges made. Our distinguished friend, the Senator from Virginia, made a somewhat extraordinary statement, I suppose a casual slip. He said:

> In the mean time a man by the name of Ogier was judge of the district court in California, and he became a violent partisan of the New Idria Mining Company, I suppose for reasons sufficient unto himself. He set aside the order confirming the grant, after he had made it more than five years preceding. When the case had gone to the Supreme Court of the United States and had there been affirmed by dismissal of the decree and the issuing of a mandate, Judge Ogier undertook to set aside his own decree. I need not tell the lawyers of the Senate that no judge on earth, no court under the canopy of heaven, has the right to interfere even with his own orders after the term in which the order was made is ended. But Judge Ogier, more than five years after the rendition of the decree, set it aside and ordered a new trial.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia has been a long time counsel for Mr. McGarrahan in the prosecution of this claim, and of course meant to state the fact correctly, but his recollection, I think, failed him somewhat.

Judge Ogier was the judge not "in the mean time," but to whom the case first was addressed in the court where the decree was entered, the district judge of the United States for the southern district of California. When that case came before him it was in this wise: The petition for the confirmation of this grant was made for Vincente P. Gomez, the original claimant, by Pacificus Ord, his attorney. That attorney had an arrangement with Gomez by which he was to have half the land. It was the old illustration of campum partire, by which the attorney prosecuting the claim was to divide the field which was to be recovered. It was therefore obnoxious to the common-law objection of champerty. Such was the aspect of the case before the Board of Land Commissioners, all perfectly regular otherwise, so far as I have had my attention called to it. He presented the evidence before the commissioners. They rejected the claim. In a note by the clerk stating why they rejected the claim, it is said that the evidence of the grant was satisfactory, but there was no evidence of any occupation.

Mr. MILLS. What was the date of the application for the land?

Mr. VILAS. To the Mexican Government?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. VILAS. Eighteen hundred and forty-four; and it is claimed that Gov. Micheltorena left Monterey in 1845, or within a year, if I remember rightly, and there is much opportunity for doubt whether he ever undertook any step in regard to it, except to direct the original inquiry.

But to return to the conduct of Judge Ogier, which is urged as a reason for the passage of this bill by the Senator from Virginia. After the appeal from the decision of the Board of Land Commissioners the case stood in the district court of the United States, as all such cases stood, and among a great number of others. There is no very certain evidence that any other attorney was ever employed than Mr. Ord; but before the case came on for hearing, Mr. Ord had been made the district attorney of the United States. So he stood representative of the United States to defend a claim which the commissioners had rejected and which had been appealed by himself for his client from their rejection, of the fruit of which he was to share. He says in exculpation of his conduct that he represented to the Attorney-General's Office the necessity for some other person to act on behalf of the United States, and they gave no heed and made no provision, which matters not, except to show that he knew he ought not to act.

But he did act, and one day, on the 5th of June, 1857, he asked an attorney of the name of Hartman, of the firm of Sloan & Hartman, to represent the claimant on that appeal by presenting the record to the court, stating that there would be no contest over it, and nothing more would be required to be done. Mr. Hartman did present that record, and thereupon the district attorney, knowing he had no right to act for the United States, said to the court that the United States did not desire to contest the case; that the Land Commissioners thought there was evidence of a grant; that the objection that occupation was necessary had been overruled by the Supreme Court, and therefore there was no contest. Thereupon Judge Ogier ordered a minute to be entered, as of course, directing that a decree of confirmation should be entered. That minute was entered by the clerk on the 5th of June, 1857, which counsel spoke of as the date for the beginning of the statute of limitations on appeals to run.

Subsequently Mr. Ord, who had represented to the court that the United States has no objection to the confirmation of the grant, took some steps as if to enter an appeal on behalf of the United States, but what happened was, that after that alleged appeal was entered by Mr. Ord, the papers, or a transcript, were filed in the Supreme Court as if a return to that appeal. Application was made to the Supreme Court by Gomez to docket and dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution, and the Supreme Court entered an order docketing and dismissing that appeal accordingly.

Subsequently the Attorney-General of the United States, Judge Black, moved the Supreme Court to vacate that order and recall that mandate, because the whole proceeding was a fraud, no appeal had been taken by the United States, no appeal had been allowed in the court below, and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. That motion was granted by the Supreme Court, being another one of the instances of want of intelligence and judicial wisdom imputed to that body in order to secure the passage of this bill. Meantime Judge Ogier had become aware of the fact that he had been imposed upon. A motion had been entered before him in the term at which he made this minute and before the decree was entered, when he had only directed it, that motion was postponed by him, and thereby he retained jurisdiction to deal with the case after the term; and when subsequently to the term he ascertained how he had been imposed upon, like an upright judge, not, as the distinguished Senator from Virginia said, as a partisan of the New Idria Mining Company, but as a judge who felt himself outraged by the manner in which a judicial decree had been wrung from him, he ordered a new trial of the case.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. Do I understand the Senator to state to the Senate that the motion before Judge Ogier for a new trial was made at the term during which the judgment was rendered?

Mr. VILAS. No, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. If it was not, I ask the Senator the question whether he as a lawyer does not know that a judge upon the bench, whatever may be the grade of the court, has no power to interfere with a judgment which he himself rendered at a preceding term?

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I need not speculate with my distinguished friend from Virginia in a matter of professional opinion, for I happen to hold in my hand an authority upon the very point we are discussing. The Supreme Court has dealt with the particular instance of which we are speaking, and I will ask the Senator's attention to page 337 of 23 Howard's Reports. This is what was stated by the court. I shall read but a part, though the court reviews the whole matter:

> But Judge Ogier, feeling and thinking that he had improvidently given a judgment of confirmation, did continue the hearing of the motions to obtain proofs, if any could be had, concerning the contrivance by which he had been imposed upon. A commission was issued by him for that purpose, and under it Mr. Sloan made the affidavit denying all connection and attorneyship for Gomez, as has already been recited in this opinion. The case then remained in the district court as it was when the motions which were made, without any further action upon that for an appeal.
> This narrative has been given from documents, depositions, and declarations of the parties concerned in the case, and also by other persons, apparently disinterested, in respect to the land. They will be found either on the record upon which the cause was docketed and dismissed in this court or in the book of exhibits sent to this court by Judge Ogier, which were obtained to enable him to act understandingly upon the merits of the case. The case being still before the court—

The italics are of Mr. Justice Wayne's own making; at least they are in the report—> we do not perceive any irregularity in the proceedings.

Mr. President, if the Supreme Court perceived no irregularity in the proceedings of Judge Ogier, if they ascribe to him the exercise of the duty of an upright judge who had improvidently made an order by reason of some contrivance placed upon him—I am using the language of the Supreme Court—it would seem to me that sufficiently answers the suggestion of our distinguished friend from Virginia, that—

> In the meantime a man by the name of Ogier was judge of the district court in California, and he became a violent partisan of the New Idria Mining Company, I suppose for reasons sufficient unto himself. He set aside the order confirming the grant, after he had made it more than five years preceding.

Let me observe that in respect of the matter of time the distinguished Senator from Virginia was far off. Long before the expiration of the five years Judge Ogier was dead. He made this order for a new trial within a year—I can not remember the exact time—but within a year, if I am not mistaken, of the entry of the minute when he had directed a decree.

After Judge Ogier died, and while the new trial was depending which he had ordered, a new man came to judgment as his successor, and certainly of that new judge it can be safely said that he was no "partisan of the New Idria Mining Company," for he determined then, upon a motion made by the attorneys for Mr. McGarrahan, who had become the owner of the claim, that Judge Ogier did not possess the power which the Supreme Court afterwards said he did possess; that he had no power to grant a new trial after the term, under whatever conditions.

Then an appeal was taken in August, 1862, the litigation in the Supreme Court and various motions below having consumed the mean time. After that appeal and an order made allowing it, motions were made to vacate that order, on the ground that more than five years had passed from the date of the rendition of the decree, and that it lay with the judge below to determine the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States; and under his direction, or at least in pursuance of such a decision, his clerk refused to the attorney of the United States, yea, to the Attorney-General of the United States, a transcript of the record in order that the Supreme Court could investigate the case; but after a time, Mr. Bates being the Attorney-General of the United States under President Lincoln, the clerk did graciously bestow upon the Attorney-General a copy of each of the several papers which were upon the files of the court relating to the case, not as a certified transcript, not as a return to the appeal, but as a matter of information. The Attorney-General of the United States entered in the court those papers as the record on the appeal. A motion was made to dismiss it, and the Supreme Court decided that, in view of the refusal of the clerk of the court, it was a good record, accepted it as sufficient, and supported their jurisdiction.

As to the five years limitation, again the Supreme Court indulged in the misfortune of a disagreement upon the proposition urged here, for they held distinctly, on the motion to dismiss that appeal, that the time did not begin to run with the entry of the minute directing a decree, but it began to run when the decree was entered. Therefore the appeal was taken in time. The court proceeded to the consideration of the merits of the claim—that is their language—and their consideration resulted in the decision of which I have spoken.

Mr. President, this shows how mistaken the distinguished Senator was in the statement which he made in regard to the time and the motion for a new trial and all the action by Judge Ogier, as well as in the imputation of motives to that deceased judge.

Upon one other matter I wish to briefly state the facts. It has been said that Mr. McGarrahan had a patent. That claim is provable in only the same manner as that Gomez had a grant originally from the Mexican Government. The patent had never been delivered to him; he never had it in his possession; it never parted from the keeping of the United States; it was never so completed as to be valid as a patent so far as any evidence known to exist discloses; but a record was found of what was supposed to be this patent in the General Land Office, and that record was made the basis of a suit by Mr. McGarrahan to recover the land.

Thus the case came before the Supreme Court in that aspect also, and they decided that no title passed by the record of the patent or by the patent itself so far as the record tended to prove what it was.

Mr. TELLER. When did the Supreme Court pass upon the question of the patent?

Mr. VILAS. I will find it for the Senator. It is in the case of McGarrahan vs. the Mining Company, in the 6th of Otto, on page 316, in the year 1877, at the October term. I do not know what is the exact date of the decision.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator a question if he will yield?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator in reference to the statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], that when the appeal was up, when Judge Black was the Attorney-General, and argued, it was decided, if I understood the Senator from Virginia, that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Mr. VILAS. I do not know what the facts are in regard to that. It was extra-official, or extra-judicial at least, and there is no record in regard to it. I believe there was a controversy, in which Judge Black took one side, and some of those people took the other, in regard to what took place before him, and in consequence of the fact that there was a controversy, I have made no statement about it.

Mr. HUNTON. I can refresh the Senator's memory.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the Senator from Wisconsin does not controvert that, nor does he admit it?

Mr. VILAS. I neither admit it nor controvert it. I am only speaking of the facts about which there is no opportunity for dispute.

Mr. HUNTON. The proof discloses the fact that in the record of the Attorney-General's Office there was an entry of a dismissal of the appeal.

Mr. VILAS. I suppose, if we stated it all, the truth is that Judge Black contended that he had also been made the victim of a fraudulent misrepresentation, and that he permitted that thing to be done heedlessly, and afterwards went himself to the court and redressed it.

Mr. President, I was speaking in respect to that patent. I merely want to state in a word as to the manner in which that patent came to be issued, for we have heard a great deal in regard to it from our distinguished friend, the Senator from Virginia. I hold here the opinion of Mr. Caleb B. Smith, the Secretary of the Interior, who first came to the conclusion that a patent ought to be issued. Upon what ground did he go? He put the case entirely upon the ground that after recounting these proceedings which I have stated—

No appeal appears to have been subsequently taken—until the 25th of August last—

He says—

That was August, 1862, the time when the appeal was taken—when an order for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States was made by the district court of California. On the 4th of the present month the district court vacated the order allowing the appeal—

That is the lower judge of whom I have spoken—and set aside the motion of the district attorney asking leave on behalf of the United States to take an appeal to the Supreme Court from the final decree of confirmation, and denied the same.

This proceeding appears to me to be final and conclusive in the case. The time within which by law an appeal may be taken has elapsed, and the decree of confirmation made by the district court, therefore, fixes and determines the rights of the claimant.

So, taking that view of the law, before the case had been heard by the Supreme Court, before a motion had been made even to dismiss the appeal or any step taken there, the Secretary of the Interior arrived at a conclusion upon a point of law in respect to which he showed how differently a Secretary of the Interior can view the law from what the Supreme Court can view it.

Mr. GEORGE. And that was prior to the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. VILAS. Precisely. That was the basis upon which the patent went. If he had been right and there were a finality of the judicial proceeding at that time, clearly his conclusion was correct. The trouble is that he was proceeding upon a mistaken view of the facts and the law, a mistake which, although he made it, the Supreme Court corrected, and if under that mistake he had granted a patent the Supreme Court would have corrected that also. The patent could have had no more validity than it was justified in possessing by the grounds upon which it was issued. So that the idea that Mr. McGarrahan has in some way been deprived of a right by virtue of his never having had the patent, which it is said was once issued, is an error.

Mr. President, I have already taken more time than I meant to take in the discussion of this question.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. I ask which was anterior, the date of Mr. Lincoln's signature to the patent or the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. VILAS. The decision of the Supreme Court was anterior, I think.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg pardon.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator wants to have it the other way, he is welcome to it. I was stating the fact with the utmost fairness to him, and I think it is the fact.

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator is mistaken as to the time Caleb Smith gave his opinion.

Mr. VILAS. I withdraw the statement. I am mistaken. Mr. Lincoln's life terminated before the decision was made.

Mr. HUNTON. That is true. The decision of Smith and Usher had been made and the Supreme Court had the case before it at the same time.

Mr. VILAS. The decision had been made by Mr. Smith and Mr. Usher, who followed him, and by Mr. Lincoln, who indicates in what is reported of his utterances concerning the case the distress of mind imposed upon him by this persistency of application for a grant, reënforced by men of influence interested with the claimant, at a time when the war occupied all his thoughts, as it ought to have done. Mr. Lincoln did, it seems, direct something to be signed, but Mr. Lincoln's patent at that time was only the same, or he went upon the same ground, if it had been issued, that Mr. Smith and Mr. Usher did. This presents this simple statement of the case——

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL. The evidence as to Mr. Lincoln's action in the case was given by a Mr. Stevens, who then had a proprietary interest of one-sixth in the McGarrahan corporation.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, Mr. President, I do not myself believe in the patent, but I wanted to state this case with the utmost advantage to the claimant. Assuming the utmost that can be stated in respect to it, while the case was depending in the Supreme Court, the Secretary of the Interior and his successor, and the President under whom they both served, held that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction by reason of their opinion, that the time for taking an appeal had expired, and that, therefore, it was a finality of judicial decision in favor of McGarrahan; and therefore the patent should go to him; but the patent never did go to him, and the whole substructure was taken away by the decision of the Supreme Court, who held that they did possess jurisdiction and that Gomez did not show a grant. There is nothing, therefore, in this talk about the patent.

I do not object, as I said, and for myself I do not care—I am willing to take that sort of risk about what is right—if this bill is so passed as to submit fairly de novo the entire facts to any judicial tribunal touching the claim of this old man, I will not object. But if that is to be done, if we are to submit again to a judicial tribunal a question which has once been litigated, until as between any other suitors there would be an absolute and eternal bar, let us at least do it so that there is fairness in the mode in which it is submitted toward that one of the parties whose advantage is to be given away.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator if, having conceded so much, he will indicate the specific points in the bill which are unfair to the United States?

Mr. VILAS. I have already done so.

Mr. GEORGE. I noticed that, but I did not catch them exactly.

Mr. VILAS. I think the second section of the bill ought to be stricken from it, or if the second section of the bill is to remain it ought to be made to conform to the statute which was passed for the creation of the Court of Private Land Claims with a view to the presentation of evidence where witnesses are dead. The statute in respect to the Court of Private Land Claims contains a section applicable to all other claims of this character. I see no reason why that statute does not fully meet all the demands of justice in favor of this claimant, but this section of the bill is a very singular one as it is now written.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator referring to the second section?

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir; to the second section of the bill. I have here now the chapter of the statutes for the establishment of the Court of Private Land Claims, which was passed in the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. TELLER. To what section does the Senator refer?

Mr. VILAS. Section 5, which reads:

That the testimony which has been heretofore lawfully and regularly received by the surveyor-general of the proper Territory or State or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon any claims presented to them, respectively, shall be admitted in evidence in all trials under this act when the person testifying is dead, so far as the subject-matter thereof is competent evidence; and the court shall give it such weight as, in its judgment, under all the circumstances, it ought to have.

I think that would be a fair section to substitute for this section of the bill, and I do not see why this claimant ought to ask of the consideration of the Senate more than that. I purpose, therefore, to move to amend the second section. In answer to the Senator from Mississippi, he will observe that it provides for the admission of the original expediente presented by Gomez to Governor Micheltorena:

And the diseño or map accompanying same, or a copy thereof, the depositions and other evidence produced before said Board of Land Commissioners, or copies thereof, and all depositions, proofs, testimony, or affidavits taken before any circuit or district court of the United States in the State of California, or the clerks of such courts, or any commissioner appointed by said courts, or before any notary public, or before any committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, or of any map or deed of record of any Department of the Government of the United States, or of any act of Congress through which the boundaries set forth in said expediente and the title of said McGarrahan to the said lands can be shown, protected, and established—

As if the object were to protect the title of McGarrahan. I take it the object of Congress in that, and all that can be claimed by the friends of the claimant, is that, inasmuch as a great lapse of time has occurred, it is necessary, in the interest of justice, that when a witness can not be produced, his testimony already once given in the proceedings shall be received.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it not remove the objection of the Senator if after the word "established" in line 20, page 4, the words "or disproved" were inserted?

Mr. VILAS. No; because the Senator from Mississippi will observe the preliminary words in the third line of the section, which are that "the said court shall receive as evidence."

Mr. GEORGE. But it does not say what weight the court shall place upon it.

Mr. VILAS. No, but it would remove the objection——

Mr. GEORGE. Only as to its competency.

Mr. VILAS. It would remove the objection sufficiently for my purpose to change the words so as to read, "the said court may admit in evidence," and add at the end, as in the other statute, not the same words, but words sufficient to carry the idea that the court shall ascribe to all such evidence such weight and effect as it shall in the judgment of the court require, the purpose of this act being only to afford a fair trial.

Mr. MILLS. What is the necessity in this case of making new rules for the production and introduction of testimony? Is there any?

Mr. VILAS. I know of none; but if this bill is to be passed—and that seems to be the idea of the friends of it—without much regard to the original judgment in favor of the United States, I do say that I think they can not deny some amendment to make it certain that it is not the purpose of Congress to legislate indirectly a grant of this land or to bind the court so that its judgment will be a predetermined one.

Answering still further the Senator from Mississippi, I call his attention again, if he did not hear it before, to the language in the third section of the act by which it is declared that the survey which was made for Mr. McGarrahan, and at his cost, not under orders of the Department, but by the surveyor-general, it is true, though not in the way of a survey upon a determined grant, shall be absolute and conclusive upon the court. I desire to have the clause amended as to the boundaries and location of the grant. That ought to be qualified so that the court, if it shall finally determine that there was a grant in favor of McGarrahan, may direct proper procedure, or the Department of the Interior proceed to a disposition of the question in accordance with law.

Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I intended, and shall not longer detain the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I have an amendment, which I think will not be objected to, to come in at the end of section 4, which is intended to remove what possibly may be a doubt.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 4 it is proposed to add—

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as acknowledging any liability on the part of the United States to pay for the land, substances, and materials referred to in this section, or as assuming any obligation in that behalf.

Mr. TELLER. I think that amendment is strictly in accordance with the very purpose of the bill. At the proper time, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object to it.

Mr. President, the time is so short between now and the period when other business which is regarded as more important must come before the Senate, and as there are a large number of cases on the Calendar which Senators are anxious to consider, I am impelled to address the Senate very briefly on this subject. There are a great many things that I should like to touch upon if I did not feel that by so doing I should crowd out other business which ought to be disposed of between this time and Monday next.

This case in some form has been before Congress and before the courts for a great many years. It commenced in 1857 and it has been either before Congress or the courts in some form ever since. A bill for Mr. McGarrahan's relief has passed the House of Representatives four times and passed the Senate twice. A resolution for his relief passed the House of Representatives in 1870 or 1871 with great unanimity, but it did not pass the Senate. The case is exceedingly old, and I assume that most Senators know something about it. A fair statement of the condition of the case and its history would take at least six or eight hours. I shall not attempt to make such an extended statement.

In the first place, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] complains that it is proposed to submit this claim to an inferior court after the Supreme Court has passed upon and decided it. The bill proposes to submit the claim in the first instance to a tribunal created for the express purpose of settling claims of this character. It provides that the United States may, if it chooses, take the opinion of the Supreme Court upon whatever judgment the Court of Private Land Claims may render. So it can not be said that this case is being remitted to an inferior court.

If, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] and other Senators insist, this is a matter which the Supreme Court has passed upon in such a way that it ought not to be touched, nobody ought to be afraid to let it go again to that court, committed, as it is, against the proposition of the claimant that he is the owner of the grant.

Mr. VILAS. I have already agreed to that proposition, provided it not be sent there in such a way that it is not open to consideration.

Mr. TELLER. The Government of the United States was under obligation, both by the law of nations and by the treaty with Mexico, to recognize the right of this claimant to this grant, if the grant was a valid one. The Government of the United States provided how the title should be settled and adjudicated; and, in accordance with that, this claimant, or rather his grantor, proceeded, because Mr. Gomez started the proceeding, and Mr. McGarrahan bought into it after any sensible and reasonable man would have supposed that Gomez's title had been practically established.

The testimony was taken in the first case, and the grant was defeated upon a question of law which subsequently the court overruled. The Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Vermont both complain that now this question, which was determined in 1857 in favor of the claimant, shall be again submitted to a court. It rather seems to me if anybody has the right to complain it is the claimant in this case, and not the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that we assume that there is a grant. Mr. President, ex industria this bill provides that as the first question to be established; the first thing the court has to deal with is, was there a grant? That is what was provided for in the bill which President Harrison vetoed, but we did not provide in the bill that McGarrahan could prove that he was the legitimate owner of the grant if Gomez had the grant; and because we did not provide for that, and because we provided also that if it should be found that the title to the minerals was in him and had been taken from him wrongfully by the United States or by the action of the United States, a judgment might be rendered against the United States, the then President of the United States vetoed that bill.

The Senator from Wisconsin says a similar bill has been vetoed by the President. The only provisions assigned as the reason for vetoing the previous bill have been omitted from this bill. We provide now, in addition, that Gomez must prove a title; that McGarrahan must show he is now the owner of the Gomez grant, if a grant there ever was.

What difference does it make whether McGarrahan may have deeded the grant at some time to somebody else? The question is, does he now own it? If it has been reconveyed to him, then he is entitled to it. If Gomez had a grant to the land the claimant now claims, then has the claimant succeeded to that title, and does he now hold it?

Mr. President, this is not any attack upon the Supreme Court, unless it shall be asserted here, which I do not think it will be, that the supreme national power of Congress can not remove a bar established by a decision of the Supreme Court where it and a citizen only are concerned. The power undoubtedly exists in the State Legislatures, and has been exercised again and again. I believe myself it is always a doubtful policy to exercise such a power, but the Legislature of a State may set aside a judgment between individuals when it sees fit, and it has been done over and over again. Whether that is so or not, however, it is not worth while now to discuss, because that is not the question.

We have time and again exercised the right to set aside judgments which were rendered, and granted a new trial where nobody but the United States was interested. The Senator said he admitted we had that power, and so I need not discuss that question.

The only question is, do we bring a case here in which it seems reasonable why what is proposed should be done, and have we come here with a bill which provides that the Government of the United States shall have an opportunity to be amply protected? If we have, nobody ought to complain.

The bill which is now before the Senate was before the Senate at the close of the last session of Congress, and I think that every amendment which was then proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin and by other Senators who are opposed to the bill was incorporated in it, and the bill was then supposed to be acceptable to them.

Mr. President, the bill is not acceptable because there is somewhere in this country, and has been for many years, an influence which has been exerted against this claimant, an influence which was backed by millions and millions of money, until it became difficult for anybody to stand up anywhere and defend this claim outside of the tribunals which had examined it; and yet, notwithstanding that tremendous influence of money and other influences as well, which were brought to bear against this claim, there have been fifteen reports made by committees of this body and of the other in favor of the absolute validity of the grant. There have been, in my judgment, enough to authorize this Congress to assume that the grant existed and was a valid grant. It was not in its inception questioned by anybody. The Senator from Vermont says that some witness swore he lived in the neighborhood and that he never heard of the grant. The Senator from Wisconsin says there was but one witness who testified to the grant. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. VILAS. I meant before the Board of Land Commissioners.

Mr. TELLER. That was probably all that was necessary.

There was an abundance of evidence produced, not only before the Board of Land Commissioners but ever since before committees and courts of the validity of the grant. But after all, what difference does it make, when that is the question now submitted to the court? That is the question the court must now pass upon; it is the question the court will pass upon.

Mr. President, some Senator said yesterday that the New Idria mining property, concerning which there is to be testimony taken by this court as to the value of the material, is not within the grant, and is not within the survey. The evidence submitted to Congress repeatedly declared by the witnesses produced by the New Idria Mining Company people that it is within the survey, and that it is within the grant as claimed. I have it here before me from their own witnesses. The trouble is that some Senators who talk about this matter have not studied the case, and they know but little about it.

Now, what is the bill? The second section it is said is bad. What does it provide? That the map shall be evidence, a map that has been in the files of the Government for forty years and never disputed by anybody. It is true the Senator from Wisconsin says there is another map, another map filed by the New Idria Mining Company when they were controverting this case. No other maps were ever filed by the claimant or anybody on his behalf. It would be difficult to prove that that was a valid map after forty years or more. It is fifty years since the map was made. There is nobody living, probably, who was present. All the actors in that transaction died long ago.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it a map made by an officer of the United States?

Mr. TELLER. No, this is the Mexican map, the diseño or map.

Mr. HUNTON. Filed with the petition in the Land Office.

Mr. TELLER. Now, we come to the other part that is so distressing, that all of the evidence that has been taken everywhere concerning this case is to go before the court. The most of that language was put in by the enemies of the bill. They insisted that it should go in. Then they put in amendments that everyting else that the court thought might throw any light upon this subject should also be admitted, and we allowed that provision to go in the bill on the motion of those who did not vote for the bill a year ago last March.

Now, let us read the second section which is so tremendously bad, the Senator says, that he wants to strike it all out.

The said court shall receive as evidence—

The Senator says if it read "shall admit as evidence" it would be different. That is a play upon words. There is not a lawyer here, except the Senator from Wisconsin, who will insist that there is the slightest difference between the word "admit" and the word "receive." I can see none.

The said court shall receive as evidence on the part of the petitioner or of the United States—

The United States is put on a perfect equality.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Colorado is very fond of assumptions of superior intelligence——

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; I do not claim that.

Mr. VILAS. And the ignorance of everybody else; and I am entirely ready to concede it. But I should like to ask him if he sees no difference between the words "may admit in evidence" and "shall receive as evidence."

Mr. TELLER. Oh, I do. Of course, the court may receive and then the court might not receive.

Mr. VILAS. Of course, the Senator can make a great deal better argument if he misstates the position of his adversary than if he states it correctly.

Mr. TELLER. I did not understand that the Senator proposed to insert "may admit."

Mr. VILAS. That is the language I propose.

Mr. TELLER. That of course leaves the matter discretionary with the court. That we ought not to do. Of course Congress has the right to fix what shall go before the court, leaving the court to determine what weight it will give to it. If Congress were to say that John Smith (who was perhaps disqualified to appear because under the old system, for instance, relatives were excluded from coming before a jury) having an interest or having such relation to the claimant that he was excluded by the common law should be admitted as a witness, does the Senator mean to say that the court is bound then to accept and believe John Smith's testimony? Certainly not. It belittles a court to say that the court shall give to his testimony such weight as it deserves. That is one of the things that permeates and hangs around and lingers in a court. The court must give to it such influence and weight as it sees it is entitled to. It would be a monstrous thing to say that a court could not do that, and it would be equally absurd, in my opinion, to say that the court must do it. It would be a reflection, I should say, upon the sense and judgment and integrity of the court.

Mr. VILAS. I dislike to interrupt the Senator from Colorado, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that that reflection is precisely why the Congress which created the Court of Private Land Claims imposed that on the court in all cases.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I remember there was a great deal of trouble in getting that bill up, and there were some things in it that went out of it. There was a provision in it, the provision of which the Senator speaks, which went out subsequently. It was a provision for letting in certain evidence that never got in when the bill finally reached its conclusion. I had something to do with it and some knowledge of it, and I know all about it.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator what is the utility of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6:

The said court shall receive as evidence on the part of the petitioner or the United States the original expediente presented by the said Gomez to the said Governor Manuel Micheltorena, and the diseño or map accompanying same, or a copy thereof.

Would not those, if they are original and genuine applications and maps, be evidence anyway?

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose they would, unless they had been made so by some record which would recognize them as entitled to be treated as evidence afterwards.

Mr. DOLPH. The question is, first, whether there is a grant.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. DOLPH. Now, would not those papers be evidence to show the boundaries of the grant?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Oregon knows very well that papers coming from a foreign country, unless they had been on file and made so by some statute, are not of themselves evidence, and they must be proved. We know that it is impossible at this hour to prove these existing documents, but they have never been questioned up to the present time. We could have proved them then. You can not prove them to-day, but they have been accepted and considered by the courts and committees.

Mr. DOLPH. Then the effect of this language is to require the court to receive whatever is presented as the original expediente without questioning it.

Mr. TELLER. Of course. There is no question about it.

Mr. DOLPH. Whatever the claimant chooses to present the court is to receive as such.

Mr. TELLER. There is no doubt that the court on behalf of the United States will call for the expediente which has been on file in the court here for thirty or forty-odd years, or nearly that length of time. So, if the claimant brings a false map into court, the United States Government can immediately call for the map which is on file here as evidence.

Mr. DOLPH. How was it proved that it is genuine?

Mr. TELLER. There never was any question about it. It was proved in the proper way at the proper time or it never would have been admitted. But that proof does not exist, and those witnesses have died.

Now, I will go on with the second section, which is so bad. The Senator from Oregon has read it and I need not read it in full. The court shall receive as evidence—

All depositions, proofs, testimony, or affidavits taken before any circuit or district court of the United States in the State of California, or the clerks of such courts, or any commissioner appointed by said courts, or before any notary public, or before any committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, or of any map or deed of record of any department of the Government of the United States, or of any act of Congress through which the boundaries set forth in said expediente and the title of said McGarrahan to the said lands can be shown, protected, and established, or of any oral or written testimony or deposition or copies thereof, concerning said record touching said grant—

I remember very distinctly that the words "touching said grant" were put in the bill by somebody who harped on the language, and thought that it was necessary to bring it close to the grant—from said Governor Manuel Micheltorena to said Vicente P. Gomez, or any patent or record of a patent.

Mr. DOLPH. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not an extraordinary proposition that ex parte affidavits taken before a notary public may be introduced in evidence in the trial of a case?

Mr. TELLER. It is; but this is an extraordinary case. The purpose of the bill is to put the whole matter before the court, to take everything that has been aggregated both by the claimant and by the Government and bring it before the court.

Mr. President, I state here as a fact that there are seven times as much record of this irregular character on behalf of the United States as there is on behalf of the claimant. For every affidavit that the claimant presented to anybody, either to the court, to the committee, or anywhere else, the record will show there are seven and a half times as many presented on behalf of the contestant, the New Idria Mining Company, and ostensibly in behalf of the Government of the United States. I say, all of these things ought to go before the court in the interest of determining what is the truth. The testimony was taken at the time it was fresh in the minds of the people who made it, and I do not suppose there is any court in the world that would give to an ex parte affidavit taken before a notary public the weight that it would give to a deposition taken according to the strict rules of the court. But it is no unusual thing to settle great questions in courts by ex parte affidavits. Questions of injunctions, involving large sums of money, are settled in that way. Receivers are appointed and dismissed simply on ex parte affidavits, and the court takes them and gives to them just such weight as in its judgment the conditions under which they were taken, the surroundings and the character of the men who made them entitled them to, and no more.

Mr. President, there can be no proper solution of this question unless the Government shall put in what it has made in the way of defense heretofore and the claimant shall put in what he has made in the way of sustaining his claim before courts and committees.

Mr. DOLPH. In order that I may not be misunderstood, if the bill should pass as it has been reported, I desire to state that I did not agree with the Senator from Colorado about the expediente and the map being received when presented without any inquiry as to whether it is the true or original map. I think it would be the duty of the court to ascertain that it was the original expediente and the original map before admitting it, even under this language. Therefore I think it is uncertain.

Mr. TELLER. And therefore the term "original expediente" is used.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not want to be understood as assenting to that.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps the Senator is right about that matter, but the very purpose of the bill, and there is no intention of disguising it, is to open to the court the fullest possible opportunity that equity may be done.

This is not a case that goes to a jury. This goes in the first place to a court composed of five men, of whom the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] speaks somewhat in derision, as I have heard him before, but they are five men who I think are equals of any five circuit judges almost anywhere in the United States.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely spoke of them, if the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, as inferior to the Supreme Court of the United States and as having had less experience.

Mr. TELLER. The tribunal to which this case is submitted has come under my notice and observation, and with at least some of its members I have personal acquaintance. One of them I have known for thirty odd years. I wish to say here, because I do not wish to have any reflection on this tribunal go upon the record, that it is a competent, capable tribunal to settle these questions which it is proposed, after a lapse of half a century nearly, to submit to them when they ought to have been submitted and determined within a few years after the admission of California and New Mexico into our territory.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question at some time during his remarks.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. If it is convenient I will ask him now. I was not present when the Senator began his remarks, and I was absent from the Chamber yesterday; so very likely the question which I shall put has been fully answered already either to day or yesterday. The point which I have heard made by persons for whose integrity and legal capacity I have the highest respect, who have had some occasion in one way or another to deal with this case, has been that the claim which it is asserted was made for the applicant originally, through which he now seeks to benefit, did not apply to the tract of land which he now applies for, but applied for a grant some miles off, 20 miles, I think.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. HOAR. What was the exact distance I do not know. That is one of the things which is most often said about this case. Now, what I wish to know is, whether the bill carefully opens that question to the court, so that if the court should be of opinion that the claim did not attach to the land now sought, they would find nothing in the bill to embarrass them in so doing. Very likely, as I said, the honorable Senator from Colorado has answered the question, but I was not present.

Mr. TELLER. I will come to that point. I do not think there is anything in the bill that will embarrass the court in dealing with that question, but I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is no claim made for any other ground.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], since I have put the question to the Senator from Colorado, has handed me 28 California Reports, 1865; and here is a passage which I will read.

Mr. TELLER. What is the case?

Mr. HOAR. It is the case of McGarrahan vs. Maxwell. It contains this language:

> The plaintiff applied to the surveyor-general for the survey of the rancho according to the decree of confirmation entered by the United States district court, and the surveyor-general instructed his deputy to survey the rancho according to that decree, and he approved the survey as made in accordance with the decree. In the petition the land is described as a "certain tract of land called Panoche Grande of the extent of 4 square leagues (now lying and being in the county of San Joaquin), bounded as follows: On the south by the lands of Francisco Aryas, on the north by the lands of Julien Urzua and the low hills, and to the east by the barren hills, as explained by the maps hereto annexed." And in the decree the land is described as "the tract of land situate in the county of Fresno, State of California, known by the name of Panoche Grande, bounded northerly by the lands of one Julien Urzua, southerly by the hills, easterly by the valley of the Tulare, and westerly by the lands of Don Francisco Aryas, containing 4 square leagues of land and no more; and for a more particular description of which said land reference is hereby made to the maps and surveys in the transcript in this case." It is apparent that the two descriptions are essentially different. The survey was not applied for nor made nor approved as the survey of the plaintiff's claim or grant of land, but as the survey of land as finally confirmed by the decree of confirmation; and hence it was not admissible in evidence as an official survey of the plaintiff's claim or grant of land.

I do not know what bearing that has on the question, but the Senator from Vermont called my attention to it.

Mr. TELLER. I can not say about the misdescriptions in the grant. The grant is one of boundaries fixed within which the limited amount of land is to be taken.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me one moment——

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The question is not whether there is a misdescription of the land in the grant. The only question is whether the Senator is sure he has the bill in such shape that there is nothing in it which prevents the court from going fully into the merits of that matter. That is all.

Mr. TELLER. The petition was made for this ground. The decree was entered for this ground, and in 1858 Gen. Beale, who was then the surveyor-general of California, fixed the boundaries of course of this piece of ground. It was a grant within fixed boundaries. At that time the value of the grant was inconsiderable. It was practically worth nothing, and had the claimant, I suppose, known of its immense value he would have had a patent before any squatters got on it. If a grant was made it was made for the ground within the survey, for with the survey the grant was complete as to location.

Mr. DOLPH. Right in this connection will the Senator be kind enough to yield to me again?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I see on page 5, beginning in line 14, it is provided that if the court finds a grant that has been transferred to McGarrahan instead of rendering judgment for the lands within the boundaries of the grant, the judgment is to be for the land within the boundaries of the expediente. I suppose the expediente to be the application for a grant. The provision in the bill is that the court shall render a judgment for the land within the boundaries described in the application and not in the grant. Has the Senator any objection to striking out "as set forth in said expediente," and inserting "the boundaries as described in the grant?"

Mr. TELLER. I think it would be safer to leave it as it is; but I will look into that if the Senator will let me go on.

Mr. DOLPH. It is very strange, it seems to me, for the court to render judgment on the land applied for and not the land granted.

Mr. TELLER. The boundaries in the expediente and in the grant are the same. I do not care to occupy the attention of the Senate with any matters that are not absolutely important to this controversy. As I was saying, when this survey was made—it was made by Gen. Beale—I suppose it may have drifted a little one way or the other, because that was the condition of all those grants, but the survey located the land with the grant, but when the survey was made it was regarded as segregated from the public land. The survey established the boundary of the grant, and from that time no entries could be made within the survey or located grant, although the grant was not fully confirmed. Whenever the survey had been made and established by the surveyor-general and approved by the Interior Department, then it was by virtue of that survey withdrawn from occupation. That is what I wish to have understood. So the boundaries of this grant have been known now since 1858, when the survey was approved, and in all the controversy, if the Senators will take the pains to look, when the question was raised as to who was entitled to the minerals, when the New Idria Company was pouring out a vast amount of valuable minerals from it that the claimant was claiming, they universally admitted that they were within the survey.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Interior Department recognized the boundaries fixed by that survey from that time up to the present?

Mr. TELLER. It has, unquestionably. The survey was approved; there is no question about it. It is entered upon the records of the Land Office, and it is there recognized as if a patent had been issued. I mean, so far as the boundaries are concerned, and that was the land the claimant claimed was granted to Gomez by his grant.

Mr. President, I wish for a moment to get back to section 2. In addition to what has been read is a provision that the court may inquire into the issue of a patent. If at the time Mr. McGarrahan had known the fact, which I do not know that anybody will deny, that President Lincoln had signed the patent, and had gone to the Land Office and asked for it, he would have got it. That would have ended all controversy, and the case would have been forever settled. Whether President Lincoln did sign a patent or not has been a disputed question. There can really be no question of the fact. Mr. Caleb Smith left on record the fact that the patent was to issue; that the case had reached a point where it was determined that McGarrahan was entitled to the patent. The order was made, and it is in writing on the record. Mr. John P. Ushur, afterwards Secretary of the Interior, testified before a committee of the House that the patent did issue. Mr. Beard, a clerk in the office, testified that it was understood the patent had issued. Mr. Stoddard, who was the clerk who signed the patent, testified that he did so sign. The Supreme Court, in the only case where the patent was ever brought into controversy, admitted that the patent had been signed by the President of the United States, but declared it had not been countersigned by Mr. Stoddard, and therefore because it lacked that it was not an effective and valid patent.

When the court passed upon this patent, in the case the Senator referred to, in which he said the court had decided that the patent was not valid, let us see upon what ground it did decide it. Here is the conclusion the court arrived at:

> We are of the opinion that because this record does not show the patent countersigned by the recorder, it is not sufficient to prove title in the party under whom McGarrahan claims. This makes it unnecessary to consider the other questions which have been argued; and the judgment is affirmed.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator if Stoddard's testimony was before the court in that case.

Mr. TELLER. I can not say whether it was or not. It was before the committee. I have the testimony here. I do not know whether it was before the court. I have not that testimony, and I can not say. At all events Mr. Stoddard signed as secretary and did not countersign as recorder. That is what the countersigning means. The court said he must have signed in two capacities. He must say I am secretary to the President to sign patents, or to prove the President's signature if the President did sign it to witness it, and then he must sign as recorder also.

Mr. HUNTON. My friend is mistaken in that respect. The recorder of the Land Office countersigned, and not the private secretary to the President.

Mr. TELLER. Whoever it was, it was not countersigned by the recorder. That is the point they make. Stoddard was the private secretary and not the recorder. So everything has been done, unless it was a mere formal transaction, and if that had been a mere nothing, then of course the title would have been perfect and complete. Now, we say that that is to be gone into by the courts, because we contend, and it has always been contended by McGarrahan, that the patent was also approved by the recorder and entered upon the records of the Department.

Mr. President, if any Senator had the curiosity to go and examine this matter I think he would be willing to admit that the contention of the claimant that the record has been tampered with is a true claim. There is not any doubt whatever about that in my judgment. It is not worth while years afterwards to go into an examination of how these things were done. The testimony shows that there is a difference in two sheets of that patent, a difference in the texture of the material which ought not to have existed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he, while Secretary of the Interior, looked into that matter and found it to be as he states it now?

Mr. TELLER. As Secretary of the Interior it became my duty to pass upon this question with reference to the issuing of a patent to a claimant inside of this survey. I went into it as a great many other men have gone into it, with the belief that it was one of those old trumped-up claims. I found it was not in my province to grant relief to this claimant. I have never had since such examination a doubt about the justice of his claim. I have never had a doubt that there is a chapter connected with it the most disgraceful in the history of this or any other country. I do not for the credit of my country and its administration care about developing it and bringing it out. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] yesterday touched upon it, and gave enough to the Senate when he said that thirty-five men who had held public offices and had contested this claim in their capacities as public officers, turned up as the paid officials of the New Idria Mining Company in its contest against this patent and this claim. Nothing will be gained by going into that matter and discussing it.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that settled beyond controversy?

Mr. TELLER. In my judgment it is. The question is whether there is around this case enough to make the people of the United States believe, as thousands of them do believe, that the Government of the United States has used its great power and its great influence to give to a great corporation that which belongs to an humble citizen of the United States. That is what I believe, Mr. President. All we ask now is that after a lapse of forty years that the evidence Mr. McGarrahan has accumulated from time to time at the expense of his own fortune and his health and his life shall be accepted by the court, with such weight and such value as an intelligent court would give to it, to be reviewed ultimately by the highest judicial tribunal in this country. That is all. Heretofore we provided for a judgment. In my judgment that is what we ought to have done now. I think that when the court says there is a claim, the court should render against the Government of the United States a judgment, and that it should be paid. Senators object to that, and we have omitted it from the pending bill, and we have left it so that there is no obligation on the part of the Government to pay a cent, although the fact shall be established beyond question according to the claim of the claimant.

The President of the United States vetoed the bill passed in the last Congress for the relief of Mr. McGarrahan. We have removed from the bill every objection that he mentioned in his veto message. We have guarded the bill in such a way that no harm can come to the Government of the United States. We provide that the Attorney-General shall look after the claim; we provide, also, that counsel may be employed in addition to look after the claim and to see that no hurt comes to the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, it seems to me we ought to be willing when the interest of the Government of the United States is called into question to trust our own tribunal, to trust our own Attorney-General, to trust our own agencies that we provide for the settling of claims between individuals. Nobody doubts our power.

Mr. President, I am tempted before I quit to read what was said by a distinguished member of this body when a claim of like character was before the Senate. I read it because in my judgment it expresses exactly what ought to be the position of the Government of the United States upon such questions. I read from the speech from the Senator then representing in part the State of Florida, Mr. Jones. I adopt what I am about to read because it is better than I could say it. It was a case that was before the Senate coming from the Committee on Claims called the Warren-Mitchell claim. The Senator from Florida said:

> Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the character of the tribunal that I am addressing to-day. I am not here before a court which strains itself on tiptoe to measure the phraseology of a sentence in a statute. I am here before a body representing the sovereignty and the power of a great people. I am here before a body that has authority to set aside the law if the interests of justice or humanity demand it. I am not addressing myself to the creature of the statute. I am making no appeal to the Court of Claims or to any other inferior tribunal which has no power to move a step unless it finds it in the authority of the written law. I am here addressing myself to the great power of the Senate, representing in part the sovereignty of this Government, from which there is no appeal.
> This question has been argued as though it was a question of law presented to a court of limited jurisdiction, bound down and tied down by the narrow and technical rules of jurisprudence. We are in no such body, sir; and this I would say to my much esteemed friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is not, in my judgment, the kind of a case in which it can be said that the Supreme Court has made the law on the subject, as I understand him to assert.

Mr. President, that is the character of this tribunal. We are here with ample power to do justice. We must do it in accordance with established rules of law, because there is no other method that we may be sure and certain will bring out truth. So we come here and say now, without reference to the lapse of time, without reference to what may have been done, we submit this question to our tribunals to sift it and determine and report to us what are the facts in this case. That is all this bill does.

If the Senate of the United States or if Congress is afraid thus to trust the tribunals of its own creation, in my judgment, there would hardly be much respect entertained for the court.

Mr. President, I promised the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] that I would offer an amendment, which I will now offer. I ask that it may be adopted, as it is but an enlargement of the words that are at present in the bill. In section 3, after the word "land," in line 33, he asked me to move to insert the following:

Are possessed and claimed under laws of the United States, or.

Now let the Secretary read the clause as it would read if amended.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 33, after the word "land," insert:

Are possessed and claimed under laws of the United States, or.

So as to read:

To forthwith ascertain in such manner as may seem to him the most certain and expeditious what tracts of land are possessed and claimed under laws of the United States, or have been conveyed or disposed of by the Government to other persons, etc.

Mr. TELLER. That is for the purpose of protecting the rights of any squatter that may be upon any of this land, because, under the provisions of the bill, if the court should find that the grant was a valid grant, that Mr. McGarrahan is the legal successer in interest of Gomez, then the court will enter a decree, and so far it becomes final as to the land. The desire is to except from it everything that has been occupied, or shall be occupied, up to the time the judgment shall be rendered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is upon the amendment proposed yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado be adopted now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be considered agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Now, I want to say one word as to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. It cuts out the real equity of the bill. It requires of this claimant proof that will be impossible for him to procure. It requires him to produce the evidence of men long since dead, or if not dead, long since departed from the regions where he formerly found them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I hardly think there is a quorum present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Davis,	Kyle,	Roach,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Martin,	Smith,
Brice,	George,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Call,	Gray,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Coke,	Hawley,	Platt,	Vilas,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Power,	Washburn,
Daniel,	Hunton,	Pugh,	Wilson.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BATE] is absent under the order of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 3 by striking out after the word "expediente," in line 14, down to the proviso beginning in line 22, in the following words:

And that the survey made by the United States surveyor-general for the State of California and approved by said surveyor-general on the 11th day of September, 1862, which survey was approved by the Secretary of the Interior December 29, 1862, and is now on file in the General Land Office, shall be considered as forming part of the lands embraced within said boundaries.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 3 after the word "forthwith," in line 32, and insert:

Cause a survey to be made of the tract of land aforesaid, under and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California," approved July 1, 1854, and upon the return and approval of such survey by him it shall be his duty to ascertain, in such manner as may seem the most certain and expeditious, what tracts of land, if any, within the boundaries so ascertained have been conveyed and disposed of by the Government to other persons than the said William McGarrahan, and for the residue of said land embraced within said boundaries shall issue to the said William McGarrahan, as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall not call for the yeas and nays, but ask for a division. I want to see whether the United States is to have any chance at all, and if there are any friends of the United States here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. VILAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. If he were present I am informed that he would vote "nay," I should vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). On this bill I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who, if present, would vote "nay" on the pending amendment. I should vote "yea" if at liberty to vote.

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). On the bill and amendment I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER. During the present week I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. CHANDLER. With the consent of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] I transfer my pair with his colleague [Mr. BATE] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. HARRIS. It is perfectly agreeable to me to make the transfer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I inquire if a quorum has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I am paired with him and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Caffery,	Frye,	Pasco,	Vilas.
Dolph,	Hale,	Stewart,

NAYS—36.

Allen,	George,	Manderson,	Roach,
Berry,	Gibson,	Martin,	Shoup,
Brice,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oregon	Smith,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,
Chandler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Coke,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hunton,	Platt,	Turpie,
Davis,	Kyle,	Power,	Washburn,
Dubois,	Lodge,	Pugh,	Wilson.

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Dixon,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Allison,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Ransom,
Bate,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Vance,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Mills,	Vest.
Butler,	Higgins,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Camden,	Hill,	Palmer,	White,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Wolcott.
Carey,	Irby,	Perkins,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,
Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 4:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as acknowledging any liability on the part of the United States to pay for the land, substances, and materials referred to in this section or as assuming any obligation in that behalf.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado why this provision should be put into the bill unless it is to lay a valid claim for the claimant hereafter to come to Congress with another claim against the United States?

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer the question propounded by the Senator from Vermont in this way: I desire to remove any shade of a doubt about the meaning of the bill. I believe that the bill means the same thing without the amendment as with it, but to remove all doubt on the subject, on consultation with some friends I offered the amendment for that purpose, so that, when the report came from the court, if it ever did, fixing the value of the land and the materials and the minerals, it could not be argued that we had by implication foreclosed the free deliberation of the Senate upon that subject, and when that question shall come, if it ever does, the Senate may be entirely free to acknowledge the liability or to refuse its acknowledgment.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is the present status of the bill. As far as I am concerned I do not object to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 4, on page 6:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as acknowledging any liability on the part of the United States to pay for the land, substances, and materials referred to in this section, or as assuming any obligation in that behalf.

Mr. MORRILL. Here it is proposed to subject the New Idria Mining Company to an examination. It seems to me that there is no machinery provided by which the examination can be made, and if it is to be made, it is to be made to furnish a claim that may amount to $5,000,000 when it is in fact based upon a speculative claim. Instead of being established, as the Senator from Colorado stated, in 1857 it was sold out by Gomez. One half of it was given to one Mr. Ord, an attorney, for his services as attorney; and then the other half was sold out to McGarrahan for $1,100. If this provision is put in for anything at all it is put in as a basis for a claim hereafter to be presented that may amount to $5,000,000 or more. Of course nobody objects to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to strike out in line 14, section 3, the words "as set forth in said expediente," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "of said grant." Let the Secretary state the amendment and then I desire to state my reasons for offering it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out in line 14, section 3, after the word "boundaries" the following:

As set forth in said expediente.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Of said grant.

So as to read:

And who shall cause a patent to be issued therefor to said William McGarrahan, as the successor of the said Vicente P. Gomez, or his heirs or assigns, for the land embraced within the aforesaid boundaries of said grant, etc.

Mr. DOLPH. The expediente was the application of the original grantor, or supposed grantor, for a grant. It does not follow that a grant was given him according to his application. It might be with boundaries very much less. This is a fair sample of the way the bill is drawn. It is provided that if the court finds that there was a valid grant and finds that the title to the grant has been transferred to McGarrahan, the claimant mentioned in the bill, the court shall then proceed to adjudge to him not the lands granted to him, not the lands within the boundaries of his grant, but the lands described in his application, his expediente. That is the reason why it is provided in the bill with so much care that the original expediente shall be admitted in evidence. Evidently the draftsman of the bill supposed without proof as to its genuineness. That was the first view taken by the Senator from Colorado.

But, Mr. President, as it seems this bill is to pass, I want to tell the Senate what was done by the vote just taken on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. A court of California was imposed upon. We heard the history of it from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. A confirmation of this grant was made, or an order was made, and the minutes entered. In pursuance of that fraudulent judgment a survey was made—a survey according to the boundaries of the grant as confirmed in that fraudulent judgment. But the court ascertained it had been imposed upon. The court stayed the entry of judgment. An appeal was taken from that to the Supreme Court of the United States and there the action of the court was sustained and the fraudulent judgment was set aside. But the Senate has just said that, so far as the boundaries of this grant are concerned, that judgment shall be reinstated and made in force. Under a pretense of referring to the court the validity of the title and the lands granted by it, to ascertain what lands are granted, the bill takes that question from this court and says it shall receive as conclusive a survey made in pursuance of the fraudulent grant of a district court of California, afterwards set aside and held to be fraudulent by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there never has been any question about the expediente and the survey being absolutely the same thing, no matter what the Senator from Oregon may say.

Mr. DOLPH. But the expediente is not the grant. It is the mere application for it.

Mr. TELLER. It is the foundation for the grant, and the grant followed it.

Mr. DOLPH. Why not prove the grant?

Mr. TELLER. We do prove the grant.

Mr. DOLPH. Then why say that the expediente shall confirm the land in the application?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions upon the bill with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. HARRIS. I will announce for all that my colleague [Mr. BATE] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I do not know how either Senator would vote if present.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired generally with him, and not knowing how he would vote on this question, I shall not vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. McMILLAN. Understanding that there is lack of a quorum, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McPHERSON. I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. As my vote will not change the result, I will cast it. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Caffery,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Frye,	Pasco,	Vilas.
Cullom,	McMillan,	Platt,

NAYS—34.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Martin,	Smith,
Allen,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Berry,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stockbridge,
Brice,	Harris,	Morgan,	Teller,
Call,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Coke,	Hunton,	Power,	Washburn,
Davis,	Kyle,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Dubois,	Lodge,	Roach,
George,	Manderson,	Shoup,

NOT VOTING—39.

Allison,	Dixon,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gray,	Mills,	Vance,
Camden,	Hale,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Carey,	Hill,	Peffer,	White,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Irby,	Pettigrew,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. This morning I asked the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to withdraw a motion that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. I made the request because of the consent agreement. The Senator at whose instance that agreement was made desires the matter to go over. I therefore now move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will not wait to see whether we can dispose of the pending bill to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion that I make can be disposed of in half a minute. I do not propose to move to adjourn now. However, I will withdraw the motion if the Senator prefers.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would withdraw it until we see whether we can get a vote on the pending bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn. If no other amendment be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. VILAS. I move to amend the bill by inserting at the end of section 2:

But nothing herein shall be taken as directing that the court shall ascribe to any such evidence any other or further effect than in the judgment of the court it ought under all the circumstances to have otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER. My pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] having been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Berry,	Frye,	Pasco,	Vilas.
Caffery,	George,	Platt,
Coke.	Harris,	Quay,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Stewart,

NAYS—30.

Allen,	Gorman.	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,

NOT VOTING—41.

Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to ask attention for a moment to the peculiar language of section 3 and to an amendment that I desire to offer. This section reads, shortened—

That if the court shall find there was a valid grant within the protection of the treaty, and McGarrahan is now the owner of it, the court shall render final judgment, and on reporting it to the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause a patent to be issued therefor to said William McGarrahan for the land embraced within the aforesaid boundaries as set forth in said expediente.

There has certainly been a great deal of controversy as to where that land lay. Some very excellent men who have examined this question have been of the opinion that the land did not lie within the boundaries ascribed to it, but was otherwise granted. So I desire to amend simply by inserting after the word "same," in line 7 of section 3:

and that the land so granted is the same as that included in the survey hereinafter mentioned.

The effect of it will be simply that if the court shall find there was a valid grant protected by the treaty and McGarrahan is the owner thereof, and that the land granted is the same as that surveyed, the patent shall issue.

Mr. TELLER. I hope that the amendment will be voted down. The bill is carefully guarded, and I think if there are any further amendments to be made they might come from the friends of the bill. We have taken pretty nearly everything that its enemies wanted to have adopted.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado again if he thinks that is the legal effect of the bill as it now stands?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I think it is.

Mr. HOAR. I think that statement ought to go on record.

Mr. TELLER. I have gone over the bill very carefully, and so did the committee originally, and nobody can tell what will be the effect of the amendments which are sprung upon us at this time. They may throw the bill out of shape and render it inharmonious. It is utterly impossible to preserve the harmony of the bill if amendments are put upon it in this way which may destroy it. I ask Senators to let the bill go as it stands. Every Senator has the bill before him and can determine for himself how to vote upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 7, after the word "same," it is proposed to insert:

and that the land so granted is the same as that included in the survey hereinafter mentioned.

Mr. HOAR. I was not present at the meeting of the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress when this bill was considered, and I happened to be absent at this Congress when the bill was under consideration by the committee, and I have had no opportunity to give any attention to the language of the bill. When the bill was up for passage in the last Congress I came to the conclusion, on the whole, that it was best that it should pass. There have been, it is true, three or four, or perhaps more, judicial decisions on this grant against McGarrahan. Most of the gentlemen who have investigated it think that those decisions were obtained, perhaps not by misrepresentation or by wrong, but at any rate under circumstances which make it proper, in the exercise of its discretion, that the Government of the United States, in dealing justly with a citizen, should give him an opportunity to have the matter heard again before the court.

While there have been three or four judicial decisions against the claimant, there have been some fifteen or seventeen—I forget the exact number—of reports of committees in one or the other House of Congress in his favor. I think it would be going a great way to impute to the gentlemen who made those reports and to the two Houses of Congress who have supported them indifference to justice or willingness to aid or weakness in being influenced by fraud. I think, therefore, it is reasonable that there should be an opportunity for the courts to reconsider this matter. If it be true, as one court has said, that the lost patent was founded upon a claim which describes one piece of land, and that Mr. McGarrahan, or those claiming under him, now seek a piece of land 20 miles off, it will be a gross outrage on all justice and decency, under the guise of giving him a new trial, to tie up the court in that respect. I have not been able to study this bill enough to satisfy myself whether that question is open to the court or not; but if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who has not only studied, but, I suppose, has drawn the bill, at any rate has given direction to the draft of it, asserts that the bill in his judgment is clear in that respect, as I understand him to do, and that he does not want an amendment put in which may perhaps have more meaning than he can himself understand, I have no doubt that that assertion will be a part of the contemporaneous history of the bill, and that the courts will so construe it, and they will not say they are tied up.

I rose, therefore, mainly for the sake of obtaining an assurance from the Senator, and to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that understanding is here as a part of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ascertain if we understand that correctly. Does the Senator from Colorado agree that the proper interpretation of this bill as it is written is, that if the court should find there was a grant they are to inquire what was the land granted, and that the patent shall go for such land as they find to have been granted?

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it is possible for any other interpretation to be put upon the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. I think when the court determines the grant they have got to practically locate the grant: that is, they have to say, "You have a grant for what?" "For a piece of land." "Where?" What I complain of is that the bill is harmonious upon that theory, and it would be thrown out of joint by the adoption of the amendments which are being offered.

Mr. VILAS. If that is the interpretation which this bill is to have, and the friends of the bill now so understand it, I shall withdraw, with the leave of the Senate, the amendment which I proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin being withdrawn, the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. Had there been a call of the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, I should have announced the pair of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who is absent, with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is also absent. The Senater from California would have voted against the bill, and the Senator from Wyoming would have voted in favor of its passage. I agreed to announce the pair.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to say that we have adjusted our difficulties in regard to the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone, and I therefore ask that the bill be now considered, as it is ready for passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an amendment pending to the bill to strike out "$2,800" and insert "$1,800." It is agreed that that amendment shall be adopted, and then I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. KYLE. I agree to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,800 to Albert E. Redstone, of Tulare County, Cal., for loss sustained by the incorporation of his preemption claim within the limits of the Sequoia Park Reservation, Tulare County, Cal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I move to further amend in line 4, after the word "authorized," by inserting "and directed," so that the Secretary of the Treasury will be "authorized and directed" to pay the money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on the 22d instant, to report it favorably and without amendment. As it is important that the resolution should be promptly passed, I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, or any subcommittee thereof appointed by its chairman, is hereby instructed to inquire into the present condition of the five civilized tribes of Indians, and of the white citizens dwelling among them, and the legislation required and appropriate to meet the needs and welfare of such Indians; and for that purpose to visit Indian Territory, to take testimony, have power to send for persons and papers, and examine witnesses under oath; and shall report the result of such inquiry, with recommendations for legislation; the actual expenses of such inquiry to be paid on approval of the chairman out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the resolution ought to authorize the administration of oaths by the chairman or some member of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. I move to change the language of the resolution after the words "to send for persons and papers," by inserting the words "to administer oaths."

Mr. HARRIS. That will cover the point of my suggestion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say that unless I am very much mistaken that is provided for in the general statutes. That is the reason of the form of resolutions in these cases which has been lately adopted by which any subcommittee appointed by a committee becomes itself a committee of the Senate for that purpose, but there is no harm in adopting the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to state that there is a general statute authorizing committees and subcommittees to administer oaths?

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the point I suggest, that that authority ought to be given the committee.

Mr. HOAR. There is a general statute, if I mistake not, authorizing the chairman of committees of either House of Congress to administer oaths. We established some years ago—I taink I drew and introduced the first resolution which furnishes the form—a form of resolution in such cases, saying that a committee or any subcommittee of their number may examine witnesses. The effect of that form of resolution is to make a subcommittee a committee of the Senate, so that its chairman may administer oaths under the general law.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of the existence of the statute to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HOAR. There is such a statute, and as it would be well for Senators to understand it, I ask that section 101 of the Revised Statutes be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 101. The President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or a chairman of a Committee of the Whole, or of any committee of either House of Congress, is empowered to administer oaths to witnesses in any case under their examination.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. JONES of Arkansas, on the 20th instant, reported it without amendment, and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, have power to employ a stenographer to report hearings in connection with Senate bill 1585, "to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriation for carrying the same into effect;" the compensation of said stenographer to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers properly approved by the chairman of said committee.

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that Senate bill 1545 be laid before the Senate as the unfinished business in accordance with the agreement entered into on the 22d instant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically salsola kali tragus.

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

Mr. MANDERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that by the unanimous consent of the Senate this bill becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. If there be a unanimous-consent agreement I do not object to carrying it out, but I was not aware of any such agreement.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was on the 22d of March a unanimous agreement that the bill referred to by the Senator from North Dakota should become the unfinished business at the conclusion of the McGarrahan bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of that, and I withdraw the objection. Let the bill become the unfinished business.

Mr. TURPIE. What effect will this have upon the special order made for Monday next, if any? There was a previous special order made for the consideration of the tariff bill on Monday next, if I am correct.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think there was no special order. There was simply a notice given by the chairman of the Committee on Finance that on that day he would move the consideration of the tariff bill, but there was no unanimous consent that it be made a special order.

Mr. TURPIE. I understand that there was unanimous consent that it be made a special order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH and Mr. MANDERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS. I am afraid my friend from Indiana is mistaken. I said the other day that there was an agreement of the Committee on Finance that the tariff bill should be taken up on next Monday, but I am not aware of any unanimous consent of the Senate in respect to the taking of it up. I give notice now, however, that if the bill referred to by the Senator from North Dakota or any other bill becomes the unfinished business, a majority of the Senate will determine whether it shall remain as the unfinished business for Monday or during Monday.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course.

Mr. TURPIE. That is all very well, but what effect will the taking up of the bill referred to by the Senator from North Dakota and making it the unfinished business have upon the status of the tariff bill, which I think was made the special order for Monday next?

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to hear again stated the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I made no request. I was simply correcting a misapprehension. The unfinished business, by the action of the Senate, is the bill referred to by the Senator from North Dakota, it so appearing by the Calendar. As to the tariff bill, there was a statement made by the Senator from Tennessee that his understanding was that the Committee on Finance had agreed that the bill should be taken up on the 2d of April; but as to that bill there is no special order and no unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. But the unfinished business can be displaced at any moment.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course it can, by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. I inquire how the bill to which reference is made became the unfinished business, and when it was made?

Mr. MANDERSON. It was made by unanimous consent of the Senate on the 22d instant.

Mr. FAULKNER. If there was a unanimous agreement it can be made the unfinished business, but it can not be so made unless by a unanimous agreement.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is what I stated to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdrew my objection because several Senators stated to me that there was a unanimous agreement.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. So there was.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is no doubt about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HARRIS. Then let the unfinished business be stated, and then we shall dispose of it on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically salsola kali tragus.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 2, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 29, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TRANSPORTATION CLAIMS—PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims in favor of the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad companies and leased lines for transportation, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILL 6167.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Treasurer of the United States in regard to House bill 6167; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NEW MACHINERY, TREASURY BINDERY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the chief of the division of stationery of the Treasury Department, in relation to procuring new machinery for the Treasury bindery; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FINDINGS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House copies of findings of the Court of Claims in the following cases, namely: Alpheus Meuillon, administrator, vs. The United States, and M. C. Vinton, administrator, vs The United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims.

IMPROVED METHODS OF ACCOUNTING, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 6478) to improve the methods of accounting in the Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the joint commission appointed to investigate the Executive Departments of the Government, etc., and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, RED WING, MINN.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6110) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Red Wing, Minn.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Red Wing, in the State of Minnesota, a municipal corporation existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, is hereby authorized and empowered to erect, establish, and maintain, or authorize the erection, establishment, and maintenance of a foot and wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point near Bluff street, in the city of Red Wing, State of Minnesota, so as to connect with the opposite shore of said river in the State of Wisconsin; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in which any portion of said bridge or obstruction touches. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed by the said city of Red Wing from time to time and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a high bridge, with a channel span giving a clear width of water way of not less than 360 feet and a clear headroom of not less than 55 feet above high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the clear headroom under other than channel spans may be reduced to 10 feet above high-water mark; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its provisions and conditions shall be a lawful structure, over which may be transmitted the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States free of charge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plans and location of the bridge are decided by the Secretary of War to be such as will not materially affect the interest of navigation the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall at all times be so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the the Light-House Board; and the said structure shall be changed or removed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation any modification by law when the public good shall, in the judgment of Congress, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date thereof.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Amend by striking out, in line 31 of section 4, the word "any," and substituting therefor the word "and."

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the committee agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HALL of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM B. CHAPMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanmious consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 4328) for the relief of William B. Chapman, George W. Street, John W. Hoes, Emmet C. Tuthill, and Joseph H. Curtis.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke so much of Special Orders numbered 229, Headquarters Department of Virginia and North Carolina, dated August 21, 1864, as dismissed First Lieut. William B. Chapman, First Lieut. George W. Street, First Lieut. John W. Hoes, First Lieut. Emmet C. Tuthill, and First Lieut. Joseph H. Curtis, Third New York Infantry Volunteers, from the service of the United States, and to issue to each of these officers a certificate of honorable discharge as of the date of the order of dismissal: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to allow to any officer named therein, or his heirs, any pay or allowances to which said officer would not have been entitled if he had been honorably discharged on August 21, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if this is simply a restoration of these parties to the roll.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It is simply to take away the charge of dismissal.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was ordered to be laid on the table.

LOT 8, BLOCK 93, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6042) to authorize sale of lot 8, block 93, city of Hot Springs, by school directors thereof, and use of proceeds for school purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the directors of the school district of the city of Hot Springs, Ark., are hereby authorized to sell and convey, at private or public sale, lot 8, in block 93, on Ouachita avenue, in said city, as shown by the survey and plat of the United States Commissioners for Hot Springs, heretofore designated and set apart by the Secretary of the Interior as a site for a schoolhouse under act approved June 16, 1880, and to apply the proceeds of such sale for the benefit of the common schools of said city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JESSE S. MORRISON.

Mr. FLYNN and Mr. HUNTER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] is recognized. The Chair must alternate in recognitions.

Mr. FLYNN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Jesse S. Morrison.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a patent in fee simple be issued to Jesse S. Morrison, his heirs and assigns, for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter and lot 7, section 8, township 12 north, range 7 west, Indian meridian; the south half of the southeast quarter, section 29, township 13 north, range 7 west, Indian meridian; the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and lot 8, section 8, township 12 north, range 7 west, Indian meridian; and the north half of the southeast quarter, section 29, township 13 north, range 7 west, Indian meridian, Oklahoma Territory, said patent being in lieu of patents issued on March 6, 1882, to "Ben-nank" (or Edward Morrison) and to "Wo-ca-sa now-ka" (or Nellie Morrison), now deceased, the children of said Jesse S. Morrison and allottees under section 13 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

The Committee on Public Lands recommended the following amendments:

In lines 3 and 4, after the word "to," strike out the words "Jesse S. Morrison, his," and after the word "heirs," strike out the words "and assigns," and insert after the word "to," in line 3, the word "the," and after the word "heirs," the words "of Edward Morrison and Nellie Morrison, late of Oklahoma Territory, now deceased."

Also, in line 18, strike out the words "the children of said Jesse S. Morrison."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it was impossible to understand that bill from the reading. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. FLYNN. I think the gentleman is familiar with the case. It is reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. PATTERSON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FLYNN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] will permit this to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. HOLMAN, for the rest of this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. COOMBS, for the rest of this day, on account of sickness.

METHODS OF ACCOUNTING IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the regular order is called up I ask that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] yield to allow me to present a privileged report, and to have it recommitted and printed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. DINGLEY. By instructions of the joint commission to inquire into status of laws organizing the Executive Departments, I desire to present a privileged report on bill H. R. 6478 for the purpose of having the bill and accompanying report printed and recommitted to the joint commission.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6478) to improve the methods of accounting in the Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks to have this bill and report printed and recommitted to the joint commission, and it will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 19, 1894:

An act (H. R. 2627) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee;

An act (H. R. 1133) to remove the charge of desertion standing against John W. Wacker.

On March 22, 1894:

An act (H. R. 5258) granting a pension to Hannah Lyons.

On March 24, 1894:

An act (H. R. 4831) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge at or near Sioux City, Iowa," approved March 2, 1889, as amended by acts of April 30, 1890, and February 7, 1893.

On March 29, 1894:

An act (H. R. 5530) to regulate the making of property returns by officers of the Government;

An act (H. R. 5529) to repeal section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to accounts of the Treasury of the United States; and

An act (H. R. 5425) for a charter for the Iowa and Nebraska Pontoon Bridge Company.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 146) providing for the payment of salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act of May 5, 1892, as amended by the act of November 3, 1893.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1919) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Caddo Lake at or near Mooringsport, La., and Cross Bayou near Shreveport, La.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 144) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive at the subtreasury in the city of New York from R. T. Wilson & Co. or assigns, the money, amounting to $6,740,000, to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, and to place the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 147) authorizing the transfer of furniture and carpets to the rooms now occupied by the United States courts at Chicago.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE, O'NEILL VS. JOY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the contested election case of O'Neill vs. Joy. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] on yesterday moved to reconsider the vote by which the House disagreed to the first part of the substitute offered by the minority of the Committee on Elections, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moved to lay that motion on the table. The yeas and nays were ordered. A vote was taken and no quorum appeared. The vote will now be taken upon the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider entered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 11, not voting 187; as follows:

The SPEAKER. The doors will now be closed and the Clerk will call the names of members who failed to respond on the first call.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. McCLEARY, excused. He left the House ill about an hour ago.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TAWNEY (when the name of Mr. KIEFER was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. KIEFER] be excused. He has been called away from the city by a telegram.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be excused for this day's session.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. Upon this call 249 gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are absent without leave of the House. This order shall continue in force beyond the adjournment of the session of to-day, and until the further order of the House. The Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to employ a sufficient number of deputies to execute this order, and to take into custody such absentees wherever they may be found, and all leaves of absence, except for sickness, are hereby revoked.

Mr. PATTERSON. Upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. Is that in order, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

Mr. PATTERSON demanded the yeas and nays, but subsequently withdrew the demand.

The House divided on ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 104, noes 3.

Mr. REED. There is no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair hear me a moment on that point?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he desires to discuss a question that has been repeatedly decided.

Mr. REED. This resolution contains four propositions——

The SPEAKER. All looking to the obtaining of a quorum.

Mr. REED. Precisely; but it also continues from day to day. Now, it must take a quorum of the House to do that, because our rules do not in any way provide for anything except the obtaining of a quorum by this method, while the proposition here is to continue the order from day to day. I respectfully submit to the Chair that nothing but a quorum of the House can make an order of that kind.

The SPEAKER. The question is not new. Under the Constitution and the rules of the House, fifteen members with the Speaker, if there be one, may compel the attendance of absent members; and in the absence of a quorum nothing can be done except to adjourn or to adopt measures relating to obtaining a quorum. The proposition of the gentleman from Maine is that less than a quorum can not continue from day to day an order for the arrest of absent members. The practical effect of that suggestion, if it were adopted, would be that the members who might be here, constituting less than a quorum—fifteen or eighteen or twenty perhaps—would be forced to stay in session (because they could not take a recess) if they desired to obtain the attendance of absentees; until such absentees were brought in, and if any of such absentees lived, for instance, in California or Texas, the members engaged here in the endeavor to obtain a quorum would be obliged to remain in session continuously four, five, six, seven, or eight days and nights until the Sergeant-at-Arms should return with the members who had been absent.

A recess can not be taken under such circumstances; and if by reason of an adjournment the proceeding to secure the attendance of absentees falls, then the House would be utterly powerless to secure the presence of a quorum. The Chair submits that it has been repeatedly held in the history of the House that no such absurd contention as that could be right or ought to be enforced. [Applause.] On the contrary, it has been uniformly held that the House in the absence of a quorum may do anything looking to obtaining a quorum. The present proposition is nothing more than a revocation of leaves of absence and an effort to compel the attendance of absent members by ordering the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest them, it being further provided that the proceeding shall not fall by reason of an adjournment. It seems to the Chair that this resolution suggests the only practical method of obtaining the presence of a quorum.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the previous question is ordered on this resolution, will it be debatable?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, a proposition upon which the previous question has been ordered is open to debate for fifteen minutes on each side after the ordering of the previous question, if there has been no debate prior thereto. The Chair does not now see any reason why the ordinary rule would not apply here. There may be some reason to the contrary, but it does not occur to the Chair now.

Mr. REED. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had determined some time ago that the ayes had it.

Mr. REED. I ask for tellers. I made, in the first place, the point that there was no quorum; the Chair decided that a quorum was not necessary. I now ask for tellers on the count.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the demand comes too late.

Mr. REED. If the Chair will reflect a moment, I think it will clearly appear that I am not too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The Chair is inclined to adopt a liberal ruling. As the gentleman seems to think that he has a right to make the demand for tellers, the Chair will hear him in behalf of that proposition.

Mr. REED. I am quite sure the Chair upon reflection will perceive that I had two rights. One was to make the point that there was no quorum; and then I had also the right to call for tellers upon the count. If I had in the first instance called for tellers on the count I would have waived my point of no quorum, because the point of no quorum must be made at once; but by having made that point, I can not be held to have waived my other right—the right to call for tellers. The question is now upon the count. On that I ask for tellers. The Chair will see, I think, that if I had demanded yeas and nays that demand would have been recognized; and the demand for tellers is also within my right, provided the demand is sustained by one-fifth of a quorum. The Chair will perceive that the suggestion which would deny my right to tellers would on the same ground prevent me from demanding the yeas and nays, which certainly can not be maintained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Maine is right about this matter. The question is on the demand for tellers.

Tellers were ordered: and Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. REED were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 136, noes 14.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 2, not voting 186; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that my colleague, Mr. MARTIN, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STONE of Kentucky). On this question the yeas are 164, nays 2. No quorum has voted.

Mr. PATTERSON. It does not require a quorum, Mr. Speaker; this is a proceeding under the call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stands corrected. The previous question is ordered, and under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to control one-half of the time, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] the other half.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for a vote on the resolution unless some gentleman desires to debate it.

Mr. REED. I yield five or ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the gentleman having in charge the performance on this occasion, to withdraw this piece from the stage, and proceed to some other business of some importance to the people of this country.

In the first place I want to point out to the other side that, in my judgment, there can be no greater invasion of the rights of a member of this House than that which is embodied in the resolution now pending before it and which we are asked to adopt. There is no greater breach of good faith, no more distinct and unqualified repudiation of all that is due between gentlemen, than the attempt to adopt and enforce such a resolution as that now before us, and offered for a purpose to which I will address myself very briefly.

The members of this House—and we may as well accept it, for we all understand that as a matter of fact a great many members of Congress are compelled, on occasions, to leave Washington City and go somewhere else throughout the country on matters of importance to themselves or their constituents. I can say to some gentlemen on the other side that during the ensuing ninety days a good many of them will have important business, and business of such importance that I do not think they can satisfactorily adjust it even if they left here now, went to their homes, and devoted the whole of the intervening time to its settlement. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, what is the proposition? A member of Congress respectfully asks leave of absence of this body for a given number of days, upon the ground of important business. It is granted to him by the unanimous consent of this body, and trusting to that good faith and that unanimous consent of the House, he takes the train and goes to a distant State. Suddenly, and without any notice to him, he finds that all leaves of absence are revoked, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms, or his deputy, has been ordered to take him into custody and bring him before the bar of the House. Why, we do not treat the commonest criminals in that way.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Even out in Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Neither in Ohio nor anywhere else. It is simply a breach of good faith on the part of the House, and a decided breach of good manners. Now, I do hope that such a resolution will not be adopted.

But what do we find in connection with the present proceedings? I call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side of the House to the fact that on yesterday 27 Democrats—and that is something which seldom occurs in this House—voted against the report of the majority of their Committee on Elections. Why did they do it? They did it because they knew, and the country knows, and there are not ten men in the House that do not know, that the adoption of that majority report is a crime against the elective franchise of this country. It is simply an overriding and disregard of the expressed opinions of the voters of the Congressional district from which these gentlemen come.

Can we go before the people of the United States and say to them that we have turned out a member of Congress, and in doing so have taken 937 ballots, absolutely proper in form, cast under a law about which there is no controversy, and simply because certain initials of the judges of election were not placed on them—a mere technical informality—we have concluded to set aside the wishes of the voters and elect another man who was not only repudiated by the political majority of his district, but was repudiated by a personal failure of himself in the contest? And to bring this about what have we before us? For the purpose of doing what the Committee on Elections has suggested they are endeavoring to force the Democratic majority of the House to do that which they are reluctant to do. For the gentleman in charge of this measure can not deny that there is a manifest reluctance on the part of his side of the House to commit this outrage upon the people of this country.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], when he stated on yesterday that he would not consent to believe that that side of the House would do this thing until he heard the vote announced, was not very far wrong in his estimate of the sentiment on the Democratic side of the House on the question; for when the vote was called last night a number of gentlemen were absent who might as well have been present, and 27 of the number voted against the report of the majority of the committee.

Several MEMBERS. And three from his own State.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And three Democrats from the State of Missouri, with a full knowledge of the law of that State, very much to the mortification, no doubt, of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN], who has suddenly become such a pronounced advocate of the enforcement of the law, the technical pound of flesh, against the expressed will of the people—three distinguished gentlemen from Missouri have voted against his report, showing that they know something about the law of Missouri, something about the spirit of that law, and something about the effect that this sort of transaction will have.

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend from Ohio tell me how many gentlemen from Missouri voted in favor of the report?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] found with himself a majority of the Missouri delegation. There is a strong pressure in favor of the report of the majority, but the significant vote of gentlemen from that State I point to as showing that these gentlemen know something about the law of Missouri, and that the particular argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] did not weigh with them. What effect it may have had upon the judgment of the other members from Missouri I am not here to say.

I know nothing about it; nor do I impugn the motives of those gentlemen.

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend allow me——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has time of his own, and a voice of his own also.

Mr. BROWN. No; I have no time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In order to perpetrate this outrage, in order to do all this, the public business of the country is suspended. The Treasury is almost empty, and the President is appealing here again for more bonds to carry on the Government, and when that is the case we stand here occupying the time of the House, occupying the time of the country, and spending the money of the country, for the purpose of doing that which, I repeat and close by saying, is a complete repudiation of every principle of elective government in this country.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] I will say that if I should go anywhere to learn good manners, I should not consult the gentleman who has just taken his seat.

Now, the resolution which has been offered, and which is now under consideration, is precisely the resolution which was adopted a few days ago by this House. Therefore I shall not comment further upon the substance of the resolution; but I desire to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], to the Democratic side of this House, in respect to the main question.

There is, Mr. Speaker, a principle involved in this controversy which at least ought to be dear to every Democratic heart. Only a few weeks ago we repealed what were known as the election laws. Now, there are two ideas prevalent in this House. One idea is that this House is the exclusive judge of the elections and qualifications of its own members, and that it is not bound by the statutes of the States, or by the decisions of the States construing their statutes. There is another idea, and it is the Democratic idea, and that is that the matter of the election of members of Congress is peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the several States: that they have the right to say who shall exercise the franchise: that they have the right to throw such safeguards around the ballot and the franchise as they may think proper in the exercise of their sovereignty.

Now, the simple question presented to this House is this: The State of Missouri has enacted a law. It is a mandatory law in respect to elections in that State; and the only question to be determined is, whether this Democratic House will stand by Democratic precedents, whether it will stand by a cardinal doctrine of Democracy, to the effect that the States have the right to regulate elections, that the States are supreme in enacting election laws which not only govern their own people, but govern Congress in construing them. That is the question. Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] goes on and argues this case on its merits. The report of the majority of the committee does not touch the facts of this case, and I said distinctly on yesterday that the majority of the committee did not do it, because the legal question was so perfectly satisfactory to the majority, and it must be so perfectly satisfactory to every lawyer, at least to every Democratic lawyer, that it was unnecessary to go into the voluminous record of facts. But I have examined the facts.

Other members of the committee have done so, and I desire to say to my Democratic friends that in my humble judgment John J. O'Neill received a majority of the legal votes cast at that election, but independent of that, the sovereign State of Missouri has enacted this statute. It has solemnly declared upon its statute books that, unless these ballots are initialed or the signatures of the distributing judges are signed on the backs of the ballots, they are not legal ballots; that they should not be received and put into the ballot box. That is a plain mandatory statute.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can not yield. I desire to impress upon you that this plain mandatory statute enacted by the sovereign State of Missouri is, in my humble judgment, binding upon the American Congress; and if it is binding upon the American Congress, there is no other alternative but to seat John J. O'Neill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REED. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have ten minutes remaining.

Mr. REED. Perhaps some other gentleman would like to speak on your side?

Mr. PATTERSON. No; go ahead.

Mr. LACEY. Perhaps the gentleman will answer a question right now in his own time?

Mr. PATTERSON. Answer it in your own time.

Mr. LACEY. You have plenty of time.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. REED. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I am quite satisfied with the conduct of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] in addressing his remarks entirely to his side of the House. It showed the appreciation on his part and others of precisely where the difficulty is. The difficulty which confronts us is really upon the other side. Since the foundation of this Government there has never been any occasion to pass any general statute, as it were, allowing the Sergeant-at-Arms to have control and command of the members. The exigency must be very great which causes that to be done. But I am not one of those who criticise the measures which gentlemen seem to think necessary to compel the action of their own friends. Doubtless they know them better than I possibly could.

The Speaker has decided that less than a quorum can compel the attendance of members of this House, notwithstanding any adjournment of the House; and when I ventured to raise the point on his action, in language which I thought was not chosen, he regarded my objection as absurd, because, he says, if you keep this House in session until you can get a man from California it is an absurdity to say that, and also that you can not adjourn; while, at the same time, he is not in the least penetrated by the absurdity of going 3,000 miles, to California, and getting a man and bringing him here, and then being powerless to count him after you have got him here. [Laughter and loud applause on the Republican side.]

Then I beg leave to make one other suggestion, not as to the general situation, due to the other side, but as to this particular situation, which is also due to them. I can give them no praise for their conduct upon the general conduct of affairs; but I do give them unstinted praise, some of them, for their conduct in this particular affair. It is a fine sense of propriety which causes them to refuse to give a quorum which is necessary for the perpetration of the outrage which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] has so aptly described—a refusal to allow a member of this House a seat here who has the certificate of the "sovereign" State of Missouri. [Laughter and applause.] He has added new dignity to that outrage. I think it was no small outrage to deprive the citizens of Missouri of their votes, honestly cast, and the intention of whom can not for an instant be disputed; but it seems that it is more than that. It is not only the rights of 900 citizens of the State of Missouri that have been violated, but it is the rights of that "sovereign" State. [Laughter.] I wish I could give to the word "sovereign" State the dignity and magnificence with which it fills the mouth of a Southern gentleman while he is trying to perpetrate some outrage upon the Union. [Laughter and loud applause on the Republican side.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

The Speaker, on rising, was greeted with loud applause on the Democratic side.

Mr. CRISP. I have no purpose, Mr. Speaker, of entering into a controversy with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] as to any ruling I have made. I have no purpose to urge that side of the House to the discharge of their duties as Representatives of the people.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You do not need to do that. We will do that without other intervention.

Mr. CRISP. Often have I heard the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and other distinguished gentlemen on that side of the House talk about the iniquity, the absolute outrage of members of the House who were present sitting in their seats and refusing to vote when their names were called. We have been denounced time and time again for doing that.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I counted you. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRISP. Yes, when the gentleman from Maine had by his course of conduct in the chair put his party in a position where they either had to vindicate his action or denounce him, they sustained his action in counting a quorum. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] And the gentleman knows as well as he sits in that chair that prior to that time he never could get a Republican caucus to authorize a rule to count a quorum.

Mr. REED. I never tried.

Mr. CRISP. Ah, the matter was up. Of course I was not in the caucus, but that is history. However, I do not care to dwell upon that. The gentleman from Maine is known to the country as having a hobby, and gentlemen on that side blindly follow him, no matter how their own convictions may differ from his.

He is the great leader on that side. You will hear them privately saying "REED ought not to do that," or "This is wrong," but when REED says "Do it" they all step up and do it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] In this case which is pending the Committee on Elections had made an agreement to have six hours' debate, and thereafter when the matter was called up the member of the Committee on Elections who had previously been raising the question of consideration sat silent in his seat. Prior to that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH], a member of the minority of the committee, whenever the case was called up, had raised the question of consideration, but on that occasion he did not raise it; the gentleman from Maine, the chief supervisor of all that side, raised the question of consideration on the case.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What you want is a chief supervisor on your side, and then you can get your men here. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. What we possess, and what you want, is independence of thought and purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There never has been a chief supervisor on this side who could wave his hand and have everyone do as he directed; the very fact that gentlemen on this side vote against the report of the Committee on Elections is evidence of what I say, that members over here follow the dictates of their own consciences.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest that you will hear from the chief supervisor of your side when you have that message which is on the desk read. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I suppose the gentleman's remark was wise and witty; I did not hear it. But now I want to say a word to this side of the House. As I said a moment ago, we can do nothing with those gentlemen over there. [Laughter.] The leader that they follow without question has one great thought, one great idea in his mind, and that is to force this side to count a quorum. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Every other question, no matter how great, no matter how important it may be, sinks into insignificance. With that gentleman the great point is that this side shall be forced to count a quorum, and he is in a position where every single member on that side feels bound to follow him. No; I take that back. There are one or two exceptions; but the gentleman from Maine is in a position where nearly every gentleman on that side, without regard to any other considerations, obeys his behest in respect to voting or not voting.

Now, I want to remind this side of the House—for that is my main concern—that we are responsible for the business of the House. We are not responsible for gentlemen on the other side failing to discharge their duty. They sit here day after day and refuse to vote, and do all they can to embarrass this side. Not only on election cases, but on every kind of question that arises, they seek to embarrass us by refusing to do their duty as members of the House. There is a mistake in the public mind as to the condition here with relation to a quorum. You hear people saying that the Democrats have 80 or 90 majority, and the inference is drawn that we have that number more than a quorum, but of course we have not. There are only about thirty-five Democrats more than a quorum in the membership of this House. Four or five of our members are absent because of sickness; six are absent in accordance with an order of the House attending a funeral. So that we are compelled to keep here nearly all the time almost all of our membership to meet the situation which is forced upon us.

Now, what I want to suggest to members on this side is, that the most important duty of a man who accepts the trust of a member of Congress is to come to this Hall at the daily hour of meeting and to stay here until the House adjourns; and if some particular constituent desires an office and the member has an engagement with somebody to aid that constituent in getting that office, let him recollect that all his constituents are concerned in his presence here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am not discussing the merits of this contested-election case. That is not the real question here. The real question is beyond that. It is as to the power of the majority of this House to conduct its business. Every single member of the majority ought to feel responsible for that. Every single Democrat ought to vote on every proposition whether he opposes it or favors it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If he opposes it, let him exercise the time-honored Democratic right of voting against it, but let him not aid and assist gentlemen on the other side who are seeking in every possible way to embarrass the majority here.

If members on this side of the House—the Democrats of this body—will attend the sessions of the House there will be no difficulty. My friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] complains of the hardship of revoking leaves of absence. Who is responsible for that? Why, sir, in the ordinary course of events we might allow fifty, sixty, or seventy gentlemen to be absent and still have amply enough members left to transact business, provided gentlemen on the other side are to be counted—I mean relied on to take part. [A laugh on the Republican side.] Ah, "still harping on my daughter." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

But that is not the question. These leaves of absence are granted on the assumption that gentlemen who are present will participate in the business of the House. When by their action in failing to participate they leave this side without a quorum, I submit to my friend from Ohio that if there be any discourtesy, any want of such treatment as one gentleman should extend to another, the gentleman and his friends who refuse to vote and who thus break a quorum are responsible—not this side, who must go on with the business of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

All that I care to say is what I have said. I desired to make this appeal to members on this side of the House to rely upon themselves and their brother Democrats, and to announce what they must realize from their experience during this Congress that in no case can we rely on the other side of the House to aid in transacting in an orderly manner the public business which we have been sent here to dispose of. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STONE of Kentucky). The gentleman has no time left. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Ohio had five minutes; and I spoke but five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio spoke ten minutes by authority of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. He did not consume ten minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He consumed ten minutes, and the gentleman from Maine five minutes.

Mr. REED. I think it was judicious to put these remarks of the gentleman from Georgia into the last ten minutes. The House will understand that I have no opportunity to reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. NEILL and Mr. O'NEIL objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will resume their seats. The House will be in order.

Mr. REED. I desire a division of this question—the first division to end with the word "House;" the second to end with the word "found," and the third to end with the word "revoked."

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the proposition be read.

Mr. REED. I call for the reading of the first proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the pending resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. REED. I call for a division of the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that this proposition is not divisible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. My point is that this is a single proposition for revoking leaves of absence and sending for absentees. No part of it is complete without the other parts; and therefore it must stand as a single proposition. If you adopt any one of these clauses alone it would have no effect—would accomplish nothing. The whole resolution or order is necessary to accomplish the desire of the House. It does not embrace several separate and independent propositions; the different clauses constitute one proposition, and need not even have a period between them; a comma would be sufficient.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to be heard?

Mr. REED. I do, unless the Chair is of my opinion and does not care to hear me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule unless the gentleman from Maine wants to be heard.

Mr. REED. I wish to call attention to the sixth paragraph of Rule XVI:

> On the demand of any member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

Each of the propositions I have indicated is a distinct and substantive proposition, and would be effectual if the others were taken away. I hardly know how to argue this question, it seems so entirely plain and simple. "Ordered" is the enacting word.

The first clause is:

That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are absent without leave of the House. This order shall continue in force beyond the adjournment of the session of to-day and until the further order of the House.

I think that probably might be said to contain two propositions; but I desire to be entirely safe, because I know that the rulings are sometimes strict.

The Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to employ a sufficient number of deputies to execute this order, and to take into custody such absentees wherever they may be found.

That is a substantive and distinct proposition.

And all leaves of absence, except for sickness, are hereby revoked.

That is another substantive proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. My understanding, Mr. Speaker, of a substantive proposition is one that will stand by itself and make sense by itself. Now, if you adopt this last order and reject the others, as the House might do, it would make no sense at all. If you begin to adopt them separately, every gentleman knows that you might succeed in producing only confusion out of an order that is in itself clear, explicit, and complete. So you must adopt the whole, taking all of the proposition as one. It means one thing, namely, to secure the presence of the members of the House for the transaction of the public business.

Mr. REED. This is a very simple proposition; there can be no question about it.

Mr. SPRINGER. But what would it mean if you adopted only the last provision?

Mr. REED. Why, it would mean that all leaves of absence are revoked. That has been repeatedly done.

Mr. SPRINGER. But take the last proposition and read it.

Mr. REED. Very well:

And all leaves of absence, except for sickness, are hereby revoked.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the last paragraph?

Mr. REED. That is it.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the second?

Mr. REED. It is:

The Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to employ a sufficient number of deputies to execute this order and to take into custody such absentees wherever they may be found.

Mr. SPRINGER. What does that mean?

Mr. REED. That he is ordered by the House to take enough people to arrest and hold in custody and bring before the bar of the House the members who are absent without leave.

Mr. SPRINGER. But suppose you do not adopt the first part of the resolution?

Mr. REED. Then he would still have the right to take into custody all absent members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question.

This is a proposition to compel the attendance of all absent members, those in the city as well as out of it, and the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the question is not divisible.

The question now is on the adoption of the resolution as a whole.

Mr. PAYNE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

[Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. REED. Not at all. It was not possible to make the appeal before now.

Mr. PAYNE. The question has not been put, and I had the right to make the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question on the adoption of the resolution had been stated, but not submitted to the House.

Mr. REED. And pending that the appeal was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that there had been no vote taken on the pending question, and he thinks the gentleman from New York was in time.

The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (putting the question). All who believe that the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the House say "aye."

Mr. BROWN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the question before the House is whether the appeal shall be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the pending question on the appeal is whether or not the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I have moved to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. How can the gentleman do that when we are proceeding to divide on the question of sustaining the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BROWN. Because the motion was made before that vote was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois made the motion before the House began to divide.

Mr. PAYNE. But the Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Illinois, but proceeded to put the question on sustaining the decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would have put the question if the gentleman from New York had not interrupted him.

Mr. PAYNE. It is too late now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that it is not too late, because the division has not commenced. The question is upon the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. But the question had been taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it, and I had called for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As many as favor laying the appeal on the table will say "aye;" those opposed, "no."

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 156, noes none.

Mr. REED and Mr. PAYNE demanded tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 161.

Mr. PAYNE. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor ordering the yeas and nays will rise and be counted. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. PATTERSON. That demand comes too late. The Chair has announced the result.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course the Chair had announced the result. I could not make the demand for tellers until the Chair announced the result.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call had not commenced.

Mr. SPRINGER. Tellers on the yeas and nays are never called for when the yeas and nays are ordered, but only when they are refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announced that the yeas and nays were ordered

Mr. PAYNE. I could not demand tellers until the Chair made that announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are required to take the vote by yeas and nays when one-fifth of those present vote in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. But I have the right to have two members count those who favor ordering the yeas and nays, as they pass between the tellers, to see whether one-fifth of those present demand the yeas and nays, and I made my demand immediately upon the announcement by the Speaker pro tempore that a sufficient number had evidently risen. I have a right to have the count made by two members of the House. I have already made this demand during this session when the Speaker of the House was in the chair, and he has recognized it and was compelled to appoint tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] demands tellers upon the yeas and nays. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] will take their places. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 131, noes 6.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report that 131 gentlemen second the demand for the yeas and nays, and that 6 oppose it. The yeas and nays are ordered. The question is on the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 175, not voting 109; as follows:

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The name of Mr. LACEY was called, and he voted "yea."

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 177; the nays 64. The yeas have it, and the appeal is laid upon the table.

Mr. LACEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. That vote was upon the motion to lay the appeal upon the table itself.

Mr. REED. That is not the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. How did he vote on that question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa changed his vote from nay to yea.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PATTERSON. I submit that it is not in order.

Mr. REED. Quite so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear any suggestion. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Iowa moves to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table. The Chair does not see why it is not in order.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. It is. The House is in a call; and any matter is in order which looks to the obtainment of a quorum; and the House may adjourn if it sees proper to do so. The gentleman from New York moves that the House now adjourn.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is evidently a dilatory motion.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, it is after 5 o'clock now.

The SPEAKER. The House can vote the motion down if they desire to do so. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 120.

Mr. PAYNE. Tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. On what motion?

The SPEAKER. On the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to raise a question of order against the motion submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. That has been decided once.

Mr. REED. That has been decided. It is too late.

The SPEAKER. Is there any suggestion offered that the decision is wrong?

Mr DOCKERY. I do not raise the question on this motion.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 58, nays 160, not voting 134; as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 58 and the nays 158; so the House refuses to adjourn. The Chair desires to call attention to the fact that a few moments ago the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] moved to reconsider the vote by which the House laid on the table an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] made the point that that was not in order. The Chair stated that he thought it was, that he knew nothing to the contrary. The Chair has since examined the question——

Mr. LACEY. Did not the Chair rule upon it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not stand on any technicality as to his ruling before any action had been taken by the House.

Mr. LACEY. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Tennessee and overruled: then a motion to adjourn was made, and then the point was renewed.

The SPEAKER. How is the gentleman from Iowa hurt by having the matter considered now?

Mr. LACEY. That is not the question.

The SPEAKER. That is the question with the Chair. The Chair holds that the motion to reconsider the vote by which the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table can not be considered during a call of the House.

Mr. LACEY. From that decision I appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal of the gentleman. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion.

Mr. REED. On what ground?

Mr. PAYNE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will take his seat. All gentlemen will be seated. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. REED. On what ground does the Chair decline to entertain the appeal from his decision? I should like to argue the proposition——

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to make any further statement——

Mr. REED. I think I can satisfy the Chair even——

The SPEAKER. There has been no transaction of business since the motion was made before. The Chair declines to hear from the gentleman further.

Mr. REED. The Chair will permit me to explain——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not permit the gentleman to explain——

Mr. REED. The Chair will permit me——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will be seated. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that the gentleman takes his seat.
Mr. BOUTELLE. If I were the Speaker I would not call on the Sergeant-at-Arms every four minutes——
The SPEAKER. And the Sergeant-at-Arms will force the other gentleman from Maine to be seated.
Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no; he will not. The gentleman from Maine will seat himself.
[Great confusion in the Hall.]
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to recognize the gentleman for any purpose.
Mr. PAYNE. On a question of order?
The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON].
Mr. REED. I rise to a question of privilege.
The SPEAKER put the question on the resolution and declared that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. PAYNE. I ask for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 149, noes 18.
Mr. PAYNE. I demand tellers; and pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands tellers. Those who are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted.
Mr. PAYNE. And pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion. The question is upon ordering tellers.
Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering tellers.
Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a question of order, Mr. Speaker——
Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker——
The Speaker continued to count the vote upon ordering tellers, and announced that there were 42 in the affirmative.
Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.
The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and the Speaker announced that 133 gentlemen had voted in favor thereof.
Mr. PAYNE. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.
Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the yeas and nays have just been ordered, because the Constitution says that one-fifth of the members can order the yeas and nays. The gentleman may call for the other side if he desires, but the yeas and nays have been ordered.
Mr. PAYNE. Notwithstanding that, Mr. Speaker, I have the right under the rules to have tellers.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the right to have a count by tellers. He is not bound by the count of the Speaker. The question is upon ordering tellers on the demand for the yeas and nays. [The question on ordering tellers having been put.] Forty-odd gentleman have voted in favor of ordering tellers. A sufficient number. Tellers are ordered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] will act as tellers. As many as are in favor of taking the vote on the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee by yeas and nays will now pass between the tellers.
Mr. PAYNE (not having taken his place as teller). I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The Chair can recognize no motion while the House is dividing.
Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will not hear the gentleman.
Mr. PAYNE. The Chair ought to be in order as well as the House.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will be in order.
Mr. PAYNE. I rose respectfully on a question of order. I am entitled to do so.
The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to recognize the gentleman.
Mr. PAYNE. I have a right to be heard on a question of order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to hear the gentleman upon any question while the House is dividing.
Mr. PAYNE. A question of order is always recognized by the Chair. That has been decided over and over again.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will take his seat.
Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a question of order, and claim that I am entitled to recognition.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will take his seat.
Mr. PAYNE. Pending the appointment of tellers, I rise to a question of order and demand my rights.
The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] as a teller in place of the gentleman from New York.
Mr. PAYNE. I would like to know by what rule the Speaker refuses to hear a question of order?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will please act as teller.
Mr. REED. "The gentleman from Maine" declines to act as teller. The gentleman from New York has a right——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] will act alone. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. PAYNE. Oh, this is a fine House of Representatives!
A MEMBER. You are making it so.
Mr. PATTERSON (having concluded the count). Mr. Speaker, 127 members have voted in the affirmative.
The SPEAKER. A sufficient number. The yeas and nays are ordered.
Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that only one teller has acted. The rule requires two.
The SPEAKER. The Chair, in reply to that, states that he appointed the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as a teller and he declined.
Mr. PAYNE. There were other members——
The SPEAKER. The Chair then appointed the recognized leader of the Republican party, and he declined.
Mr. PAYNE. There were other members that might have been appointed. The Chair might have appointed a member of the majority. Under the rule two tellers are required.
Mr. REED. The rules of the House require two tellers.
The SPEAKER. The Chair did not care to have thrown in his face the fact of appointing two tellers from the same side.
Mr. REED. That does not make any difference.
Mr. PAYNE. If the Chair had exercised his prerogative as supervisor of the House he might have appointed some gentleman on the other side.
The Clerk (under the direction of the Speaker) proceeded to call the roll.
The SPEAKER (after a few names had been called). Gentlemen will please resume their seats and the House will come to order.
Mr. REED. The rules require two tellers, and the Speaker can not dispense with that requirement.
The SPEAKER. The House understands the circumstances.
Mr. REED. But the Speaker does not seem to understand them.
The SPEAKER. The Speaker is ready to take all the consequences. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
The Clerk resumed the call of the roll, Mr. BOUTELLE and Mr. REED endeavoring to make themselves heard.
The SPEAKER. The reporter will not take down any remarks that are now being made.
The call of the roll having been resumed,
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will suspend for a moment. The Sergeant-at-Arms will request all gentlemen to be seated. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio will be seated. [Referring to Mr. PAYNE and Mr. OUTHWAITE, who were engaged in earnest conversation in the middle aisle.]
The conversation between the two members continuing,
The SPEAKER repeated: The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio will be seated.
Mr. PAYNE, amid much confusion, was understood to say: I will take my seat when I get ready.
Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The Speaker should require every member to take his seat.
The SPEAKER. If some gentleman will submit a motion in respect to the contumacy of the gentleman from New York the Chair will entertain it. The Chair has specifically ordered the gentleman to take his seat, and he states that he will do so when he gets ready. If the House is willing to permit——
Mr. PAYNE. I want to say in justice to myself——
The SPEAKER. If the House is willing to permit the gentleman——
Mr. WISE. I move that the gentleman from New York be brought to the bar of the House for reprimand.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] will please put his motion in writing. The Chair would like to ascertain whether the House is willing to permit the gentleman from New York to refuse defiantly to conform to the wish of the House as expressed by the rules of the House.
Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. BOUTELLE. To make a point of order.
The SPEAKER. About what?
Mr. REED. I want to make a point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I thought the Speaker was liable to a point of order himself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was endeavoring to keep order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair was chiding some of the members of the House for not preserving order on the floor, when the Chair has violated the rules himself by accepting a report contrary to the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will be seated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suppose of course you have the power to make that order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the gentleman from Maine be brought to the bar of the House and reprimanded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I submit that the gentleman from Ohio should sit down himself when he demands that I take my seat.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I will offer a resolution——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not interrupt the roll call to consider the resolution now; but the gentleman may offer it afterwards if he desires. The Clerk will proceed with the roll call.

The roll call was resumed and concluded, there being—yeas 163, nays 33, not voting 156; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. COVERT with Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. ELLIS of Oregon, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska (who had voted in the negative). Mr. Speaker, I change my vote to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The change will be noted.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. BRANCH, is detained from the House on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused for the remainder of the day.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. Mr. KEM left this afternoon quite sick, and asked to be excused for the remainder of the day.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] be excused for the remainder of the day on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCETTRICK. I ask that Mr. STEVENS of Massachusetts be excused. He was taken sick during the afternoon and was compelled to leave.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to reconsider and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has moved to reconsider the vote; the gentleman from Tennessee moves to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 148, noes 29.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Let us have tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, pending the question on the motion to lay on the table, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 40, noes 110.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 30, nays 151, not voting 171; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table without taking a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. REED. With the understanding that the House thereupon adjourn?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will make that motion. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] can withdraw the motion to lay on the table, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] can withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I will do so if the understanding is that we are to adjourn.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] withdraws the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] withdraws the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PATTERSON. I now move to reconsider, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the latter motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ENGLISH. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 4.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Pensions, reported the bill (H. R. 5194) to pension G. O. Greiner; which, with the accompanying report (No. 638), was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6460) for the relief of Pleasant G. Decker, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TERRY: Petition of citizens of Massachusetts for foreman of presswork in the Government Printing Office—to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 30, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker amid general applause.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the ruling of the Chair, that one teller could do the counting under our rules, has been left out of the Journal, and also the refusal to hear from Mr. PAYNE the point of order which he rose and stated to the Chair he purposed or desired to make.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has any amendment to the Journal, he can send it up.

Mr. REED. I move that the Journal be amended so as to recite those facts which appear in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please put it in writing and send it up.

Mr. SPRINGER. And upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. REED. I should like to have the Reporter's notes——

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not delay the business of the House.

Mr. REED. The Chair should have examined the Journal, and I presume he has. The Chair knows what facts I refer to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let that part of the Journal be read again.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There was considerable confusion in the House at the time——

Mr. REED. There was no confusion, as to those things, on the floor.

[The Speaker examined the manuscript copy of the Journal.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] refer to the proceedings as to tellers?

Mr. REED. The RECORD shows that Mr. PAYNE said:

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that only one teller has acted. The rule requires two.

The SPEAKER. The Journal on that subject states:

Mr. PAYNE demanded that the vote on ordering the yeas and nays be taken by tellers.
The SPEAKER appointed Mr. PAYNE and Mr. PATTERSON as tellers.
Mr. Payne declined to act as teller.
The Speaker thereupon appointed Mr. REED, who also declined to act.
The Speaker then directed the other teller [Mr. PATTERSON] to count the vote on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I suggest to the Chair that, although nobody from the other side appeared to act as a teller, yet they kept the count. We noticed that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The Journal is perfectly accurate as to what transpired at that time. There is no occasion for any amendment.

Mr. REED. I have some difficulty in proposing the amendment when I come to this point:

Mr. PAYNE made the point that but one teller had acted. The Chair overruled the point, for the reason—

I do not know what the reason of the Chair was.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. REED. Mr. PAYNE made the point of order that but one teller had acted. The Chair overruled the point for some reason or other, which I do not know, and if the Chair will now state the reason——

The SPEAKER. The Journal ought to be a correct transcript of what took place.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

The SPEAKER. And if no reason was given then, no reason ought to be inserted in the Journal.

Mr. REED. Then the Chair overruled the point for "no reason stated."

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will send up any amendment the Chair will submit it.

Mr. REED. This is the amendment which, under the suggestion of the Chair, I send up. I also have another amendment in regard to the point of order made by Mr. PAYNE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PAYNE made the point that but one teller has acted.
The Chair overruled the point for no reason stated.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the approval of the Journal I demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. I desire to make one other amendment, if the gentleman will kindly withdraw his motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentlemen will state his amendment, and it is an amendment that ought to be made, I will withdraw the motion; if it is not, I will insist on the motion.

Mr. REED. Here is the other one:

Mr. PAYNE rose to the point of order that the Chair refused to permit the point of order to be stated.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to this amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to hear the amendment.

Mr. REED. I had already offered amendments to both parts, and the Chair requested me to reduce them to writing. Of course I must have the necessary time to do it. I did not know that the Journal would omit such important action by the Speaker as that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that but one amendment can be offered at a time.

The SPEAKER. Only one amendment can be offered at a time. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to this amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, I do not.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I insist that I proposed the amendments before the demand for the previous question, and that I only took the necessary time to prepare them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is aware that he can not propose two amendments at one time to different parts of the Journal. He may offer an amendment, an amendment to that, and offer a substitute, with one amendment to the substitute.

Mr. REED. I know; but I proposed amendments covering both those points.

The SPEAKER. Which can not be done, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. I do not think, upon reflection, the Speaker will want to do this.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the amendment and the approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 136; noes none.

Mr. REED. No quorum.

Mr. PATTERSON. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 1, not voting 174; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Pending the announcement of the result,

Mr. CULBERSON said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House when his name was called and did he fail to hear it?

Mr. REED. One moment, Mr. Speaker; was the gentleman here when his name should have been called?

Mr. CULBERSON. I was in the Hall during the call, and did not hear my name called.

Mr. CULBERSON'S vote was recorded.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. WELLS. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall during the roll call, and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. WELLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLS'S vote was recorded.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall when his name was called, and did he fail to hear it?

Mr. TUCKER. I was not here on the first roll call, but I was on the second, and my name was not then called.

Mr. TUCKER'S vote was recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The vote of Mr. CRISP was recorded.

Mr. OUTHWAITE asked for a recapitulation of the vote, but immediately withdrew the request.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I think there is an error in regard to the vote of the gentleman from New York, Mr. DANIELS.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I supposed that this was a call of the House, and I answered "here." I did not intend to vote upon the pending question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, under the circumstances, the gentleman's name ought to be stricken from the roll.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia with Mr. DALZELL.
Mr. LISLE with Mr. RANDALL.
Mr. BLACK of Illinois with Mr. ALDRICH.
Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. STEVENS with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York.
Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. GEAR.
Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. WALKER.
Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. STRONG.
Mr. BARNES with Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota.
Mr. CABANISS with Mr. NORTHWAY.
Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. MOON.
Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky with Mr. HAUGEN.
Mr. FORMAN with Mr. LUCAS.
Mr. MADDOX with Mr. GROUT.
Mr. HEARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.
Mr. BERRY with Mr. CALDWELL.
Mr. LIVINGSTON with Mr. STORER.
Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. COGSWELL.

The following for this day:

Mr. DAVEY with Mr. BOWERS of California.
Mr. BELTZHOOVER with Mr. WRIGHT of Massachusetts.
Mr. COMPTON with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.
Mr. FYAN with Mr. LINTON.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. HOOKER of New York.
Mr. BRATTAN with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.
Mr. SOMERS with Mr. HARMER.

The following on this vote:

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. TUCKER with Mr. WANGER.
Mr. TRACEY with Mr. WADSWORTH, on election cases.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER], but with the understanding that I may vote to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 178 and the nays are 1. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered.

Mr. REED. There is debate, I believe; fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken without the yeas and nays upon the amendments offered by the gentleman from Maine separately.

Mr. REED. I have other amendments that I desire to offer.

Mr. PATTERSON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. REED. Rule No. 1 of this House, fourth clause, declares that the Speaker shall decide all questions of order subject to an appeal by any member. That right, given under the rules of this House, is entirely without qualification or limitation. Twice yesterday that right was refused to a member of the House without any reason being given by the Speaker for such refusal. There is no reason that can be given under the law governing parliamentary bodies except that the processes of the House are being used to obstruct business. The Speaker has repeatedly stated it to be the principle which governed this House and which is contained in the rules that such a reason was not a valid one and that he could not refuse to entertain an appeal for any such reason as that. Nevertheless he has twice refused to entertain an appeal, one instance being recorded in the Journal and the other misrecorded. I merely call the attention of the House to this because it seems to be a plain case where the Speaker has adopted the principle, in actual practice, of refusing to entertain an appeal because he thought it was made for dilatory purposes and at the same time has not seen fit to say so in the Journal.

Now, what is the object of a journal so far as parliamentary proceedings are concerned? The object of it is to afford guidance in matters of parliamentary law to the House upon future occasions, and it has been the custom of Speakers, except in very obvious cases, to give their reasons. I submit to the House that there is no reason given, and yet, under the ruling of the Chair and his construction of the rules of this House, a right was twice denied to a member of the House. However, this is not the proceeding on which to reach that. This is simply a proposition to correct the Journal. The previous question has been ordered, and if the Journal is approved, it is approved with three plain errors in it, and that is neither just to the minority nor to the majority. The following colloquy occurred, according to the RECORD:

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion.
Mr. REED. On what ground?
Mr. PAYNE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will take his seat. All gentlemen will be seated. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Now, your Journal that you propose to adopt without examination says:

Mr. PAYNE appealed from the decision of the Chair in declining to recognize him on the motion to adjourn.
The Speaker declined to entertain the appeal.
The question was put on agreeing to the order proposed by Mr. PATTERSON while the House was dividing.
Mr. PAYNE submitted a motion to adjourn.
The Speaker declined to entertain the motion at that time.
The yeas and nays having been demanded,
Mr. PAYNE demanded that the vote on ordering the yeas and nays be taken by tellers.

The House will also recollect the actual state of affairs which is embodied in the amendment which I offer.

Mr. PAYNE made the point that but one teller has acted.
The Chair overruled the point, for no reason stated.

Whether this amendment will be adopted or not I do not know; but the other correction will be impossible if the House proceeds to vote "aye" upon the main question. Now, what the House may choose to do is perhaps of very little consequence to any of us except so far as it may set an example of misstating in a solemn document, the Journal of the House, what actually occurred.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to make any remarks on this side. I reserve my time and ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine. [The question was put.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. REED. Division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 67, noes 148.

Mr. REED. Tellers—two of them.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 107 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 1, nays 179, not voting 172; as follows:

The following pair was announced:

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. BINGHAM, on this vote.

Mr. BRETZ (before the result of the vote was announced). My colleague, Mr. CONN, has just sent me word that he is ill and desires to be excused. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. CONN was excused.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. DALZELL, be excused on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. DALZELL was excused.

Mr. TRACEY. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. WADSWORTH, but I have voted so as to make a quorum.

Mr. CARUTH. My colleague, Mr. LISLE, is confined to his room by illness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. LISLE was excused.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague, Mr. SIMPSON, is detained from the House by sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. SIMPSON was excused.

Mr. HAUGEN. My colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER, is confined to his house by illness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin was excused.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, before the announcement of the vote, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. This vote has been taken upon an amendment to the Journal after the previous question was supposed to have been ordered on such amendment by a quorum of the House. I see that the roll call on the motion for the previous question discloses 178 votes in the affirmative, 1 in the negative, making a quorum. Among those recorded as voting is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIPE], who, as I am informed, left the House last night for Pittsburg; and upon inquiry from many sources I do not find that he was in the House or present during the roll call.

It leaves the House without a quorum on that vote, as shown by the roll; and my parliamentary inquiry is now how can that be corrected? If there was no quorum voting on the demand for the previous question, of course the previous question was not ordered; and not being ordered, the vote upon this amendment could not be regularly taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that no point of that kind can be raised until after the announcement of the result of the vote just had. Let that be first announced.

Mr. REED. But the presence of a quorum on ordering the previous question, and before the vote on the amendment could be taken, was absolutely vital.

Mr. SPRINGER. But a roll call has just been had on the amendment. That has not yet been announced. The Chair can entertain the point of order, subject to appeal and all motions incident to it, for future consideration, but yet the result of the vote on this roll call must first be announced before anything can be interposed.

Mr. BURROWS. I am sure the Chair will not decide that a new roll call should not be had where a manifest error has been shown. Of course the vote should not have been taken on the amendment until the previous question had been actually ordered by a quorum of the House as developed by the roll call.

I make no criticism upon the clerks of the House. There is so much confusion on the floor that mistakes are very liable to occur; but beyond any question no quorum voted on the demand for ordering the previous question, and so the vote could not have been properly taken on the amendment. This vote, then, is irregular, and in fairness the vote on ordering the previous question should be taken over again in order that the error may be corrected, because manifestly no quorum voted. That is all I ask.

The SPEAKER. That raises another question as to what constitutes a quorum of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. That is true, but if the roll call is incorrect, it ought to be repeated, for the purpose of correction, in some way.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt as to that, but it would be immaterial for the purpose of the point the gentleman now makes if, eliminating the name of Mr. SIPE from the roll, there was still left a quorum of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Chair holds that less than one-half of 356 members or less than 179 constitutes a quorum, then on that question I would like to be heard.

But I ask unanimous consent that the vote on ordering the previous question may be again taken to settle all disputes and end the controversy. There is evidently a quorum of the House present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the gentleman's request for unanimous consent. Is there objection to taking the vote on ordering the previous question over again?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let this vote be first announced before that is submitted to the House. That is the first business in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the result of the vote——

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, either there was a quorum voting or there was not. If there was no quorum, then no proceeding that took place is in order, and these corrections have been made often in the House after days have elapsed, where such errors have been discovered.

The SPEAKER. There is no question of that, and no one has suggested any objection. The only question is whether the point of the gentleman from Michigan can be made before the announcement of the vote just taken is made.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to that. I only make the point now because I do not wish to waive any rights to which I may be entitled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman that way.

On this question the yeas are 1, the nays 179. So that on this vote the noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BURROWS. Now I ask unanimous consent that the roll call on ordering the previous question may be repeated.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that a quorum is now developed on this vote in the House, and the only question in order is on the approval of the Journal. A quorum has voted. We are ready to do business, and the only question before the House is on the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered on an amendment and upon the approval of the Journal. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point that by an error, when that vote was announced one less than a quorum had actually voted as he has stated, for it seems to be conceded that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not in his seat and did not vote; at least there is no suggestion to the contrary.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the request of the gentleman from Michigan will only consume thirty minutes, and I hope the House will grant the request, and have another vote on ordering the previous question.

Mr. DOCKERY. That ought to be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going on to say that the point of the gentleman from Michigan brings up the question whether a quorum has voted on that roll call without the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered. That ought to be satisfactory to all.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; that is avoiding the whole question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Michigan, that the roll be again called on the demand for the previous question on the amendment and the approval of the Journal.

Mr. McRAE. I object. It only requires 178 members to make a quorum of the House as now constituted.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I make the point that no quorum voted on the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the request for unanimous consent that the vote be taken on ordering the previous question again.

Mr. BURROWS. That was my request, and I have no objection to the matter taking that course. I think it is the shortest way out of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the request, and objection was made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the Chair again submit the request. I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn to the request that the vote be taken again on ordering the previous question? If it is, the Chair will order the vote taken again, in the absence of objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The roll will again be called on ordering the previous question.

Mr. McRAE. I withdraw the objection; but I want it to be understood that I do not waive the point that there was a quorum after the correction is made.

Mr. BURROWS. I trust that question will be held in abeyance.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor ordering the previous question on the approval of the Journal will, when their names are called say "aye;" those opposed, "no."—

Mr. BURROWS. Now, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no criticism to pass on the clerks. I am surprised that they make the roll so accurate; but I do insist upon order during this roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point is well taken. The House will please be in order. The Clerk will now call the roll. As many as favor ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, say "aye;" those opposed, "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 1, not voting 168; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). On this question the yeas are 2, the nays 178. The noes have it, and the House refuses to adjourn. The question recurs on the motion to approve the Journal, upon which the previous question has been ordered and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 0, not voting 166; as follows:

Mr. REED (before the announcement of the result). Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from no to aye.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 186 and the noes are none. The ayes have it——

Mr. REED. I move to reconsider——

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider, and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves to reconsider and the gentleman from Illinois moves to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. REED. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to inquire whether a motion to reconsider is in order while the House is proceeding under the special rule?

Mr. REED. We were only proceeding under that last evening.

The SPEAKER. What special rule does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. LYNCH. I understand that we are proceeding under a special order submitted by the Committee on Rules the other day and adopted by the House, which provides for the consideration of the contested-election cases, and says that no intervening motion shall be entertained.

Mr. REED. The Chair will remember that we are now under a call of the House.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have not had a call of the House.

Mr. REED. Excuse me. We are under yesterday's call, which was projected into futurity.

Mr. SPRINGER. The adjournment, though, dispenses with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that the motion to adjourn is not in order under the special order. The Clerk will report the special order, to which the Chair understands the gentleman to refer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this order the House proceed to consider the contested-election case of O'Neill against Joy from Missouri; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee.

That immediately after said case is disposed of the House shall proceed to consider the contested-election case of English vs. Hilborn from California; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may then be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee. This order to continue from day to day until both cases therein mentioned are disposed of.

Mr. REED. The Chair has entertained a motion for the previous question, the Chair has entertained a motion for amendment, and the Chair has entertained a motion to approve the Journal. Now, if that special order was in force or applicable in any way the Chair has been neglectful of his duty.

The SPEAKER. No point of order was raised.

Mr. REED. No point of order was raised, and nobody ever dreamed of raising such a point as that, I should imagine. The Chair undertook to submit the Journal to the House. In addition to that, when we adjourned last evening we adjourned with an unexecuted order of the House for the bringing here of a quorum, which order the Speaker decided could be passed without a quorum. The officers have not discharged their duty and we are still under the influence of that call of the House, and consequently can not be under the influence of the special order. Of course I do not know what may be decided.

Mr. SPRINGER. No point of order was made against the motion to approve the Journal, nor against the motion for the previous question; but I contend that if there had been, still we can not proceed to business until the House has met and a quorum appears and the Journal is approved. Now, the Journal has been approved and we have a quorum present, and we are ready to proceed to the execution of the special order, which continues from day to day. Therefore the business now before the House, the Journal having been approved——

Mr. REED. The Journal has not been approved. A motion to reconsider the vote by which it was approved is now pending, and the idea that we can be deprived of the right to reconsider is——

Mr. SPRINGER. But you moved to adjourn?

Mr. REED. Precisely. Pending the motion to reconsider, the House has a right to adjourn—at least I suppose it has.

Mr. LYNCH. The point I make is that no intervening motion can be entertained when the House is proceeding under this special order.

Mr. REED. If the Speaker decides that the motion is dilatory that is another question, but he has announced that he never will so decide.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair does not decide anything of the kind.

Mr. REED. I hope there will be no attempt made to force the Speaker to decide against his will.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not be forced.

Mr. REED. Because the case is painful enough as it is now.

Mr. TUCKER. To the gentleman from Maine and his friends.

The SPEAKER. This order providing for the consideration of the two contested-election cases itself nominates what motions are in order, and expressly excludes any motions not mentioned in the order. The motions mentioned in the first case are, a vote on the substitute and then a vote on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections. There is a similar provision as to the California case, and then a provision that this order shall continue to operate from day to day until the cases are fully and finally disposed of.

Yesterday there was a failure of a quorum; a call of the House was ordered; and the House adopted a resolution to send for absentees. In that resolution was a provision that the adjournment of the House should not affect or destroy the force of that order. Everything relating to the call of the House, except so far as preserved by the terms of that resolution, fell by reason of the adjournment. If there had not been an express provision in the resolution to prevent the order of arrest from falling, that too would have fallen by the adjournment of the House with the other proceedings under the call. The House then adjourned. This morning when the House met the Chair directed the reading of the Journal. The contested-election cases were not called up; the Chair does not say whether they might have been, but they were not.

Under the direction of the Chair the Journal was read. The question was then upon the approval of the Journal. No point was made against that or against the motion to amend. The House has voted that the Journal be approved. The gentleman from Maine has entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House approved the Journal, and pending that motion moves that the House adjourn. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that the motion to adjourn is not in order, because of the terms of the order which has been adopted; and the Chair is inclined to sustain the view of the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. REED. I desire to make a single suggestion. That order says "from day to day."

The SPEAKER. "From day to day."

Mr. REED. Does that imply an adjournment, or does it not?

The SPEAKER. It says: "This order to continue from day to day until both cases therein mentioned are disposed of."

Mr. REED. Exactly. That implies an adjournment whenever the House chooses to adjourn. If there were no such thing as adjournment contemplated, the language would not be "from day to day."

The SPEAKER. The adjournment on yesterday was when the House found itself without a quorum——

Mr. REED. Very well——

The SPEAKER. It was under a call, when no motion was in order except to adjourn or some motion in relation to the call.

Mr. REED. I am afraid I am not making myself clear. The order which has been adopted by the House provides that it shall continue in force from day to day. That is appropriate language if it is contemplated that while these questions are pending the House shall have perfect power to adjourn if it chooses. But if the point of order is sustained, then we can not adjourn this House until we have disposed of all these questions, which, if I may borrow an expression of the Speaker, would be "unsuitable."

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order raised against the motion of the gentleman from Maine that the House adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. I appeal from that decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal.

Mr. REED. Upon what ground?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to answer except in his own terms.

Mr. REED. I do not wonder the Chair is unwilling to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House now, so that members may understand it, that no member on the floor has any right, when the Chair has made a decision, to rise and ask "upon what ground?" [applause on the Democratic side] any more than a gentleman would have such right in a court or any similar body after a ruling had been made against him.

It is the privilege of the Chair to state the ground of his decision if he desires to do so. If, in making a decision, he states reasons which are insufficient in the judgment of any member, or decides without stating reasons at all, no member has the right, and can not in a body where parliamentary law is observed and order and decorum maintained, rise in his place and ask, "What are the grounds of that decision?" [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the vote on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Journal was approved is simply a part of the ordinary business of the House; and if the gentleman from Tennessee now calls up the election case, it takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. But no point was made upon the motion; and the motion to reconsider is part of the vote on approval; pending that motion, the vote on approval is incomplete.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that motion can be passed upon at any time in the future when the House may desire to determine it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion to reconsider having been made, the vote on the approval of the Journal is incomplete, and it must be completed if there is a demand that it be completed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. REED. The Chair has announced that he declines to give any reasons for his ruling, and that I had no right to ask the question; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the Chair declines to entertain the appeal. I think that looks like "tyranny." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there is no man in this country who knows better what constitutes tyranny than the gentleman from Maine himself.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the House understands that what takes place under the rulings of the Chair and the action of the House is determined by conditions as they arise, and not by the characterization that may be given to them by any member on the floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Maine to reconsider the vote ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

Before the announcement of the vote,

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and yeas were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 0, not voting 172; as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Hall when my name was called, but was in the Hall during the progress of the roll call. I wish to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the spirit of the rule requires the gentleman to be in the Hall when his name was called.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I was not in the Hall at that time.

Mr. BRYAN. I would like to be recorded on this vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall at the time his name was called?

Mr. BRYAN. I was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will be called.

[Mr. BRYAN'S vote was recorded as above.]

Mr. PAYNE. Was the gentleman from Nebraska in the Hall or in the gallery?

Mr. BURROWS. The question is whether the gallery is considered a part of the Hall of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. I had come down from the gallery in time to respond.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone; and

A bill (S. 341) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panocho Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "Donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands, had asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. ALLEN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

VETO MESSAGE, SEIGNIORAGE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I make the point of order that under the ruling of the Chair, heretofore made, such a document as a message from the President of the United States can not be submitted or acted upon by the House or entertained by it, pending the consideration of any question under a special order such as is now before us.

The SPEAKER. It will not be acted upon.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it can not be received, under the Chair's ruling.

The SPEAKER. They are always received.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to have the Speaker consider a ruling made by himself——

(The Clerk proceeded to read the President's message.)

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust the Clerk will not interpose between the Speaker and the orderly transaction of the business of the House.

I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to his ruling on a recent occasion.

There are a number of them, running, I think, through a period of several weeks, in which a question of privilege was frequently called up by me before the House. During that time, I think the Chair will recollect that I repeatedly called the attention of the Speaker to what seemed to me to be the impracticability or the impossibility of enforcing the Speaker's view of the rules that would exclude the reception of questions of privilege during the time that the House was operating under a special order.

Mr. BROWN. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order as against the gentleman from Maine, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine rises to a point of order, which he will please state.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was about to call the attention of the Chair——

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will do so briefly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was about to do so, Mr. Speaker, with as much brevity and clearness as is possible with my limited command of language.

On the 10th day of January I had the honor to call the attention of the Speaker to what seemed to me to be some of the perplexing consequences of his ruling in regard to the exclusive operation of an order of the Committee on Rules, and I included in those to which I called the attention of the Speaker the embarrassment that would arise from refusing to entertain messages of this character. I referred repeatedly to the possibility of the reception of a message from the Chief Magistrate under circumstances that might be of the greatest public gravity.

The Speaker will find on page 631 of the RECORD, the following colloquy. I said:

Now, it makes no difference, Mr. Speaker, as to the operation of these rules, or as to the duty of the House, whether this usurpation is a little one or a big one. It makes no difference whether it goes to one degree or another, and just exactly as it is impossible to conceive that this House has bound itself so that it can not act upon a call of the Executive to declare war, even if it were to enable the Government of the United States to repel invasion, so I insist that it is impossible that this resolution or question of privilege can be out of order.

Then there was a little further colloquy, on page 632, and the Speaker said:

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the order adopted by the House the Chair must submit to the House only that business which is provided for in the order. Now, so far as the immediate question is concerned—that called up by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]—the gentleman from Maine himself can not dispute the power of the House if it had been considering the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maine, to postpone its further consideration until the 29th day of January or until the 15th day of February.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But if the Speaker please——

The SPEAKER. The House might have done that by a vote. The Chair understands this order—

That is, the special order from the Committee on Rules—to be not only that that proposition, but every other proposition, not provided for in the order, is postponed until after the House has disposed of the revenue bill which is now pending before it. That is the whole question, as the Chair understands it. The Chair is forced, then, to direct the Clerk to call the committees for reports.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that under that very clear and very explicit, if not to my mind satisfactory, ruling of the Chair, "no intervening motion" and no intervening business can be entertained by the House pending the operation of this kind of special order which the Speaker has so explicitly declared is imperative in its exclusion of everything but the business specifically indicated in the order of proceedings reported from the Committee on Rules and adopted by the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the gentleman——

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Speaker went so far as to hold that he could not even submit a question which he had himself ruled was a question of the highest privilege—that he could not even submit that question to the House under that pending order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have an absolutely identical condition of things to that prevailing during some three or four weeks, in which the Speaker held that no interruption or interposition of any matter or proceeding not immediately specified and provided for in the special order could be permitted, no matter how pertinent, no matter how imperative, no matter how grave the exigency might be. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while I desire to say in parenthesis that I have no personal objection to the exploiting of the message, which is a remarkably satisfactory document to emanate from a Democratic President, yet I must call the Speaker's attention to his previous ruling, and thereby do my duty in giving him an opportunity to avoid what would seem to me to be very inconsistent action.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], and I think his point of order is well taken. It is very gratifying, Mr. Speaker, to be able sometimes to agree with the gentleman's conclusions. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The instance cited by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is not at all parallel to that now before the House. The proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] was to consider a privileged resolution. It was to call it up for consideration by the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I asked the Speaker to submit it.

The SPEAKER. Which is precisely the same—to submit it for consideration. The gentleman wanted action by the House upon it, and the Speaker declined at that time to submit the question to the House, because the order expressly provided what should be done. Now, the Chair will call the attention of the House to the Constitution of the United States, which ought to have some binding force, and to the rule of the House.

The Constitution says that—

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States. If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large upon their Journal and proceed to reconsider it.

That is the provision of the Constitution of the United States. In the Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-third, and Thirty-fourth Congresses it was held that—

Whenever a bill is returned to the House with the objections of the President, it is usual to have the message containing his objections immediately read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. "Usual!"

The SPEAKER. Immediately read. It does not follow because this message is immediately read that therefore it can, under this order, be immediately considered.

There are two or three things to be done. The message must be read, and it must be entered upon the Journal; and it may be considered by a committee, may lie on the table; it may be called up at any time. And the Chair, in pursuance of what he has regarded as the practice, when a quorum appeared, has presented a veto message of the President.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the Speaker kindly permit me to remind him of the very specific language he used. He said:

The Chair thinks, under the order adopted by the House, the Chair must submit to the House only that business which is provided for in the order.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; and the proposition of the gentleman was to consider a resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It was to submit the resolution. The Speaker is submitting a message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was dealing with a motion the gentleman made; and the Chair stated that he could not submit a motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I beg the Speaker's pardon. We are a little at cross-purposes. I am speaking about the proposed action of the Speaker. He proposes now to submit a Presidential message.

The SPEAKER. He does.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And I remind him that he held before that the Speaker could not submit——

The SPEAKER. Could not submit a motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. A question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman had made a motion. The language may be very general, but what was the case? The gentleman had made a motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The language is specific.

The Chair thinks, under the order adopted by the House, the Chair must submit to the House only that business which is provided for in the order.

The SPEAKER. Precisely. The gentleman made a motion to call up a resolution, which the Chair declined to submit. The Clerk will read the message.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the Speaker overrule the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair overrules the point of order?

The SPEAKER. He does.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The Clerk will read the message.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will come to my relief!

The Clerk proceeded to read the message.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. There is so much disorder in the House that we can not hear the reading of the message.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

The Clerk proceeded further with the reading, when

Mr. REED said: I rise to a point of order. It is impossible to hear the message.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. REED. It is impossible to hear it.

The SPEAKER. The occupants of the galleries will please cease conversation. Gentlemen on the floor will cease conversation or retire to the cloak room.

Mr. REED. I hope the message will be read distinctly, because it is of great importance.

The reading of the message was resumed and concluded.

VETO MESSAGE.

The message is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill numbered 4956, entitled "An act directing the coinage of the silver bullion held in the Treasury, and for other purposes."

My strong desire to avoid disagreement with those in both Houses of Congress who have supported this bill would lead me to approve it if I could believe that the public good would not be thereby endangered, and that such action on my part would be a proper discharge of official duty. Inasmuch, however, as I am unable to satisfy myself that the proposed legislation is either wise or opportune, my conception of the obligations and responsibilities attached to the great office I hold forbids the indulgence of my personal desire, and inexorably confines me to that course which is dictated by my reason and judgment, and pointed out by a sincere purpose to protect and promote the general interests of our people.

The financial disturbance which swept over the country during the last year was unparalleled in its severity and disastrous consequences. There seemed to be almost an entire displacement of faith in our financial ability and a loss of confidence in our fiscal policy. Among those who attempted to assign causes for our distress it was very generally conceded that the operation of a provision of law then in force which required the Government to purchase monthly a large amount of silver bullion and issue its notes in payment therefor, was either entirely, or to a large extent, responsible for our condition. This led to the repeal, on the 1st day of November, 1893, of this statutory provision.

We had, however, fallen so low in the depths of depression, and timidity and apprehension had so completely gained control in financial circles, that our rapid recuperation could not be reasonably expected. Our recovery has, nevertheless, steadily progressed, and though less than five months have elapsed since the repeal of the mischievous silver-purchase requirement, a wholesome improvement is unmistakably apparent. Confidence in our absolute solvency is to such an extent reinstated and faith in our disposition to adhere to sound financial methods is so far restored as to produce the most encouraging results both at home and abroad. The wheels of domestic industry have been slowly set in motion and the tide of foreign investment has again started in our direction.

Our recovery being so well under way, nothing should be done to check our convalescence; nor should we forget that a relapse at this time would almost surely reduce us to a lower stage of financial distress than that from which we are just emerging.

I believe that if the bill under consideration should become a law, it would be regarded as a retrogression from the financial intentions indicated by our recent repeal of the provision forcing silver-bullion purchases; that it would weaken, if it did not destroy, returning faith and confidence in our sound financial tendencies, and that as a consequence our progress to renewed business health would be unfortunately checked and a return to our recent distressing plight seriously threatened.

This proposed legislation is so related to the currency conditions growing out of the law compelling the purchase of silver by the Government, that a glance at such conditions and a partial review of the law referred to, may not be unprofitable.

Between the 14th day of August, 1890, when the law became operative, and the 1st day of November, 1893, when the clause it contained directing the purchase of silver was repealed, there were purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury more than 168,000,000 ounces of silver bullion. In payment for this bullion the Government issued its Treasury notes of various denominations, amounting to nearly $156,000,000, which notes were immediately added to the currency in circulation among our people. Such notes were by the law made legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except when otherwise expressly stipulated, and were made receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received might be reissued. They were also permitted to be held by banking associations as a part of their lawful reserves.

On the demand of the holders these Treasury notes were to be redeemed in gold or silver coin in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; but it was declared as a part of this redemption provision that it was "the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law." The money coined from such bullion was to be standard silver dollars, and after directing the immediate coinage of a little less than 28,000,000 ounces, the law provided that as much of the remaining bullion should be thereafter coined as might be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes issued on its purchase, and that "any gain or seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury."

This gain or seigniorage evidently indicates so much of the bullion owned by the Government as should remain after using a sufficient amount to coin as many standard silver dollars as should equal in number the dollars represented by the Treasury notes issued in payment of the entire quantity of bullion. These Treasury notes now outstanding and in circulation amount to $152,951,280, and although there has been thus far but a comparatively small amount of this bullion coined, yet the so-called gain or seigniorage, as above defined, which would arise from the coinage of the entire mass, has been easily ascertained to be a quantity of bullion sufficient to make when coined 55,156,681 standard silver dollars.

Considering the present intrinsic relation between gold and silver the maintenance of the parity between the two metals, as mentioned in this law, can mean nothing less than the maintenance of such a parity in the estimation and confidence of the people who use our money in their daily transactions. Manifestly the maintenance of this parity can only be accomplished, so far as it is affected by these Treasury notes, and in the estimation of the holders of the same, by giving to such holders, on their redemption, the coin, whether it is gold or silver, which they prefer. It follows that while in terms the law leaves the choice of coin to be paid on such redemption to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the exercise of this discretion, if opposed to the demands of the holder, is entirely inconsistent with the effective and beneficial maintenance of the parity between the two metals.

If both gold and silver are to serve us as money and if they together are to supply to our people a safe and stable currency the necessity of preserving this parity is obvious. Such necessity has been repeatedly conceded in the platforms of both political parties and in our Federal statutes. It is nowhere more emphatically recognized than in the recent law which repealed the provision under which the bullion now on hand was purchased. This law insists upon the "maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts."

The Secretary of the Treasury has therefore, for the best of reasons, not only promptly complied with every demand for the redemption of these Treasury notes in gold, but the present situation, as well as the letter and spirit of the law, appear plainly to justify, if they do not enjoin upon him, a continuation of such redemption.

The conditions I have endeavored to present may be thus summarized:

First. The Government has purchased and now has on hand sufficient silver bullion to permit the coinage of all the silver dollars necessary to redeem, in such dollars, the Treasury notes issued for the purchase of said silver bullion and enough besides to coin, as gain or seigniorage, 55,156,681 additional standard silver dollars.

Second. There are outstanding and now in circulation Treasury notes issued in payment of the bullion purchased amounting to $152,951,280. These notes are legal tender in payment of all debts public and private except when otherwise expressly stipulated; they are receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues; when held by banking associations they may be counted as part of their lawful reserves, and they are redeemed by the Government in gold at the option of the holders. These advantageous attributes were deliberately attached to these notes at the time of their issue; they are fully understood by our people to whom such notes have been distributed as currency and have inspired confidence in their safety and value, and have undoubtedly thus induced their continued and contented use as money, instead of anxiety for their redemption.

Having referred to some incidents which I deem relevant to the subject, it remains for me to submit a specific statement of my objections to the bill now under consideration.

This bill consists of two sections, excluding one which merely appropriates a sum sufficient to carry the act into effect. The first section provides for the immediate coinage of the silver bullion in the Treasury which represents the so-called gain or seigniorage, or which would arise from the coinage of all the bullion on hand, which gain or seigniorage this section declares to be 55,156,681. It directs that the money so coined or the certificates issued thereon shall be used in the payment of public expenditures, and provides that if the needs of the Treasury demand it, the Secretary of the Treasury may in his discretion issue silver certificates in excess of such coinage, not exceeding the amount of seigniorage in said section authorized to be coined.

The second section directs that as soon as possible after the coinage of this seigniorage the remainder of the bullion held by the Government shall be coined into legal-tender standard silver dollars and that they shall be held in the Treasury for the redemption of the Treasury notes issued in the purchase of said bullion. It provides that as fast as the bullion shall be coined for the redemption of said notes, they shall not be reissued but shall be canceled and destroyed in amounts equal to the coin held at any time in the Treasury derived from the coinage provided for, and that silver certificates shall be issued on such coin in the manner now provided by law. It is, however, especially declared in said section that the act shall not be construed to change existing laws relating to the legal-tender character or mode of redemption of the Treasury notes issued for the purchase of the silver bullion to be coined.

The entire bill is most unfortunately constructed. Nearly every sentence presents uncertainty and invites controversy as to its meaning and intent. The first section is especially faulty in this respect, and it is extremely doubtful whether its language will permit the consummation of its supposed purposes. I am led to believe that the promoters of the bill intended in this section to provide for the coinage of the bullion constituting the gain or seigniorage, as it is called, into standard silver dollars; and yet there is positively nothing in the section to prevent its coinage into any description of silver coins now authorized under any existing law.

I suppose this section was also intended, in case the needs of the Treasury called for money faster than the seigniorage bullion could actually be coined, to permit the issue of silver certificates in advance of such coinage; but its language would seem to permit the issuance of such certificates to double the amount of seigniorage as stated, one-half of which would not represent an ounce of silver in the Treasury. The debate upon this section in the Congress developed an earnest and positive difference of opinion as to its object and meaning. In any event, I am clear that the present perplexities and embarrassments of the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to be augmented by devolving upon him the execution of a law so uncertain and confused.

I am not willing, however, to rest my objection to this section solely on these grounds; in my judgment sound finance does not commend a further infusion of silver into our currency at this time unaccompanied by further adequate provision for the maintenance in our Treasury of a safe gold reserve.

Doubts also arise as to the meaning and construction of the second section of the bill. If the silver dollars therein directed to be coined are, as the section provides, to be held in the Treasury for the redemption of Treasury notes, it is suggested that, strictly speaking, certificates can not be issued on such coin "in the manner now provided by law," because these dollars are money held in the Treasury for the express purpose of redeeming Treasury notes, on demand, which would ordinarily mean that they were set apart for the purpose of substituting them for these Treasury notes. They are not, therefore, held in such a way as to furnish a basis for certificates according to any provision of existing law.

If, however, silver certificates can properly be issued upon these dollars, there is nothing in the section to indicate the characteristics and functions of these certificates. If they were to be of the same character as silver certificates in circulation under existing laws they would at best be receivable only for customs, taxes, and all public dues; and under the language of this section it is, to say the least, extremely doubtful whether the certificates it contemplates would be lawfully received even for such purposes.

Whatever else may be said of the uncertainties of expression in this bill, they certainly ought not to be found in legislation affecting subjects so important and far-reaching as our finances and currency. In stating other and more important reasons for my disapproval of this section I shall, however, assume that under its provisions the Treasury notes issued in payment for silver bullion will continue to be redeemed as heretofore in silver or gold at the option of the holders; and that if when they are presented for redemption, or reach the Treasury in any other manner, there are in the Treasury coined silver dollars equal in nominal value to such Treasury notes, then and in that case the notes will be destroyed, and silver certificates to an equal amount be substituted.

I am convinced that this scheme is ill advised and dangerous. As an ultimate result of its operation Treasury notes which are legal tender for all debts public and private, and which are redeemable in gold or silver, at the option of the holder, will be replaced by silver certificates which, whatever may be their character and description, will have none of these qualities. In anticipation of this result, and as an immediate effect, the Treasury notes will naturally appreciate in value and desirability. The fact that gold can be realized upon them, and the further fact that their destruction has been decreed when they reach the Treasury must tend to their withdrawal from general circulation to be immediately presented for gold redemption, or to be hoarded for presentation at a more convenient season. The sequel of both operations will be a large addition to the silver currency in our circulation and a corresponding reduction of gold in the Treasury. The argument has been made that these things will not occur at once, because a long time must elapse before the coinage of anything but the seigniorage can be entered upon.

If the physical effects of the execution of the second section of this bill are not to be realized until far in the future, this may furnish a strong reason why it should not be passed so much in advance; but the postponement of its actual operation can not prevent the fear and loss of confidence and nervous precaution which would immediately follow its passage and bring about its worst consequences. I regard this section of the bill as embodying a plan by which the Government will be obliged to pay out its scanty store of gold for no other purpose than to force an unnatural addition of silver money into the hands of our people. This is an exact reversal of the policy which safe finance dictates if we are to preserve parity between gold and silver and maintain sensible bimetallism.

We have now outstanding more than $338,000,000 in silver certificates issued under existing laws. They are serving the purpose of money usefully and without question. Our gold reserve, amounting to only a little more than $100,000,000, is directly charged with the redemption of $346,000,000 of United States notes. When it is proposed to inflate our silver currency it is a time for strengthening our gold reserve instead of depleting it. I can not conceive of a longer step toward silver monometallism than we take when we spend our gold to buy silver certificates for circulation, especially in view of the practical difficulties surrounding the replenishment of our gold.

This leads me to earnestly present the desirability of granting to the Secretary of the Treasury a better power than now exists to issue bonds to protect our gold reserve when for any reason it should be necessary. Our currency is in such a confused condition and our financial affairs are apt to assume at any time so critical a position that it seems to me such a course is dictated by ordinary prudence.

I am not insensible to the arguments in favor of coining the bullion seigniorage now in the Treasury, and I believe it could be done safely and with advantage, if the Secretary of the Treasury had the power to issue bonds at a low rate of interest under authority in substitution of that now existing and better suited to the protection of the Treasury.

I hope a way will present itself in the near future for the adjustment of our monetary affairs in such a comprehensive and conservative manner as will accord to silver its proper place in our currency; but in the meantime I am extremely solicitous that whatever action we take on this subject may be such as to prevent loss and discouragement to our people at home, and the destruction of confidence in our financial management abroad.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 29, 1894.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PATTERSON. Regular order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I will ask that that bill be passed, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that the House proceed, under the provisions of the Constitution recently cited by the Speaker, to reconsider to the bill referred in the veto message of the President.

The SPEAKER. The question now before the House is——

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order.

Mr. REED. The Constitution provides——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the rulings on that subject——

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I read from the House Journal of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on page 2397, a ruling by Speaker Carlisle on a case of this kind where a message had been received and had already gone to a committee:

Mr. BURROWS, as a privileged question, moved to discharge the Committee on Invalid Pensions from the further consideration of the message of the President of the United States returning with his objections the bill of the House (H. R. 4058) for the relief of Joel D. Monroe, and that the House now consider the same.

Mr. SPRINGER made the point of order that the said motion was not in order, for the reason that the said message and bill had been referred under the rules to said committee for consideration.

The Speaker overruled the said point of order on the ground that the Constitution provided that when the President returned a bill to the House in which it originated with his objections that House shall—

And the Speaker emphasized the word "shall"— proceed to reconsider it and determine whether or not the bill shall pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, and that under the unbroken practice of the House it has been held that such a message, like a contested-election case, presented a question of the highest privilege, and that the motion to discharge a committee from its further consideration was always in order.

Under that ruling I call up as a question of highest privilege the bill referred to in the message of the President, and move that the House proceed to reconsider the question involved in the message.

The SPEAKER. There is before the House a question of the highest privilege, a question relating to the right of a member of the House to his seat. The Constitution provides that each House shall determine the qualifications, returns, and election of its members. The House is now discharging that duty, considering that question. Pending that, the House has received and there has been read a message from the President of the United States containing his objections to a bill which has been passed by the House. The situation is this: The House is considering a matter of the highest privilege, made so by the Constitution, and is considering that matter also under a rule of its own, which provides that until it disposes of the matters mentioned in that rule it will consider no other business. Therefore the Chair overrules the motion to take up at this time the matter to which the President's message relates, and holds that it can be taken up after the disposition of the contested-election cases.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In view of the fact that the Speaker himself has referred to the constitutional provision which makes this mandatory, I respectfully appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal. The question now is upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to know what disposition has been made of the message of the President.

The SPEAKER. It is on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. Under what rule is it placed on the table? There is no Speaker's table. Some action must be taken in some way, either by referring it to a committee or by postponing it to a day certain.

The SPEAKER. It has been laid before the House. The question is on the motion——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House rejected the resolution presented by the minority of the Committee on Elections. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] moves to reconsider that vote, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. Those who are in favor of laying the motion to reconsider on the table will say aye and those opposed no, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, is this respectful treatment of a message from the Chief Magistrate of the United States——

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What are you going to do when 5 o'clock comes?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. The House will be in order and gentlemen will please take their seats.

Mr. REED (standing in the area to the right of the Clerk's desk). Mr. Speaker, I would like to be permitted to see the roll call taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must take his seat under the rule. There is no provision which permits any member to stand near the desk.

Mr. REED. It is evident from the experience that we have had that there ought to be some such provision.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will take his seat.

Mr. REED (moving up an aisle). I am going to do it.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will ask the gentleman to take his seat.

Mr. REED. That is entirely unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. It is not. Instead of taking your seat you respond to the Chair every time.

Mr. REED. Certainly I do, because the Chair has attacked me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will now take his seat.

Mr. REED (walking slowly across the area toward his own seat). Certainly he will. The gentleman always obeys.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will resume his seat, and public business will be suspended until the gentleman from Maine conforms to the order of the Chair in the execution of the rules of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED having arrived at his own seat, sat down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the order will be impartially enforced, as I observe several gentlemen on the other side who have not taken their seats. [Cries of "Sit down!" "Sit down!" on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not interrupt the roll call.

Mr. REED. There are other gentlemen who are occupying precisely the position which I occupied when the Chair ordered me to my seat.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will please resume their seats. The House will be in order, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. LACEY (during the roll call). Mr. Speaker, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, I desire to inquire whether the House is not in recess under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The practice ever since the Forty-eighth Congress has been to finish the roll call before rising.

When the hour previously fixed for taking a recess arrives, it is the duty of the Chair, unless the yeas and nays are being taken, to announce that the House is in recess until the hour previously fixed.

Where the roll call has begun the practice has always been to finish it. The Clerk will resume the call.

Mr. REED (when the call of the roll had proceeded for some time). I hope the order which was started by the Speaker will be strictly maintained. I hope the Speaker did not mean to single me out for his action.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will please be seated.

Mr. REED. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that there are gentlemen occupying precisely the position which I occupied.

Mr. PAYNE. And there are some gentlemen at the Speaker's desk. I call attention to the fact. [Referring to Mr. CATCHINGS and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, who were in consultation with the Speaker.]

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to have the Speaker state what position the gentleman from Maine occupied in order that we may understand the privileges of members.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order. All gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] is not taking his seat.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please take their seats.

Mr. CATCHINGS (returning to his seat). "The gentleman from Mississippi" was conferring with the Speaker, which he has the right to do.

Mr. REED. I want this thing done decently——

Mr. CATCHINGS. Whatever I do, I do decently.

The SPEAKER. The point was made awhile ago because gentlemen were about the Clerk's desk. The rules provide that no gentleman shall stay there during a roll call. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maine to say he was staying there for the purpose of verifying the count or observing the count, which implied, as the Chair thought, some idea or suggestion that some one about the desk might willfully make a wrong count. The Chair thought that was improper and offensive. He stated, "The gentleman will please be seated." That was the whole of that incident.

Mr. REED. I was occupying a position there a long distance from the Clerk's desk. I was observing what was going on, as I think I had a right to do. The Chair called upon me by name to take my seat. I intimated to the Chair the purpose for which I was there. The Chair then insisted, in a way that it seems to me was entirely unsuitable, upon my taking my seat. I did so, because I have always been responsive to the request of the Chair under such circumstances. I simply desired to say that gentlemen are now occupying the same position without attracting the attention of the Chair in the slightest degree.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman and the House understand that it has been the common practice for gentlemen to walk about the Hall during a vote—not with any avowed purpose or suggestion that they were standing at a certain point to watch the roll call—simply walking about conversing with each other.

Mr. REED. Why should not a member of the House undertake to watch the roll call, if he does not——

The SPEAKER. When the Chair requested gentlemen to take their seats, the gentleman from Maine replied that he was occupying that particular place for the purpose of watching the roll call, which the Chair thinks was offensive toward the officers of the House.

Mr. REED. If the Chair pleases, I did not make that reply. What I said was—I asked permission of the Chair, respectfully as a member of the House ought to do when addressing the Speaker of the House——

The SPEAKER. Permission for what?

Mr. REED. Permission to stand where I was.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not understood any such request.

Mr. REED. I made it twice—three times—distinctly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand such a request. The Chair understood——

Mr. REED. The request was made plainly, and was repeated most respectfully.

The SPEAKER. However plainly made it may have been, it was not heard. The Clerk will resume the call.

The Clerk resumed the call.

Mr. BOUTELLE (when the name of Mr. WADSWORTH was called). Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will suspend for a moment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. As it is growing a little late, I hope the Clerk will proceed a little more rapidly. He is rather more deliberate than he is accustomed to be.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The Clerk resumed and completed the call of the roll, and there were—yeas 164, nays 8, not voting 180; as follows:

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. SCRANTON, on this vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The roll has now been called. I make the point of order that no further proceedings can be had until after the recess, provided by the rules.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The roll call is not completed until the result is announced.

The SPEAKER. The practice has always been to announce the result of the call.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I insist that the call is complete when the last name is called by the Clerk on the second call. All else is a question of what has been done under the roll call. We might as well entertain a motion to reconsider——

The SPEAKER. The practice has been to finish the roll call and announce the result. Gentlemen who rise relating to the roll will be heard.

Several members inquired how they were recorded.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to be heard on my point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] make the point that gentlemen can not ascertain whether they are recorded?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not making that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now announce the result. On this question the yeas are 164, and the nays are 8. No quorum has voted. In accordance with the rules of the House, the Chair now declares the House in recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will perform the duties of the Chair at the evening session.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair can do nothing but declare the recess.

The House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), under the rule, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read clause 3 of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. The House shall, on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, which evening session shall be devoted to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only: said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, under the rule just read.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

WARREN ALONZO ALDEN.

The first business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 2108) to perfect the military record of Warren Alonzo Alden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to enter the name of Warren Alonzo Alden upon the roll of Company H of the Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with a statement of the fact that he faithfully served the United States in said organization, commencing August 15, 1862, and continuing until January 5, 1863.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to complete the record as to the services of Warren Alonzo Alden in Company C, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, in which he served from July 10, 1863, to October 10, 1863.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read at length. It has been published heretofore in the RECORD.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire just here and now to submit a few remarks on the general subject of pensions. I have been criticised, and criticised unjustly, by the newspapers of the country in regard to my position on the question of pensioning the Union soldiers. It has been stated that I am unfriendly to the old soldiers and that I am prejudiced against them. That is not in any sense of the word a fact. It has been also charged by members on the floor of the House that I have been guilty of practical demagogy in connection with the matter, for the purpose of getting up some cheap notoriety, by opposing the granting of pensions here at these Friday night sessions. That, too, is a most unjust statement for which I care nothing, and I want to say here in answer to all such assertions that I am not unfriendly toward the granting of pensions to any honest, true, and brave soldier who bared his bosom to the storm of battle and stood by the flag of his country as he thought it to be his duty to do.

But, Mr. Chairman, I know still further that it is the policy of this nation, as it is the policy of all civilized nations, to pursue a liberal system of treatment in the matter of pensions toward its soldiers who took up arms in its defense and who suffered loss or injury in consequence of it. I want to say that I think it is the true policy for all nations to pursue, because if they are not willing to pension the men who stood by their flag and risked their lives for the safety of the nation in time of war, they will find it to be a difficult matter when danger comes to raise armies for their own protection. Hence I am not foolish enough to stand here and oppose any laws that pension the soldiers of our late war. That is just laws giving pensions only to soldiers who deserve it but not laws or measures that will pension parties not entitled to the same. But, sir, from 1865 to 1890, and from that period on down it can not be said that this country has not been liberal toward pensioning the soldiers of the Union Army, amounting to millions upon the top of millions, heaped upon the honest toilers and tax payers of the whole country.

But the question of granting pensions wears a different aspect when the people of a country have fallen out among themselves and have had a brotherly fight. And in this connection let me say that in my judgment both sections of our country were to blame for the war, because of differences of opinion and sentiments on account of certain features in the Constitution and the Articles of Confederation which brought about the dispute. But I repeat, I am not foolish enough to stand here and deny the justice and the wisdom of granting pensions. Nor would I be so foolish as to ask a pension for a Confederate soldier at this time, still I believe they are entitled to consideration in having the burden taken from their shoulders by relieving them from paying pension frauds and irregularities to such enormous extent.

But the point I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, and what I say to-night is said from a pure motive, and I care not for adverse criticism upon it. It makes no difference to me when I stand here as an humble Representative from the sunny South what may be the criticism that gentlemen may express as to my views and opinions in the matter. I will never be driven from an honest expression upon any question that may come before this body so long as I shall have the honor to be a member. They are honest convictions, and I think can be enforced by logical argument, and I speak not alone as a Southerner, but as a representative of the American people, yea the laboring people of this great country of ours.

But, sir, when I stand here, as I have said, as a representative of the sunny South I stand here not only to represent that section of the country, but as a representative of the people of the North and the East and the West as well. And I say in their behalf that the time has come when we should look at this matter from a nonpartisan standpoint, and get together and discuss it as business men from a business standpoint as representatives of all sections of this great nation of ours. As representatives of the taxpayers as well as soldiers of all classes as well.

Now, then, let us consider for a few moments the immense amount of money that has been expended in pensioning the Union soldiers from 1865 down to the present time. If I mistake not, in 1865 something over eight or nine millions of dollars was appropriated for that purpose. From 1865 along down to the present time that amount has steadily increased year by year until, I believe, in 1893, it reached the enormous sum of $166,000,000. Just think of that for a moment! I am not begrudging the expenditures on account of pensions, but I say that the country has done its share in that direction, and that, in my judgment, no honest soldier who deserves a pension can fail to get it if he goes before the Pension Bureau under the laws already in existence. If he is deserving he will get recognition there, and I think that is the place for him to go.

But just think of it! One hundred and sixty-six millions of dollars in one year. Enough to buy a number of the sovereign States of the United States at their assessed valuation of property to-day. When you remembor that this has been going on for near thirty years, amounting in round numbers to our two billions of hard earned money, I think it will hardly be claimed that this Government has not been liberal, or as liberal as it ought to be, toward the Union soldiers. The expenditures on that account have run up into the billions. Now, I ask you as business men if it does not bear pretty hard on the taxpayers of this great country of ours to raise that great sum? Let us consider the condition of the people who have to earn the money to pay these pensions. They are already overburdened with debt and are being daily deprived of the necessaries of life with mortgaged homes, and under a financial policy which is calculated to further increase their poverty by constantly falling prices.

As I said, I do not oppose the granting of any pension to a brave soldier who deserves it. But let us look and see the different kinds of soldiers who fought in that war. I recollect well an instance which may be used to illustrate what I desire to show, that took place when I was across the Potomac River here during the war on the good old soil of Virginia, fighting as a beardless boy for what I deemed to be right, and what I still believe to be right, where I saw much of the hardships of the soldier's life. And there is to-day a feeling of brotherly love between the soldiers of the North and the soldiers of the South which will last as long as one of them lives from either side. Many are the recollections of that war now as I contemplate upon the tented field, the bloody carnage, and the dreadful loss of life and property as the result, but will only mention now one incident by way of illustration.

On one occasion a number of prisoners had been captured from the Northern army, and we were guarding those prisoners. As was wont to be the custom, as they were going through the country questions were asked them and they entered into conversation. I remember being present when they began talking about this question and that question, and a number of questions were asked of these soldier prisoners. I remember of one gentleman from Illinois, an intelligent soldier and a clever man, and the man who was questioning him said, "Well, my friend, what are you fighting for?" "Well," he says, "I am fighting for the Union; I am standing by the flag of the United States, and trying to perpetuate this grand Union and to prevent its destruction." Well, he was a grand man. Now, that soldier, no doubt, if he was disabled in the war, is now receiving a pension; and God knows I would not begrudge it to him. If he is dead, his widow is receiving a pension; and she ought to have it. The conversations went on, and one of the guard said to another one, from Indiana: "My friend, what are you fighting for?" "Well," he says, "I think a great deal of the United States, but my main object was to strike the shackles from the slaves of the South. I am fighting for the abolition of human slavery. I do not believe it is right." He was a good man, and a clever fellow; and if that man is living to-day, and was disabled, or received a wound, he is doubtless drawing a pension; and he ought to draw it; and if he is dead, his widow and children under the laws that have been passed are drawing a pension; and I do not object to it and no special plea is necessary.

*Including deficiencies.

But there was another man, a kind of a foreigner, sitting off and humped up together and you know the North had the world for a storehouse from which to draw recruits. He was asked, "Well, little fellow; what are you fighting for?" "Oh, be jabbers, I am fighting for dirteen dollars a month." Now, all that that man was fighting for was "dirteen" dollars a month. He was a substitute, a bounty jumper, hired to go into the war. Now, I ask you if there was any patriotism in his bosom, that he and such as he should deserve a pension? But no doubt numbers of them are getting pensions under the law; and we can not help that. I would not drop anybody off except as investigations showed the existence of frauds or when the soldier was a deserter. I just tell you of this to show you the different kinds of soldiers who fought in the last war.

Now then, again, as I took occasion to say here on one or two other occasions, there are a number of deserters who are drawing pensions to-day, and numbers coming in here on Friday nights and asking that the charge of desertion be removed from their records so that they can draw pensions. They pretend that they do not want to do it, but they want the charge of desertion taken from them so that they may get into a position to draw a pension.

Now, I will read to you a portion of the speech of Gen. Bragg, the gallant commander of the Iron Brigade, who met Stonewall Jackson out beyond Manassas, at the bend of the railroad. I will give you his own words, and you can think what you like about it. I will read a portion of his speech touching upon that matter. He was discussing the subject of pensions in the Forty-ninth Congress. I use this method because no one can say that this is the sentiment of rebel brigadiers from the South; but it is the language of a Union general who fought on that side.

Mr. BRAGG. There were one hundred and forty regiments, and a number of battalions in all, of colored troops raised during the war. A large portion of these troops were engaged in guarding railway stations in the rear; and a few regiments, three or four, were regiments of heavy artillery. This pension clause opens the door for a pension to every one of the soldiers of the seven regiments that were organized into battalions for the purpose of caring for them, men picked out as being physically unable to do soldier's duty. It opens the opportunity to place upon the roll, out of the whole one hundred and thirty regiments, every single man and regiment that was not engaged in active service in the presence of the enemy. It permits a pension for every hundred-day man who come out to have a pleasant and jaunty excursion when he thought that if the "rebs" only heard that he was coming they would run away from Bull Run.

It places or gives an opportunity to place upon the pension roll the hundred-day men who closed the war with a blaze of glory in April, May, and June, 1865. It permits an opportunity to go upon the roll 202,000 men, 11,000 of whom afterwards were deserters—202,000 men that were organized under the call of the President in December, 1864. Only three months before the war was terminated in fact a call came, and under that call during the months of January and February there were organized, in response to it, troops consisting of 202,000. Some 13,000 of these were discharged, even at the original camp of rendezvous, because there was no occasion to demand the assignment of them to any regiment. Now, who were these men?

Now, "who were these men?" This is Bragg's own language and not mine:

I say to gentlemen who talk about soldiers, who were these men? Do not stand here in your place and talk about the devotion of the country to its defenders, to the men who heard the shriek of the bullet and shot and shell and battle, and covered with blood and carnage carried the flag to victory. Who were the majority of those men that found themselves in the service of the United States from December, 1864, to February, 1865, that Congress should sit up nights to pass pensions to provide for them? They were the scum of the earth. They were men who would not enlist and were not drafted.

Mr. MOSES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question right there?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Certainly, sir.

Mr. MOSES. Do you believe "the scum of the earth" could ever have whipped the South?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That question is not relevant. [Laughter.] I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I am reading from the speech of Gen. Bragg, and this is not my language. He is alluding to the 12,000 or 13,000 men who were in this command, whom he says he knew were deserters, who towards the last of the war were picked up from the jails and grog shops and around towns. They are the men he is alluding to. The gentleman has shot and missed the mark, just as one of my hands said the corn shot last year and missed. So you will have to shoot again. [Laughter and applause.] And I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia that I deny that the South has ever been whipped; but as I have twice said in speeches upon this floor we were not whipped, but wore ourselves out trying to whip the Yankees while you were a boy riding corn-stalk horses around your father's yard.

Mr. MOSES. What gentleman do you refer to?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. To the gentleman from Georgia, sir, who seems to think the South was whipped.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman is reading this and making it a part of his own remarks.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I insert these remarks of Gen Bragg for what they are worth, and he is one of your own men and he is a mighty good witness.

Mr. THOMAS. As your opinion.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I am giving the opinion of Gen. Bragg of Wisconsin, the noble grand commander of the Iron Brigade. And, mind you, he does not attack the old soldiers, the good soldiers. Far from it. If I had time I would go back and read you some things that he says here in their praise, and you know he is telling the truth and it hurts you.

Mr. MOSES. You say that Congress sits here night after night to pension such soldiers as are described there. I deny that any such soldier has ever been pensioned by special legislation of this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. This is Gen. Bragg's language; but I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that the Committee on Military Affairs have time and again during this session brought in claims for deserters, asking to have the charge removed from them and you know it.

Mr. MOSES. I deny that.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, the records will show it night after night, and I refer you to the records. The gentleman from Georgia is fighting for deserters, it seems. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOSES. Well, produce them in your speech.

Mr. PICKLER. The committee of the gentleman from Georgia has no jurisdiction of any such cases growing out of the last war.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Pile in your questions, gentlemen. I stand here to defend what I say. Pile in your questions, but I am responsible for everything I say, and no truer friend lives to the soldiers who wore the blue and those who wore the gray than I am myself. I referred to the Committee on the Military, and Mr. PICKLER knows it was. He wants to get into my speech, but he shall not do it.

Now, to go on from the point where I was interrupted, Gen. Bragg says further:

They were men who stayed until those who did not want to go to the front raised money by vote and taxation upon the property in the municipalities and counties had funds placed in their hands to hire and buy things to go that could fill the quota and enable them to escape the draft. They were, I said, the scum; yes, and the dregs. They stood in their holes until they were bought—bought by substitute brokers, bought by men who were speculating in blood, paid from $100 to $800 apiece, feeling assured that they were physically so defective that all they had to do was to go to a hospital and there was no danger to their precious carcasses, so that they could pocket their $100 and go without fear of any injury befalling them.

There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who I trust are with me on this question, and who know just as well as I do that the prisons were emptied, that the poorhouses were emptied, that the slums were all emptied by the proffer of $200 at the door to bring out the inmates that they might be put as a paper credit on the Army roll of the United States, and the men who brought this about pocketed the difference made in the trade. I have seen them coming down with ambulances in the rear by scores trying to get people of that class, called soldiers, to march from the shores of the Potomac to the banks of the Rappahannock, and the attempt to get them to the front was a failure.

There is another class. And I might say in that connection, when you talk about poorhouses, the men you find there as a rule are the men who came from the poorhouses to go to the Army, and when they came back they lapsed into their natural condition. No genuine soldier in any patriotic community that I have ever seen ever needed to go to the poorhouse to be provided with all that was necessary to care for him. We know, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in that way that the patriotic people of the North treat their soldiers. These men that go to the poorhouse go because they are native there; they are drones; they have lived from hand to mouth. They have got no enterprise; they have got no self-respect; they have got no character. They lie down and open their mouths for a teat to suck, and it does not make much matter what animal has the teat so long as they can suck anything from it.

Now, that is the evidence of a man from the North, a gallant soldier, and I will ask if anybody here will accuse Gen. Bragg of being unfriendly to the Union soldiers. Will the gentleman from Georgia, who has so much South Carolina blood in him, as he says, will he say that Gen. Bragg was unfriendly to the soldiers because he used this language? I would like to hear the gentleman answer that question. That is the false position I have been placed in myself, of being unfriendly to the soldiers, but I stand here to deny it. I am unfriendly, however, to a coward, to a sneak, to a deserter, who did not have the manhood to fight like a man for what he thought was right, and I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] will not undertake longer to defend that class, but will go back home to riding corn stalk-horses again in his father's yard. [Laughter.]

Now, there has been a great deal said about fraud. No one can stand here and say that fraud has not crept into the management of the Pension Bureau. We know that fraud has crept in, and it would have been a matter of impossibility to have avoided it entirely; yea, it is honeycombed with fraud, and I say that all these fraudulent pensions ought to be investigated and every fraudulent pensioner ought to be deprived of what he is getting, if he can be found out. That is the only honest way to go at this matter, and the only way to do justice to the taxpayer and the soldier too. I have received letters denouncing me for opposing pensions and some complimenting me and actually showing up fraud plain and simple.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a letter that I received a short time ago from Marion, Ind., in evidence to establish fraud. I do not know who wrote it, but that is the postmark upon it, and I received it only a few days ago; it is poetry.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. What is the writer's name?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. There is no name signed to it. It is just a piece of poetry sent to me from Indiana [laughter], and I would like to read it. The writer says: "Please place this on your reference file." [Laughter.] And I only produce this because it comes from a Northwestern State, and not from the South; and it evidently shows that even the old soldiers themselves and their friends are tired of this wholesale fraud in matters of pensions. It shows that the country is alive to the great injustice done the taxpayers of the nation. Now, before I read it I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES], before he jumps on me again, that I am not responsible for this; I make this statement because he nearly frightened me awhile ago, though I am not very scary. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Does the gentleman think that he can read an anonymous communication to the House of Representatives and not be responsible for what it contains.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I show where I got it from.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. But that does not relieve you from the responsibility. You read the language of Gen. Bragg here just now and you indorsed it. There can not be any objection to your bringing in this other matter if you choose, but you will be responsible for it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I simply put Gen. Bragg on the stand. I am not a lawyer or the son of a lawyer; I am an honest man [laughter]; but I put Gen. Bragg on the stand to testify as a witness. Is not that legitimate? Are you responsible for all the witnesses that you put upon the stand to make out your case? I hope that gentlemen will not hold me responsible for all the witnesses I put upon the stand, still I believe what Bragg said to be true, and that's what's the matter.

Mr. LACEY. When you put a witness upon the stand you vouch for his trustworthiness.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No, sir. Although I am only an old fool farmer, you can not make me swallow that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LACEY. A lawyer who would go into court and say: "Gentlemen of the jury, here is an infernal scoundrel whose testimony I want you to believe," would not have much standing in court.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does the gentleman call Gen. Bragg an infernal scoundrel?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. You intimate that he is, and I hope, my friend, that you will take it back and ask pardon of this House for such language. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOSES. The gentleman seems to be a great admirer of Gen. Bragg. Now, I remember that Gen. Bragg said he loved Mr. Cleveland for the enemies he had made, and I understand that you are one of Mr. Cleveland's enemies, so I suppose that is the reason that you love Gen. Bragg so. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I want to say that if he will look over the RECORD he will not find the gentleman from South Carolina following Mr. Cleveland in any of his recommendations. He will not find me a cuckoo or anything of that sort, and if he will look into the newspapers of this morning he will see that I said that the President and his party were worshiping the golden calf, not serving the true God, and that I wanted them brought back to the true faith, or there would be a parting of the waves and that pretty soon. And the gentleman from Georgia has not said a word about the veto and seems to be very well pleased with it, but when he gets back down into Georgia he will find the boys after him with a sharp stick.

I want these old battle-scarred fellows to get what they ought to have; but I am unalterably opposed to a skulking deserter or fraudulent pensioner having a cent. Now, if that is treason this House may make the most of it, and I would say to my friend from Georgia I said nothing about loving Bragg.

Now, with the permission of the House, I will read this poetry.

A SPECIMEN OF A PENSION FRAUD.

Of the wideawake kind, within a thousand miles of Indianapolis one may find;
Who by several boards of medicated stoolpigeons has been declared to be totally blind.
On total blindness he has been pensioned at seventy-two dollars a month;
Which snug sum of money to freely spend among the neighbors is his wont.

For the sake of gain, they hope, that always in their midst he would remain;
And consequently every muscle they do strain, his good will to maintain.
The postmaster, who sells whisky, pork, and bread, smiles pleasantly upon this old vet,
When, at regular intervals, he hands to him the letter with his pension check.
Strange to say, this much disabled vet has a penchant for hunting almost every day;
And loaded down with game, homeward bound, one may oft see him wend his way.
From Uncle Sam he has received, as first pension payment, a very large amount of money;
Which all has found its way to his Congressman, doctors, and to his shrewd attorney.
These thrifty business men had pushed with might and main, his pension claim;
And on such compatriots, for the existence of the pension frauds, one must lay the blame.
This pension business is a swindle, pure and simple, rotten to the very core;
An imposition upon the American people, a fact one can not but deplore.
It has been the means of swelling to a frightful extent, the army of bribe-takers, perjurers, and dead-beats;
And has contributed greatly, toward having made truth and honor, a hiss and a byword on the streets.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Now, here is a straw showing which way the wind blows; saying in substance that a man gets a pension from blindness, and yet hunts every day; shooting and fishing, and coming home each day loaded with game.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Do you give the soldier's name?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. There is no name signed to it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. You do not give the soldier's name?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No, sir; I do not give the soldier's name, because he did not sign it himself.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. No such case exists, and you know it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I do not know any such a thing. Here is a letter postmarked "Marion, Ind." You may see it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Do you believe it?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I am not here to stand a civil-service examination upon what I believe. I have given this to you for what it is worth. I do not know it is not true, and the gentleman does not know it either, because he does not live in Indiana; he lives in Kansas, and Kansas people hardly ever go out of Kansas. I believe there are just such cases drawing pensions to-day, and it ought to be stopped at once.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Kansas people go farther away from home and travel more than South Carolinians.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That is possible. South Carolinians can stay at home; they are not obliged to leave on account of bad conduct. I hope the gentleman will accept this as a piece of pleasantry and allow me to go on. I am a young member and very timid. [Laughter.] I hope the gentleman will not try to interrupt me, as I have told the gentleman from Georgia I was scary.

Mr. THOMAS. Do you declare that to be poetry?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, I used to study rhyme and meter and foot measure, and all that sort of thing; but I will go into a discussion with the gentleman some other time about matters of that kind, but I doubt if the gentleman knows the difference between prose and poetry.

A MEMBER. It is blank verse.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Like the member's head.

A MEMBER. Oh!

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Now, my friends, so much for that. I want to say here now from a business standpoint that thousands and thousands of people in the United States are to-day, according to the accounts we receive, at the point of starvation, friendless, homeless, almost naked, with no money, no food. It is to this class of citizens that I would have the gentleman from Kansas, and the gentleman from Georgia, and this House direct their attention for a few moments. I would have them take a business view of this question and ask themselves whether under the laws that already exist enough pensions can not be obtained to take care of the honest soldiers while at the same time paying due regard to the taxpayers—not increasing the number of our paupers—not increasing this army of tramps that are to-day marching upon the capital of the United States for want of employment and want of bread. Justice demands it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. You voted for the Wilson bill, did you not?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Yes, sir; and I would vote for it again, because it was the best I could get. What of it?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That and the policy of your party is responsible for all these hard times.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, my friend, I deny that. This trouble had come before the Wilson bill was heard of. The trouble came from you and your party—from the iniquitous McKinley bill and from the other trickery and rascality which your party has put into law in this country. I charge the whole of it upon your party. We as Democrats have inherited this trouble from you and your party, but we are getting out of it in our own way.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. How?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, wait and see.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The hard times did not begin until after it was known that Cleveland was elected. You are getting deeper in the mire all the time.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Be patient; do not hurry. Watch, wait, and pray, but Kansans hardly ever do the latter.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the gentleman regard the Democratic party as responsible for the Chicago platform?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Yes, sir; but I am sorry to say that all the members of the party do not stand upon it. I am sorry to say that a great many members of the Democratic party in this very House have, in my humble judgment, violated the pledges upon which they were elected, by voting for the unconditional repeal of the Sherman act, and against the Bland bill, and the President has never been on the platform since his election. If they would stand or will yet stand upon the Chicago platform it will give us a great, grand, and prosperous country, provided some of the Alliance demands are supplemented. What next, sir?

Mr. THOMAS. Was it not the fear of the fulfillment of the promises of that platform that made the hard times?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Now, my friend, you ask me to go back into that discussion. But let me discuss pensions to-night. That is the point I am driving at, not the tariff bill. However, I will say, no, sir; no, sir. See for yourself.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, you precipitated it yourself.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Now, let us come to the subject before us, a subject some of the members would like to avoid; but I did not precipitate it.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, also an article which I would like to put in evidence, an extract from the New York Times, a paper from the State from which my distinguished friend, Mr. CURTIS, comes, in regard to pensions. With the courtesy and permission of the House I would like to read this, although it is a pretty long article. [Cries of "Go on!"] Well, here it is, and it will make some of the advocates of fraudulent pensions mighty sick, however it came from the North and not the rebel South. Here it is:

THE NATION'S GREAT SCANDAL—FRAUDS THAT SWELL THE PENSION ROLL BEYOND ALL REASON—THE NEW YORK TIMES EXPOSES THEM—A NEW PLAN FOR INVESTIGATING ABUSES OF THE PENSION SYSTEM—STAINS ON THE "ROLL OF HONOR"—THIRTY YEARS AFTER THE WAR THE PENSION LIST IS STILL GROWING RAPIDLY—MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY MILLION DOLLARS WILL BE NEEDED TO MEET THE DEMAND THIS YEAR, AND THERE ARE MANY THOUSANDS OF APPLICATIONS STILL WAITING TO BE PASSED UPON—LAWS AND BUREAU RULINGS HAVE BEEN STEADILY GROWING MORE LIBERAL, RATES HAVE BEEN INCREASED, AND METHODS OF PROCEDURE MADE MORE AND MORE LAX, UNTIL THE DEMAND FOR PENSION MONEY HAS EMPTIED THE NATIONAL TREASURY—MANY DETAILS OF THE PENSION BUSINESS NEVER BEFORE MADE PUBLIC WILL BE PRESENTED BY THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The amount of money asked to pay pensions this year is $160,000,000.

A little stream of pure gold was set flowing from the Treasury thirty years ago to repay the sacrifices of the heroes of the war. A patriotic gratitude forced the current on. Common honesty dug its channels toward those whose honest service gave claim to its beneficence.

The little stream has become a rushing, mighty torrent. Partisan greed has usurped the place of patriotic gratitude. The stream has been polluted that it may fertilize the pastures of the politicians. The taxpayer stands frightened as the receding millions threaten to leave the Treasury a barren, sandy beach when the tide is out.

The amount paid for pensions in 1865 was $8,525,153.11.

The amount paid in 1893 was $156,740,467.14.

The number of pensioners in 1865 was 85,986.

The number in 1893 was 966,012.

The total disbursements for pensions for the period 1861–'93 was $1,574,088,079.05.

The applications for new pensions are coming in at as rapid a rate as ever. In the seven months ended last October they numbered 65,399, or nearly as many as were on the rolls one year after the war closed. The cash which the people contribute is being paid out at the rate of nearly half a million dollars a day.

The original idea—the idea which Abraham Lincoln had—of granting pensions to those soldiers who had suffered because of their services in the defense of their country has long since been abandoned.

Politics has taken the place of patriotism.

The laws granting pensions have been made more and more liberal as the influence of pensions on votes has been developed.

The Pension Bureau has become, in the minds of those who have been charged with making and executing the laws, the central office through which they have attempted to call up "the soldier vote."

The general laws granting pensions have been amended and supplemented by laws relating to particular disabilities until almost every conceivable ill has been provided for. Every change in the law has been one of increase.

Discretion in fixing the rates for disabilities has been given to officials appointed by the party in power. Almost without exception, every change in the rate of pension has been an increase.

Notice the upward tendency of everything pertaining to the granting of pensions regardless of any sense of justice or fair play.

Thousands of pensions have been granted by special acts of Congress providing for cases where a pension could not be secured under the general laws.

It has been made fashionable to become a pensioner.

The pension roll has lost all semblance of a "roll of honor."

In the alarm which all thoughtful people have felt at the disastrous drain on the Treasury, the cry of "fraud" has been often heard. The facts and figures as to the pension business are not new, and statisticians have exercised their mathematics to show that by all the probabilities the number on the lists was swollen far and away beyond its legitimate bounds.

The statisticians' work has been taken up by the people, frightened by the magnitude of the draft of cash on their pockets, and they have cried "fraud." To this cry there has come back the reply of the demagogue, the politician, the pensioner, and whoever else was interested: "Show us the fraud in specific cases."

The specific information has not been forthcoming. It is locked up in the gigantic building in Washington, where the public may not see it. It has been barricaded there behind a wall built by men who have wrought the trouble.

One-half of it only is there at that. The other half is scattered in a million houses the length and breadth of the country.

Specific cases of fraud have rarely came to light. It has been hard for those who would let daylight on them to tear away the covering. It has been easy for those who are interested in concealing them to do it.

But frauds do exist.

The plainest, shortest words of the English language are null and void of meaning, or the Government has been plundered systematically, steadily, and on a gigantic scale.

If these statements have been made before, the interested demagogue has cried out, "Show us specific cases; general cases are valueless."

The New York Times has been making an investigation of the pension business along the lines which have never before been attempted.

It has secured information concerning pensioners which has heretofore been unknown, save to the men themselves and their immediate neighbors.

It has secured information as to how pensions have been obtained in specific cases, which has heretofore been a secret of the claim agent.

The New York Times has in its possession these facts:

The names of about 8,000 pensioners in this State.

The company, regiment, and rank held in the service by these pensioners.

The disabilities which were sworn to when the claim for a pension was filed.

The date of the application for a pension.

The date when the pension certificate was issued.

The amount of pension granted.

The dates when applications for increases were filed and when such increases were granted.

These facts should open the eyes of all who want a pure and honorable Government, a Government that will be just before generous.

The names of those who draw pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, as distinguished from those who draw under the general invalid pension laws, showing those whose disabilities were incurred in the service and those who are "unable to earn a support at manual labor" because of any disabilities "not the result of their own vicious habits."

The names of widows who receive pensions under either the general laws or the act of June 27, 1890.

The names of dependents other than widows drawing pensions under these different laws.

Nearly 1,000 of these cases have been investigated, and information which has heretofore been regarded as inaccessible will be given to the public.

In brief, this state of things has been found to exist:

First. Men are drawing pensions under the old laws for "disabilities incurred in the service and in the line of duty" who give no evidence of the existence of the disabilities alleged when they filed their claim. They never existed or they have ceased to exist since the pension was granted.

Second. Men are drawing pensions under the old laws for disabilities "incurred in the service" who were for twenty years after the close of the war notably strong and able-bodied. In one instance a man who boasted for fifteen years that he was physically the strongest man in the village in which he lived, now wrecked by dissipation, draws a large pension "for disabilities incurred in the service."

Third. More than 25 per cent of those pensioners who draw under the old laws for disabilities incurred in the service have been granted increases during the last five years. Many of the men who draw these increased pensions are apparently no more disabled now than they were five years ago. They are doing the same work and getting the same pay for it.

Fourth. Many of those who draw the maximum amount of $12 a month under the act of June, 1890, for disabilities which, according to law, prevent them from "earning a support at manual labor," are earning their living at manual labor precisely as they have been doing for the last twenty-five years. The notorious "order 164," issued by Commissioner Raum is responsible for the distribution of enormous amounts of money to able-bodied men.

Fifth. Many who have been for years idle, loafers, intemperate, and given to all excesses are drawing pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, which provides that the inability to earn a support shall not be "the result of their own vicious habits."

Sixth. In some cities the number of pensioners who draw money from the Treasury because of the act of June 27, 1890, is nearly as large as the number who draw under all the laws enacted during the previous twenty-five years.

Seventh. There is machinery accessible to pension attorneys for procuring discharges for men who left their companies and went to Canada during the war. Deserters are on the pension rolls.

Eight. Women are drawing widows' pensions who have children born years since the death of their husbands. They have refused to marry because their pension would then cease.

Astounding facts! Eye openers to all who are concerned about the welfare of this country.

Ninth. Many men who are rated the wealthiest in the towns where they live are drawing pensions. In many instances they were rich before they asked for pensions.

Tenth. In the majority of instances the men whose names are improperly or fraudulently on the pension rolls are honest and free of any intention of taking a dollar from the Government to which they are not entitled. They have been put in a false position by the "pension sharks," the men who devote their energies to securing pensions at all hazards, that they may fatten themselves on the fees.

Eleventh. Machine politicians during the last Administration used the Pension Office for partisan purposes. They promised pensions for votes, and in some cases delivered the goods. They have threatened the pensioner with the loss of his pension if he voted the Democratic ticket.

Twelfth. The politicians and the pension agents, rather than the pensioner, have planned the raid on the Treasury. The Pension Bureau has helped them execute the raid.

Specific cases, illustrating each one of the foregoing statements, will be given in detail.

Information as to who the pensioners are and what their condition is, such as has never before been given to the public, will be presented.

Many significant things have been developed during the investigation. Several hundreds of old soldiers who draw pensions have been visited by reporters for The New York Times, and the ideas of the pensioners have been asked on all sides of the question.

These interviews have developed, among other things, that many pensioners, particularly those who draw under the act of June 27, 1890, have been interested to keep the fact a secret.

There is a feeling that the publication of the entire pension roll would be of value.

The recent prevalent talk of protest on the part of pensioners against investigation of the pension rolls is rot, coming from partisan demagogues or from men who know they are drawing money to which they are not entitled. It does not come from honest soldiers. No men have protested to New York Times reporters more emphatically against pension abuses than honest pensioners themselves. No men have given so much assistance in the investigation which the New York Times has carried on as old soldiers themselves. The protests against revision of the rolls come from men who are afraid that if daylight be let in on their cases they will lose what they are getting. Instead of being a "roll of honor," on which a soldier may rejoice to point out his name, the term "pensioner" has become almost a reproach in some communities. Some pensioners have apologized for drawing pensions.

In some instances men whose names are on the pension rolls have simply said, when asked on what grounds they secured a pension: "The agent got it for me. I was told I was as much entitled to a pension as a lot of men who were getting them."

The looseness in the forms of affidavits and the latitude given in the interpretation of the laws have conspired with the pension agent to make it easy to drain the Treasury.

WHO MAY DRAW PENSIONS—THE CASES SPECIFIED BY LAW AS BENEFICIARIES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

In considering the subject of pensions, as it has been investigated by the New York Times, the answers to these questions will be of interest:

Who may draw pensions under the existing laws?

Why may they draw them?

How much may they draw?

These are very important queries, and more important still the answers.

And in answering these questions from the laws and statutes alone it is brought out with a vividness that is startling.

The list has been constantly increased.

The causes for which pensions have been granted have been steadily and rapidly increased.

The amounts have kept even pace with the length of the list and the grounds on which pensions are granted.

The plot to break into the Treasury has been constantly broadening.

It has succeeded beyond the expectation of those who planned it.

It has in the last few years grown to be nothing less than an organized system of pillage.

The list of pensioners of the United States on account of the war of the rebellion is, in the practice of the Bureau and its agencies, divided into three general classes:

Invalid pensioners—that is, soldiers who have been more or less disabled by wounds or diseases.

The widows and minor children of deceased soldiers.

The dependent mothers or fathers or minor brothers and sisters of deceased soldiers who have left neither widows nor minor children.

The list of invalid pensioners is made up of those who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States, and who have been disabled under the conditions provided for in the laws and have made proof of the fact according to the prescribed forms and regulations. The following classes of persons may draw invalid pensions under existing laws:

1. Any officer, including regulars, volunteers, and militia, or any officer of the Marine Corps, or any enlisted man, however employed in the military or naval services of the United States, or in its Marine Corps, whether regularly mustered or not, disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty.

2. Any master serving on a gunboat or any pilot, engineer, sailor, or other person not regularly mustered, serving upon a gunboat or war vessel of the United States, disabled by any wound or injury received, or otherwise incapacitated while in the line of duty for procuring his subsistence by manual labor.

3. Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army, serving for the time being as a member of the militia of any State, under orders of an officer of the United States, or who volunteered, for the time being, to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States, or who otherwise volunteered and rendered service in any engagement with rebels or Indians, disabled in consequence of wounds or injury received in the line of duty in such temporary service. (But such claims of State militiamen or nonenlisted persons must have been prosecuted to a successful issue prior to July 4, 1874.)

4. Any acting assistant or contract surgeon disabled by any wound or injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty while actually performing the duties of assistant surgeon or acting assistant surgeon with any military force in the field or, in transitu, or in hospital.

5. Any provost-marshal, deputy provost-marshal, or enrolling officer disabled by reason of any wound or injury received in the discharge of his duty, to procure subsistence by manual labor.

6. By the act of June 27, 1890, all soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion who served ninety days and were honorably discharged the service, and who are incapacitated for performance of manual labor, provided the disability is not the result of their own vicious habits.

THE LAWS GROW LIBERAL—MARKED INCREASE IN THE RATES GRANTED TO THE PENSIONABLE CLASSES.

There has been a steady and marked increase in the rates of pension granted by the laws for the different degrees and classes of disabilities.

Everything is being increased without proper regard for those who have the bills to pay out of their hard-earned goods.

Prior to July 4, 1864, the highest rate for any disability was the total of rank, which is: For lieutenant-colonel and all officers of higher rank, $30 per month; for major, surgeon, and paymaster, $25 per month; for captain, provost-marshal, and chaplain, $20 per month; for first lieutenant, assistant surgeon, deputy provost-marshal, and quartermaster, $17 per month; for second lieutenant and enrolling officer, $15 per month, and for private and noncommissioned officer, $8 per month. The most utterly helpless pensioners could obtain no more than the above rates. But by section 4697 of the Revised Statutes there was provided, for the period from June 6, 1866, to June 3, 1872, a rate of $20 per month for those who were "so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attention." A rate of $25 was established for those who were "so totally and permanently disabled as to render them utterly helpless, or so nearly so as to require regular personal aid and attendance of another person."

The rate for the later degree of utter helplessness requiring regular attention was advanced to $31.25 per month from and after June 4, 1872, and by the act of June 18, 1874, was again advanced to $50 per month, and yet again advanced to $72 per month by the act of June 16, 1880. This is the rate now allowed, and is the highest rate granted, with the exception of the special rate of $100 per month for loss of both hands, granted by act of February 12, 1889.

The rate of $20 per month for the next lower degree of helplessness, that which "incapacitates for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attention," was advanced to $24 per month from and after June 4, 1872, and again advanced to $30 per month, the present rate, by act of March 3, 1883.

Still another degree of "total disability," intermediate between that rated at $30 and the highest degree, at $72, was established by the act of July 14, 1892, which provides that disability "to such a degree as to require frequent and periodical, though not regular and constant, personal aid and attendance of another person" shall be rated at $50 per month.

The act of July 27, 1868, included in section 4697 of the Revised Statutes, granted a rate of $15 per month for such disability as to render "inability to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot." From and after June 4, 1872, this rate was increased to $18, and the act of March 3, 1887, again increased it to $24 per month.

The legislation of July 4, 1864, and afterwards, not only established different degrees of total disability and higher rates for all of them, but also began the establishment of rates for "permanent and specific disabilities."

The first rates established for specific disabilities less than total were: For loss of both hands, $25 per month; for loss of both feet, $20 per month, and for loss of sight of both eyes, $25 per month. For loss of one hand and one foot, $20 per month was granted by the act of March 3, 1865. All of these rates were advanced by law a few years later, by the act of June 4, 1872, and some of them more than once after that by different acts. A number of additional specific disabilities had been enumerated and rates attached to them in the act of June 6, 1866, and these rates also were advanced by the act of June 4, 1872, above referred to, and again by subsequent legislation.

The following table shows the advancement in the rates made by successive acts. The rates for the disabilities mentioned are given under the dates of the acts providing them, and the table, while it does not include all the rates advanced, gives an idea of the whole course of the advancement of pension rates at successive intervals since the close of the war:

Here you have an idea of gradual advancement of every consideration in every department of the proceedings in granting pensions.

COMMISSIONERS GREW LIBERAL—THE DISCRETIONARY POWER WAS WIELDED AT THE TREASURY'S EXPENSE.

The law originally provided pensions for "total disability." For many specific disabilities, such as the loss of a hand or foot, special acts of Congress were enacted. For other inferior disabilities, the amount of pension was left to the discretion of the Pension Commissioner, and authority for the exercise of this discretion was specifically given by law.

This power, placed in the hands of politicians, has cost the Treasury millions upon millions of dollars.

Successive Pension Commissioners, lawyers and political managers, have apparently being trying to outdo each other in estimating what proportion of "total disability" the loss of a forefinger is, or what proportion of total disability a double hernia constitutes.

These increases in ratings are startling.

A degree of deafness, which originally entitled the pensioner to $1 a month, now entitles him to $10, while for such a degree of deafness as originally entitled the sufferer to $6 a month, he now receives $27 a month. Originally, for the loss of a thumb, the index, and middle and ring fingers, the rating was $8. Since 1884 it has been $17.

Originally, "severe deafness" of both ears gave the pensioner $4 a month. Since August 27, 1888, it has given him $22.

These increases have been based on the increased rate for "total disability" provided by law.

The original was $8 for a private, and the Bureau of Pensions was authorized to determine what proportion of "total" a minor disability constituted. When an act had been passed granting $18 a month for the loss of a hand or foot, the Commissioner was authorized to determine when other minor disabilities became equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, and rate them proportionately.

See the adroitness of such management allowing the Bureau to say what is equivalent to loss of hand, foot, eye, etc., thereby opening wide the door to all sorts of frauds.

Under this system a forefinger doubled its value by act of Congress, and an inguinal hernia assumed such a relation to an amputated arm as the Commissioner of Pensions dictated.

A case of malarial poisoning was rated according to its importance as compared with the loss of a foot, while hemorrhoids were paid for on the same basis.

It is not strange that the veteran whose arm was shot off at Gettysburg complains of inequalities in the system which gives to the man who develops some deafness or stomach trouble twenty years later almost as large a pension as he gets himself.

One of the most striking things in the whole subject is the rapid and steady increase in importance which has been placed on so-called "inferior disabilities." The ratings have been increasing in a regular progression.

The following table shows some of the rates established by the Pension Bureau under the authority of the original law, the changes subsequently made, and the dates from which they were allowed. The rates are for privates:

THE ACT OF JUNE 27, 1890—IT OPENED THE TREASURY TO AN ALTOGETHER NEW CLASS OF BENEFICIARIES.

The passage of the act of June 27, 1890, created a distinctly additional class of pensioners and a very burdensome one. Prior to this time no rates of pension had been granted for disabilities unless they were proved to the satisfaction of the Bureau to have been incurred in the service. The act of 1890 granted a pension to "all persons who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from a mental or physical disability of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support."

Rates were granted of not exceeding $12 per month, and not less than $6 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support."

This act and the looseness with which it was first administered have resulted in placing upon the pension roll a very large number of new names, and in further depleting an already overtaxed Treasury.

At the close of the fiscal year 1892 about three-sevenths of the invalid pensioners on the rolls on account of the war of the rebellion were there under the provisions of the act of 1890.

The amount of disbursements for all pensions, which had been, in round numbers, $106,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, advanced by leaps and bounds after June 27 of that year, when the act took effect, until it had become, in round numbers, $160,000,000 for the fiscal year 1893.

The disabilities for which pensions are granted under this act may be of any origin except the vicious habits of the pensioner.

They may be the result of accidents or exposure under any circumstances or of the general feebleness of old age.

They may, in fact, have existed prior to the outbreak of the war.

The liberality of this act was further increased by the rulings of the Bureau of Pensions.

The boards of examining surgeons were instructed in examining claimants under this act to rate the disabilities and degrees of disabilities found exactly as they rated them for claimants under the old laws, and these rates, when submitted to the Bureau for review and correction, were allowed as far as the limitations of the law would permit.

The boards of examining surgeons under Commissioner Raum were instructed to make a rating which did not take into the account the degree of inability to earn a support at manual labor.

See how effectively this inability clause is disregarded, so that many are now drawing pensions who are well able to earn a living by performing hard manual labor.

For convenience, the rates allowed under the act of 1890 were graded $6, $8 $10, and $12. The claimant's rank does not enter into the account.

Widows of soldiers whose deaths resulted from their army service were, pensioned at $8 per month, with an allowance of $2 extra for each child under 16 years of age, under the provisions of sections 4702 and 4703 of the Revised Statutes.

By the act of March 19, 1886, the rate was increased to $12 per month, and the allowance of $2 for each minor child was maintained.

The act of June 27, 1890, grants $8 per month to the widow of any soldier who served ninety days or more, no matter what the cause of his death, and the same allowance of $2 for each child under 16 years of age is made as under the former laws.

Dependent relatives of soldiers who had died as a result of their army service, leaving neither widow nor legitimate child, were pensioned by the provisions of section 4707 of the Revised Statutes. The rate granted was $8 per month. It was increased to $12 by the act of March 19, 1886. It is given to the mother of the soldier first, or, if she be dead, to the father; or, if both mother and father be dead, to the soldier's orphan brothers and sisters under 16 years of age, who are pensioned jointly.

Under these laws dependent parents were required to prove that they were actually, to some extent, dependent for support upon the soldier son at the time of his death.

The act of June 27, 1890, dispenses with this requirement, and provides that it shall be necessary only to show "that such parent, or parents, are without other present means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound to their support."

HOW THE MILLIONS HAVE GONE—THE STEADY AND RAPID INCREASE IN THE PENSION LIST.

Under the operation of the laws and the departmental rulings and ratings, the number of pensioners and the amount of money paid for pensions each year since 1865 has been this:

Year.	Number.	Amount.	Year.	Number.	Amount.
1865	85,986	$6,525,153.11	1880	250,802	$57,240,540.14

This includes the pensions paid to survivors of the war of 1812 and widows of soldiers in that war.

Ponder, gentlemen of the House, to-night these startling facts, complete in one of your own papers from the great State of New York. Deny them if you can. You know they are only too true. Gentlemen will you not have some consciences and relent, and help to stop these leaks?

Now, gentlemen, I make no special plea for the South, only as the Southern people are citizens of this common country, bearing their portion of the burdens of government, and as such should be recognized with all others. I do not stand here as a representative of the South in particular, but of the whole people in general—yea, the burden bearers, the tax payers and laborers. I say we should know no South, no East, no North, or West in considering this question, or in great public questions, but we should look at them all from a purely business standpoint, and that we should have some compassion and mercy on the taxpayers of this great nation when we are piling up these billions of dollars of expense upon them, men who are already overburdened and losing their homes by the thousand. Of course, it is worse in the South than it is in the North. There in the North they pay it out with one hand and get it back again with the other. In the South it goes out from us never to come back again, and it is a hardship to be thus burdened and they are tired of it.

I am perfectly willing to be governed by majorities, but here on these Friday night sessions legislation is often asked for the soldier, and great love and great regard is expressed for him, and is said to be in the bosoms of gentlemen on that side for the old soldiers, and yet strangely enough they can not attend these night sessions in their behalf. If they have such a regard for the old soldier, why is it that they can not come up here on Friday nights to advocate his claim and try to get his pension through? Look at this crowd here now, a handful of members. Why, this pretended love of the soldier is all a pretense, and you know it. You pretend to be working for him, but when it comes to the test you are not on hand. What is the meaning of that? It is just like many other false pretenses made in reference to the voters of the country. Just let me say that the eyes of the American people are upon you, and you will be held responsible, and don't you forget it.

Your action in regard to the soldiers reminds me of what the little boy said about his father on one occasion. Some one asked him if his father was a Christian. "Oh, yes," said the boy, "he is a good Christian, but he is not working at it much now." [Laughter.]

So it is with your love for the soldiers. The present company is always excepted, of course, because these gentlemen who are around me are in the habit of attending every night. But where are the others? Where are those who express so much love for the soldiers? It seems to me that they are not working at it very much now. These gentlemen appear to be quite anxious for pension legislation, but they are not here working at it to-night. Gentlemen should put up or shut up.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman be kind enough to say whether or not he thinks the bill now pending before this committee to perfect the military record of Warren Alonzo Alden is subject to the criticism he has been making, or ought to pass?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, I will come to that after awhile; but will say to the gentleman from Iowa that my remarks are general and not specific. This claim may be a just one. My remarks are not specific in his case.

I wish to call your attention as Representatives to the Constitution of the United States.

Article I, section 5, provides that—

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members; and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Now, I think the gentlemen ought to be willing to stand by the Constitution of the United States. And here let me read the oath which each and every one of you has taken when you were sworn in as members of this body to support that Constitution:

I (A. B.) do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign or domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same, that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and will well and truly discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, etc.

Each and all of you took that solemn obligation to support the Constitution, and you ought not to be unwilling to abide by it on Friday nights and refuse to come here and transact the business under that feature of the Constitution which you are sworn to obey. The rules of the House say the same thing. They provide:

2. In the absence of a quorum, 15 members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Now, if there is not a quorum present to-night, why, you have the remedy—send for them and bring them here; yes, take them from their entertainments even.

Now, I want to call your attention to all those. In regard to the soldiers I want to say we should not exhibit any partisan spirit in the discussion of these questions. God knows the war has been over for more than twenty-five years, and it is only the wicked interference of a great many men to-day that keeps it up, men who are invisible in war and invincible in peace. They are the people who stir up strife and wave the bloody shirt and all that sort of thing. Many of the old soldiers—Lee and Grant and Sheridan and Stonewall Jackson—have crossed over the river and are resting to-day under the shade of the trees, and they have been followed by numbers of the humbler comrades and privates, where they will rest until the archangel shall sound the final reveille and summon them to the last grand dress parade upon the eternal plains by the final bugle blast. Let them rest together in peace, and let those of us who are left behind here shake hands, as I said on another occasion here, across the bloody chasm, and agree to bury sectionalism and the bloody shirt, and to plant upon its grave the white rose of peace, with the prayer, as I said before, that it may bring forth fruit for the upbuilding of this great country of ours. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let our friends here, if they want to vote these pensions, come here and attend to the business of the people. Let them deny themselves a little pleasure for one night in the week; let them give up their clawhammer coats and their entertainments, let them give up the theaters; let them give up their other parades; let them give up the euchre party and the card party, and come here as the representatives of these old soldiers and the young soldiers, to stand by the people of this great country, the soldiers and the taxpayers, too, and we will have better times. [Applause.] I think they might do this much, as it is their bounden duty. [Applause.]

Now, my friends, let us come together and make this one of the greatest and grandest nations upon the face of God's green earth, which it ought to be. Let us have but one ambition, that laudable ambition to once more see this great nation of ours a happy, united, prosperous, and fraternal people. [Applause.]

Now, in conclusion, I want to ask you here if you are willing to go on night after night without a quorum, and transact business against the Constitution of the United States, in violation of the oath you have taken to support that Constitution, and in violation of the rules that Mr. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE talked about so much to-day and yesterday? I ask you whether you are willing to go on in this way? If you are, I hope somebody besides myself will raise the point of no quorum to-night, for if I raise it my brother from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is ready to jump on me, and even my friend from Georgia [Mr. MOSES], who loves the soldiers so well, may do so, too. I have had my say and leave the matter with you.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Are we not justified, when you object to every bill that comes up?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I do not object except it is an unfair request for pension, and the gentleman knows it. Now, let us, in conclusion, be fair to the soldier and at the same time just to the taxpayer. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order as to the jurisdiction of this committee to pass upon this bill. Let me say to the Chair that the rule under which we are working to-night strictly confines our deliberations to four classes of bills, namely: Bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, bills reported from the Committee on Pensions, bills reported from the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of removing political disabilities, and bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose of removing charges of desertion. I make the point that this bill does not fall within any of these classes, and that therefore we have no jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the bill, and quite agrees with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] that it is not in order under the special rule under which the House is operating to-night. The Chair will sustain the point of order; and if there be no objection the bill will be laid aside, to retain its place on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LUCINDA C. WHEELER.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1463) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucinda C. Wheeler, widow of John H. Wheeler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Lucinda C. Wheeler, widow of John H. Wheeler, late private in Company L, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, in the war of 1861, and grant her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, subject, however, to the limitations of the pension laws.

The report, as published in the proceedings of Friday, March 16, was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to detain the committee for a few minutes. I should not do that if it were not for one or two assertions made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], which I do not care to see go unanswered. He says that there are skulking deserters drawing pensions. Now, the gentleman is mistaken. He may be honest, but he is entirely mistaken in that.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have given the evidence of another man.

Mr. PICKLER. There is no such evidence.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. But you are misstating facts.

Mr. PICKLER. Do not interrupt.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. You are misstating facts and I will interrupt you.

Mr. PICKLER. No, I am not misstating facts.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. You shall not misquote me.

Mr. PICKLER. There are no such facts. There are no such cases.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I read from the RECORD.

Mr. PICKLER. What record?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I read from the RECORD a speech of Gen. Bragg, and I refer the gentleman to the RECORD.

Mr. PICKLER. Gen. Bragg does not say any such thing. Gen. Bragg, brave as he was, was in poor business when he was berating the Union soldiers with whom he fought. No skulking deserters draw pensions.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Here is his language in the RECORD.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say once for all in regard to this deserter question—and I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] will remember it, because it is the law—there is no deserter drawing a pension. No deserter can draw a pension in this country under the laws of the United States unless for genuine bona fide service rendered before he deserted.

That is to say, if he was a soldier and performed good service and incurred disabilities and was discharged, and after that enlisted and deserted from the second enlistment, if they find that this disability was incurred while he was a good soldier and performing duty, he can be pensioned. Otherwise he can not, and that is all there is to this deserter business. There is no such thing as the general proposition of deserters drawing pensions. Deserters are not drawing pensions. We might pension one here by a private bill, but that would be by special act. Under the general laws deserters are not pensioned.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has also spoken about the short-service men. I want to say that any man who held up his hand and swore to support the Constitution of the United States and to go where he was ordered in that war, I believe that thirty years having elapsed, is entitled to a pension.

I want to say to the gentleman, as he is in favor of pensioning the Mexican soldier, that there was not one out of twenty now drawing pensions on account of the Mexican war that saw as much service as the short-service men in the last war.

There is another fact that the gentleman ought to remember, and that is that all the survivors of the Mexican war are drawing pensions.

Now, one other thing as to this lecturing of members who do not come here on Friday night sessions. Gentlemen talk about there being no quorum. It is the merest subterfuge. The fact that there is no quorum present is not ascertained until some one raises the point. Now, if somebody raises the point we can not get a quorum, and we have to go out of court because the point of no quorum is raised. We never have had a quorum at the Friday night sessions, and we never will; and it would make no difference if we had every one of the 200 Democratic members present and all the members on the Republican side, any gentleman who could get the floor is entitled to an hour. And so, as the sessions are only two hours and a half, three men, or two men and a half, could consume the whole of the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I will ask the gentleman if he has not been here for a week trying to break a quorum and lending his assistance and aid to break a quorum?

Mr. PICKLER. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I asked you if you had not been here for the last week lending your aid and assistance, and abetting the breaking of a quorum?

Mr. PICKLER. I believe the gentleman said awhile ago that he was not standing a civil-service examination. [Laughter.] I feel a little that way myself. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I stand corrected, my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I am only seeking to answer these talkings and these lectures that we have about members not attending. It would not make any difference if we were all here, and I am here, when three men can occupy the whole time of the session. If any gentleman is disposed to oppose the bills and not allow them to pass, he can do it without making the point of no quorum, and just as easily, by talking.

Mr. STALLINGS. You could have the previous question ordered on the bills, and then three men could not control them.

Mr. PICKLER. Three men could occupy the whole time by debate, is my point, if they chose to consume so much of the time.

Mr. STALLINGS. You could have the previous question ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. Then you would have a roll call and occupy the time. You gentlemen have had some experience as to how long it takes.

Now, one point more and I am through. The gentleman from South Carolina says, and it is very often asserted, that the people of the South are paying the pensions and not getting anything back. For the benefit of the gentleman from South Carolina, I want to give the figures. The State of South Carolina, in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, paid to the Government $56,875, and the State of South Carolina drew out as pensions $224,875. You drew out four times and more for pensions than you paid into the Treasury.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That is not a true statement of the case, sir. South Carolina paid five times that much indirectly under your McKinley tariff, and you know it, and your figures——

Mr. PICKLER. But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I want to say to you, my friend, that it is said that figures do not lie, but sometimes figures are made to lie.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman is still more unfortunate when he appeals to the facts as to the tariff. Who is it that is paying the tariff, if the tariff was a tax; because if that is so, which we deny, then the North pays a largely greater proportion than the South, and the gentleman is further behind on that line than he is on internal revenue.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions there. I would like to put him through a civil service examination.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say to the gentleman if the tariff were a tax, which we deny, the North pays a largely greater proportion than the South does. I am talking about the internal revenue, and I desire to print in the RECORD, so that we may see, just what our States are paying into the Treasury and what we are drawing out for pensions. And this is every dollar that the States pay directly to the Treasury.

Mr. MOSES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOSES. Do you mean to take up the time of the old soldiers to-night in talking about the tariff?

Mr. PICKLER. I did not thrust the tariff in; but gentlemen on that side can not argue about the soldier being pensioned without talking about the tariff and about the "bloody shirt," and I did digress to reply.

I want to say to you gentlemen of the Southern States that the old Union soldiers you have in your States are the best investments you have. They bring in a great deal of money without costing you anything.

The figures to which I have referred are as follows:

Internal revenue paid and pensions received for the year ending June 30, 1893.

Mr. STALLINGS. I would like the gentleman to give us the proofs in the case that he spoke of last Friday night—the affidavits.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the case of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH], and I refer you to him. I do not think it would be in order at this time, however. I spoke to the gentleman from Illinois about it, and he said that he was fully prepared.

Mr. STALLINGS. That bill has been up twice already. A very similar bill was passed here last Friday night, but only after a statement and the introduction of the proofs by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] stated last Friday night that this case was very similar to that one, and I then suggested that we ought to have the affidavits produced here to show whether this was the identical man that had served in the Army.

Mr. PICKLER. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have fully examined that question, and they say that the evidence establishes the fact that this man was in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I understand that this question is asked with reference to the Wheeler bill?

Mr. STALLINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman that I was not here at last Friday night's meeting, which I believe was the first time that this bill has come up during this Congress.

Mr. STALLINGS. It was up two weeks ago, but I do not think the gentleman from Illinois was present.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. No; I was not. With reference to that bill, I will say that in the Fifty-second Congress it was reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and now, with the permission of the committee, I will make a brief statement of the case. The husband of the beneficiary of this bill was a recruit in the United States service, as the evidence before the Committee on Invalid Pensions shows.

The company was in Tennessee. He drew his clothing, his accouterments, everything that a soldier draws, and served his country for about six months, performing all the duties of a soldier. The evidence before the committee shows that he was regularly enlisted, and that after he had served about six months he, together with the remainder of his company, was captured by the Confederate forces. It seems that there was no record of the members, the recruits of that company furnished to the War Department before the company and its records were captured by the Confederates.

Mr. STALLINGS. Was this man regularly mustered into the service?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. So the evidence shows, the affidavits of two men who were enlisted at the same time as himself.

Mr. STALLINGS. Then, how is it that his name does not appear on the rolls in the War Department?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Simply because after he was enlisted and after all these recruits were enlisted they were captured, with their records, and sent to Andersonville prison. They had been enlisted, but they were not mustered in.

Mr. STALLINGS. Did the gentleman say that this man had served six months or a little longer before he was captured?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. He served six months without being mustered into the service. He was enlisted and sworn into the service, as the evidence shows, and performed the duty of a soldier, until he, with the rest of the company, was captured, together with the records of the company. He died in Andersonville prison, as the evidence shows, and as appears from a record in the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. STALLINGS. Who makes the proof that he died in Andersonville?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Several gentlemen who knew the fact. The evidence is before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. MARTIN, the chairman of the committee, knows that to be so.

Mr. LACEY. A record captured at Andersonville gives an account of his death and burial, but the middle letter of his name is omitted.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes; I believe that is the case. That record shows "John Wheeler" when it should be "John H. Wheeler." But the evidence before the committee establishes the fact that this man served as stated, was captured, and died in Andersonville, leaving a wife and a number of children. The widow struggled along and raised her children, and she has never received a penny of pension. Under the general law she could not receive a pension. The Committee on Invalid Pensions in the last House considered the case a meritorious one and reported the bill favorably, but it was introduced only toward the close of the Congress and it could not be acted upon in that Congress, and now again it is reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House. There is no politics in it.

Mr. STALLINGS. I wish to say to the gentleman that I never make an objection here on the ground of politics. In the case of any bill to pension an honest soldier who fought for the preservation of the Government, I certainly would not make an objection on political grounds.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I understand that.

Mr. STALLINGS. And I do not believe there is any Democrat here who would do it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. He ought not at least.

Now, I will simply say that this bill has been carefully considered by the appropriate committee in this Congress as in the last Congress and has been favorably reported. There is no question about its being a meritorious measure, and I trust that it may be favorably acted upon by the House. I do not care to go into any further argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. Is there objection?

Mr. STALLINGS. Yes, sir. I wish to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] that I will insist on seeing the evidence in this case. There is trouble about the name——

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment.

Mr. STALLINGS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Of course, the report is based upon the evidence; but I have not the evidence with me; it is on file in the committee room.

Mr. STALLINGS. I suggest that it is a very easy matter to get all this evidence from the room of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. On last Friday night, when a question of this kind was up, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] procured without any trouble and very readily the evidence upon which the report had been made. I do not see why the same thing can not be done in this case. It is important we should have the evidence here, because there is a question as to the identity of the man. If this man died in prison at Andersonville, no one will be more ready than myself to grant to his widow and children a pension. But we ought first to know that this is the man. Whenever that is established I shall not have a singel word to say against the bill.

The proof, as I have said, is easily obtained. It is right here in this Capitol. There can be no trouble in bringing all those affidavits here and letting the House see them. Only last Friday night we were obliged to pass a bill in order to repeal a bill in reference to which there had clearly been a fraud practiced upon the House. The fraudulent bill had passed the Pension Committee, the Committee of the Whole, and the House. Now, we ought not to make mistakes of that kind if they can possibly be avoided. We ought to provide pensions in meritorious cases; but we ought not to permit fraud to creep into the pension roll by the passage of special bills. It is only fraudulent bills or bills of doubtful merit that I object to. I do not oppose any application on behalf of the honest soldier or those who were dependent with him.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman will allow me to ask, What is the purpose of referring bills of this kind to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, if it is not that the committee may ascertain the facts and report their conclusions to the House?

Mr. STALLINGS. I was not sent here, Mr. Chairman, to accept the report of any committee without being satisfied of the correctness of that report. It is my duty to look out for the interests of the people that I represent, because they pay in part these pensions. Now, it is very easy to bring here the proof in this case. The clerk of the committee is right here, and the proof can be obtained in a few moments.

Mr. LACEY. He has gone after it.

Mr. STALLINGS. That is satisfactory to me. Let us pass over this case, then, for the present.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. If I may be allowed a word——

Mr. STALLINGS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it suggested that this bill be passed over informally?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I do not desire to have it passed over.

Mr. MOSES. It might be laid aside temporarily till the papers can be brought from the committee room.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement about the proof in this case. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS] is entirely mistaken in supposing that the proof is here in this Capitol. The proof in this case was filed in the Pension Office. The bill was introduced in the Fifty-second Congress and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The proof was brought from the Pension Office, and upon examination of that proof our committee filed a favorable report. The proof was then sent back to the Pension Office, where it is regularly on file—where it belongs and will be kept.

Now, the bill not having been reached in the Fifty-second Congress, a similar bill was introduced into this Congress——

Mr. STALLINGS. Did you send for the same evidence in this Congress and have it before your committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. STALLINGS. Then it can be readily obtained; there is no trouble about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Now, let me put a question—and I desire to speak with the greatest respect and kindness—when a committee has carefully examined the proof in a case, and acting in a judicial capacity has brought its conclusions here in the shape of a report, would it not be a strange thing if, whenever such a case is brought here from the Committee on Invalid Pensions or any other committee, some gentleman on this floor should insist that he will not permit the bill to pass unless the proof upon which the report of the committee was based is brought in and read before this House?

One of the very objects, as it seems to me, of a committee is in order that a bill may be sent there and the proofs in its support examined, and, as in this case, examined by a committee in which I think I am justified in saying that the House has confidence as to their findings of what that evidence shows and sustains; and on that statement it seems to me that it would be asking too much, on the part of the gentleman from Alabama, to now insist that this bill be laid aside until we can send to the Pension Office and bring the papers here and have them read from the Clerk's desk in the hearing of the House.

Now, here is a simple, plain statement of fact. Here is a soldier who was enlisted and sworn in, but before his company was full, so that it could be mustered in, he and his comrades were captured, as the proof shows and as your committee have reported. He was taken to Andersonville prison and there he died. In the Pension Office, of course, they can not allow a pension in this case, because under the law they can not go behind the records of the War Department, which fail to show that he was regularly mustered in.

This is one case that comes to our committee by reason of this very condition of things. It is because the Bureau of Pensions can not give the relief. A bill is introduced here, referred to this committee; the committee examines the proofs, takes into consideration all of the facts in the case, and the committee, after this examination and presentation of the facts as filed in the Pension Bureau, believe the proof to justify the granting of the pension, and so report to this House. They state to you that the facts are proven as claimed, and that, these facts being true, the widow ought to be pensioned when she can not obtain the pension for her husband's death in the regular form at the office, as provided by law.

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Chairman, I presume the proof in the case the other evening, that we had to have in order to get a bill through this House, was no more easy of access than the proof in the pending case, and that it could be brought before this committee just as it was then. That proof satisfied the Committee on Pensions in the case to which I refer, and yet it was developed here that the case was a fraud and we had to repeal the bill.

Now I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana, for whom I have the very highest respect, that while I have this respect for him and his judgment, and for the committee over which he presides, yet I do not think that I am justified in surrendering my own judgment in such cases; not by any means. The question is above that and beyond it, and before I am called upon to vote on any bill I ought to know that it is a meritorious one. I do not know it in this case, not as I would like to know a matter of that kind, and I shall be compelled to object to it unless the proof is brought in as I have suggested. This is a case where there is a question of identity involved.

We are told that this man went into the Army and served six months, was captured and sent to some Southern prison; and still his name does not appear on any record of the Department anywhere. He is said to have died in a Southern prison. It seems most strange and remarkable to me that a man who had served so long, and who had died after a service of six months in a Southern prison, is not recognized by name in any official document bearing upon this subject. Nowhere can there be found in the records of the War Department anything to show his service; and until something is shown to supplement the proof that has already been given, I shall feel compelled to object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Alabama will listen to me for a few moments I will suggest something to him that may possibly overcome his objection. In the Fifty-first Congress the gentleman who is now the governor of Missouricarefully scanned all of the pension bills that were upon the Calendar. He spent five months in going to the Pension Office and looking over the proofs himself; and when these cases came up for action before the House he was thoroughly posted upon them—those that he supposed were unfairly granted or reported by the committee—and he certainly did defeat a great many pension bills. I have no doubt in my own mind that some of them were pension bills that ought not to have passed the House; and I would suggest to my friend from Alabama that if he intends to take the same position with reference to these bills, that he go to the Pension Office, as Governor Stone, of Missouri, went, and look over the proofs himself.

The committee has been intrusted with the preparation and care of these matters and they have told him that they reported this bill to the House favorably on the testimony in the Office. But if the gentleman from Alabama prefers it he might go to the Office himself and look over the proofs and be prepared for action upon the bills as they come up on the Friday evening sessions.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the attention of the gentleman from Alabama, who spoke a few moments ago, simply to the details in reference to this case. While I do not want to insist or to be understood as making any personal appeal, yet I know these parties myself. I know the witnesses in the case. They are men with whom I have been acquainted since my boyhood, and I would accept their word or oath as soon as that of any other man or men in the United States.

Mr. STALLINGS. Now you are getting at the facts. You say you know these parties who made the affidavits yourself?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. STALLINGS. Did you know the soldier?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I did not personally.

Mr. STALLINGS. You know the widow?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I do, and her family.

Mr. STALLINGS. Now, have you seen the affidavits of these parties you speak of?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I have, all of them.

Mr. STALLINGS. And read them yourself?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. STALLINGS. And do they swear that this man served in the army?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. STALLINGS. And that he died at Andersonville?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. That he died in Andersonville, as the records show.

Mr. STALLINGS. But that he actually served in the Army, and died somewhere in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. That he actually served in the Army and, as the records show, died in Andersonville.

Mr. STALLINGS. And you have read those records and affidavits yourself?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes; and they are on file in the Pension Office.

Mr. STALLINGS. That is perfectly satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CORNELIA DE PEYSTER BLACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3156) granting a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow of Henry M. Black, late colonel of the United States Army, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow of Henry M. Black, late colonel of the United States Army, and to pay the said Cornelia de Peyster Black a pension of $100 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 8, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to meet the objections of the minority of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "twenty-five."

So that it will read:

A pension of $25 per month.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have both the majority and minority reports read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the reports.

The report (by Mr. LISLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3156) granting a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, have considered the same, and the majority respectfully submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of the late Col. Henry M. Black, United States Army, whose military record, as reported by the War Department, is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 20, 1893.

Statement of the military service of Henry M. Black, of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was a cadet at the United States Military Academy from July 1, 1842, to July 1, 1847, when he was graduated, and appointed brevet second lieutenant, Fourth Infantry, July 1, 1847; second lieutenant, Seventh Infantry, August 20, 1847; first lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, March 3, 1855; captain, September 10, 1856; colonel, Sixth California Infantry, February 1, 1863; honorably mustered out October 27, 1865; major, Seventh Infantry, July 25, 1863; lieutenant-colonel, Fourth Infantry, October 7, 1868; unassigned March 15, 1869; assigned to Eighteenth Infantry July 1, 1870; colonel Twenty-third Infantry, February 6, 1882.

He received the brevet of lieutenant-colonel and colonel March 13, 1865, for faithful and meritorious services during the war.

SERVICE.

He joined his regiment December, 1847, and served with it in Mexico to July 7, 1848; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to August 31, 1849; in Florida to June 15, 1850; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to August 14, 1850; at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to September 15, 1850; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to April 17, 1851; at Fort Gibson, Ind. T., to May, 1855; at Fort Monroe, Va., to July, 1855; on recruiting service to April, 1856; with regiment in Washington Territory to May, 1856; on recruiting service to May, 1857; with regiment in Washington Territory to May, 1859; in Oregon to June, 1861; at Fort Vancouver to November, 1861; in California to January 1, 1863; organizing and commanding Sixth California Volunteers, in California, to August, 1864; commandant of cadets at the Military Academy, West Point, N. Y. (mustered out of volunteer service October 27, 1865), to July 1, 1870; on delay to November 1, 1870; with regiment at Atlanta, Ga., to January 9, 1871; at Charleston, S. C., to April 10, 1871; at Columbia, S. C., to January 1, 1876; member of board at Philadelphia, Pa., to June 7, 1876; with regiment at Columbia, S. C., to July 24, 1877; at Grafton, W. Va., and Allegheny Arsenal, Pa., during labor strikes, to November 1, 1877; at Atlanta, Ga., to April 12, 1879; at Fort Assinniboine, Mont., to October 1, 1879, and in command of regiment and that post to June 2, 1881; commanding depot at Davids Island, N. Y., to June 14, 1882; on delay and on leave to October 16, 1882; commanding regiment and post of Fort Union, N. Mex., to June 2, 1884, and at Fort Wayne, Mich., to November 10, 1884; on court-martial duty at Washington, D. C., to February 24, 1885; commanding regiment and post of Fort Wayne, Mich. (being a member of court of inquiry at Fort Cœur d'Alene, Idaho, March 7 to April 19, 1887, and president of board of judges at national drill encampment, Washington, D. C., May 15 to June 4, 1887; also in command of international encampment at Chicago, Ill., September 27 to October 21, 1887), to May 8, 1890, and post of Fort Sam Houston, Tex., to January 15, 1891, when he was retired. Unemployed to August 5, 1893, on which date he died at Chicago, Ill.

GEO. D. RUGGLES,
Adjutant-General.

As will be seen from the foregoing official report the active service of Col. Black covered a period of nearly half a century. The distinguished character of this long service is fully attested by the record and also by Gen. D. S. Stanley, United States Army (retired), and others who appeared personally before your committee.

Mrs. Black is now well advanced in years and without sufficient property or income to provide her with a comfortable support. She has an unmarried daughter dependent upon her and there is no one upon whom she can legally rely for a maintenance. In addition to being the widow of a distinguished officer, Mrs. Black is the daughter of the late Col. Joseph Plympton, United States Army, who entered the service in 1812, and who, after serving in the war of 1812, the Seminole and Black Hawk Indian wars, and the Mexican war, died in 1860.

It may be said that Mrs. Black is in all respects a military woman; she was born in a military post, and two of her three daughters are the wives of officers of the Army.

There are many precedents for the granting of relief in cases of this character, and in the light of all the facts and circumstances your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out the words "one hundred" in line 8 and substituting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. LANE. There is a minority report.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do you wish the minority report read?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The views of the majority of the Committee on Pensions, respecting the propriety of the passage of the bill granting a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, are, for the following reasons, respectfully dissented from:

There are several general acts of Congress under which Mrs. Black can make application to the Pension Bureau and be allowed a pension. She would probably have no difficulty in substantiating a claim under the Mexican war pension act of January 29, 1887, or, if for any reason she could not meet the requirements of that act, she could still (if her circumstances are as represented) have recourse to an application under the late war act of June 27, 1890. The only reason given why this method of securing relief has not been followed is that the rating allowed by these acts is not large enough, but if this reason is to be accepted as sufficient to warrant the allowance of an original pension by special act in this case there is no just ground upon which similar action can be denied in thousands of other cases.

It is neither shown nor claimed that Col. Black's death was due to wounds or disease originating in the service, yet the bill as reported grants the widow a higher rate of pension than is allowed by law to the widows of officers of similar or higher rank who die in the service and line of duty.

The distinguished character of the service of the soldier is fully understood, but no especially urgent necessity or unusual circumstance is advanced as good ground upon which to base the proposed action in the case of the widow. She has no young children to support, and she has some $4,000 from which to derive an income; and this income can be materially increased through an application to the Pension Bureau under one of the acts above cited.

If there is any justice in the granting of these large pensions to the widows of regular army and navy officers, to the exclusion of the widows of the volunteer soldiers who lost their lives in defense of the Union, the allowance should be made by general enactment, and thus relieve Congress of the necessity for giving time and labor to the consideration of bills framed in the interest of a favored class.

ARTHUR H. TAYLOR.
CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, with a favorable recommendation, after the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "twenty-five."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That amendment is offered in accordance with the suggestion of the gentlemen who framed the minority report. It is entirely in accordance with their views. It seems to me this bill ought to pass. This widow is very old, and the Government will only have to pay her this pension a very short time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this case is very similar to one which we had up here a few Friday nights ago, the only difference being that it is not quite so meritorious as that case was. That was the proposition to pension the widow of Gen. Hitchcock. The committee refused to pass that bill, and I think if they understand this bill, and if they propose to be consistent, they will refuse to pass this also.

This bill, as it is amended, proposes to give to this lady $25 per month. If she was the widow of a general of the very highest rank——

Mr. MEREDITH. Will my friend allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. MEREDITH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he would vote for every pension claim that came up?

Mr. JONES. I do not know what the gentleman understands; I am not responsible for his understanding. But I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this bill as amended proposes to give to this widow $25 per month pension. It is not claimed, it is not asserted that her husband died from wounds received or from any disease that was contracted in the Army; and if her husband, under the general law, had been a general of the very highest rank in the Army, and had died in line of duty, $30 a month would have been the highest pension she could have received.

This widow is not dependent. She has $4,000 worth of property, as shown by this minority report; and she can increase her means by applying for a pension under the Mexican pension act or under the act of June 27, 1890. She can by applying for a pension under either of these acts promptly increase her income by $8 a month in addition to her $4,000 worth of property. If she is as old a lady as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says she is, certainly she does not need any more than that. The report also says that she has no children, and no body in the world dependent upon her; and yet Congress is asked to give this lady $25 a month. It was stated here when the Hitchcock case was up that that was an exceptional case, and that there probably would not be any more such cases here: yet in two weeks another bill of the same character and description is reported here.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the fact that Gen. Logan's widow, Gen. Hancock's widow, and Gen. Blair's widow were given $100 a month is any precedent for giving a pension in a case like this; and I shall object to the granting of any such pension as this.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to withdraw anything on this matter that is in the report of the minority; but at the same time I desire to say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] that this and the case of the widow of Gen. Hitchcock are not parallel in any respect. I opposed the granting of that pension and also joined in a minority report; and did so for the reason that the widow was not, in my judgment, entitled to special legislation, nor was her condition such as would appeal to one's sympathy. She had married the soldier in the last few years of his life, and consequently had never suffered any of the hardships incumbent upon a soldier's wife At his death she was left with quite a large estate. It is therefore, not similar at all with the case before the committee at this time. I said to the gentleman who presented this bill that I was perfectly willing, notwithstanding I had joined in the minority report just read, to concede that $25 was a fair amount to be granted this widow, and it should be given her, taking into consideration the life that she led, one that was filled with hardships, having followed her husband's fortunes from early life until his death at an advanced age. Some recognition is due her, notwithstanding the fact that he did not die from disabilities incurred in the service.

Mr. STALLINGS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. STALLINGS. Can not she get that under the general pension law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. She can only receive $8 per month.

Mr. STALLINGS. What was the rank of her husband?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. He was a lieutenant-colonel, colonel by brevet.

Mr. STALLINGS. Does not the general pension act give her more than $8 a month?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. As a widow she can only receive $8 a month under the act of 1890, and she is further required to show her dependence.

Mr. STALLINGS. Can not she draw $17 a month under the act of 1890?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. STALLINGS. She can not prove that the disability was incurred in the service?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. He died of old age.

Mr. STALLINGS. But she can get $8 a month?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. She can get $8 a month by showing that she is dependent.

Mr. STALLINGS. To add to her income from $4,000 worth of property?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I am informed by the gentleman from Alabama that the deceased was a colonel.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. He was a full colonel.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. My remarks, Mr. Chairman, have been made in justice to myself and in justice to the gentleman who presented the bill, inasmuch as before the matter was called up he came and asked me what my objections were. I referred him to the minority report, and at the same time I informed him that I had no objection to this bill being passed at $25 a month. I said the same about the Hitchcock bill, when it was before the committee; but the gentleman in charge of that bill was not willing that that amount should be taken, and submitted the matter to the House upon the bill as presented by the majority of the committee, and I therefore felt justified in opposing that bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, if this $4,000 worth of property alluded to in the report of the minority were income-producing property, at the most it could only give her about 6 per cent, which would be $240 a year. Now, if she makes an application for pension under the act of 1890, not being able to prove that Gen. Black died from disabilities incurred while in the service, she can only obtain a pension of $8 a month; and it is doubtful whether she could obtain any pension at all, inasmuch as it appears she has some $4,000 worth of property.

Under the Mexican law she might obtain $8 a month, but that is the most she could get. Col. Black, having entered the Military Academy in 1842, must have been about 69 or 70 years of age when he died, and his widow is probably nearly as old as that, and having lived, as the report says, practically all the time in the military service, being accustomed to such a manner of life as an officer in the rank of lieutenant-colonel or colonel would be able to give her, and having endured the hardships of the service with her husband through all those years, nearly half a century, it seems to me it is asking too much to relegate her now in her old age to an income amounting, at the utmost, to $333 a year. I trust that gentlemen will not insist on the objection. I know nothing about the Hitchcock case. I was not here when it was considered, but this case ought to stand on its own merits, and, inasmuch as the majority of the committee have recommended $50 a month, and as the amendment which I have offered meets the approbation of the committee, I think this bill stands before the House with the approval of both the minority and the majority of the committee, and ought to pass, and I do wish that gentlemen would not not insist upon their objections.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I must insist that if this bill passes it will establish a most dangerous precedent. If the widow of every lieutenant-colonel and colonel who has not more than $4,000 worth of property and who is drawing $8 a month pension can come to Congress and get that pension increased to $25 a month, there will be hundreds and thousands of such bills introduced here within the next twelve months.

Mr. MOSES. I think there already are about twenty-five widows of officers drawing a hundred dollars a month.

Mr. JONES. I have never heard of the twenty-five who are drawing that much. I do know, however, that there are several who are drawing a hundred dollars a month.

Mr. MOSES. Why does the gentleman talk, then, about this bill at $25 a month establishing a dangerous precedent?

Mr. JONES. There are several widows who are drawing a hundred dollars a month, but they are the widows of such distinguished officers as Hancock and Blair and Logan, and others that I have mentioned. The others who are drawing such amounts are the widows of men who died in the line of duty or from disease contracted in the line of duty. I have never heard of any case of this sort, and if this bill is passed I maintain that it will create a new departure and will establish a dangerous precedent. I do not claim to be particularly familiar with the pension law. I do not claim to be particularly well acquainted with the bills that have been passed or the precedents that have been established here, but I have made some inquiry on this subject and I understand that the facts are as I have stated. The gentleman from Indiana says this is not a parallel case to that of Mrs. Hitchcock. The only difference seems to be that the wife in this case married the deceased soldier a number of years earlier than the widow in the Hitchcock case did.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman that this lady bore her husband three children. In the Hitchcock case the lady had married him after he had attained the age of 70 years.

Mr. JONES. That may be a very material difference.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. It is.

Mr. JONES. It may be, and there may be other differences. I have not gone into all those domestic matters, but I maintain that in their general features the bills are similar, and if either one of them becomes a law, it will establish a precedent that I want to avoid. As I have already said the pension proposed in this case would be very disproportionate to the pension allowed in other cases. The highest possible pension that could be drawn by this widow under the general law would be $30 a month. But I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this is not merely a question of dollars and cents. If this bill pass and this pension be fixed at $25, it may not be a week before we shall have a case here in which the widow will be in destitute circumstances compared with the beneficiary in this case, and then this bill will be used as the precedent and we shall be asked to increase the amount of the pension in the other case upon the ground of the more urgent needs of the pensioner.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Question, Mr. Chairman.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, fixing the amount at $25 a month, it was agreed to—ayes 34, noes 3.

The amendment of the committee as amended was then agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection this bill will be laid aside——

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, that last vote was upon the adoption of the amendment as amended. I object to the bill being reported favorably.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I make the point of order that the objection comes too late.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon laying the bill as amended aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question being taken, the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STALLINGS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 11.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CUMMINGS). The point of no quorum being made, tellers will be appointed.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask permission to withdraw the bill for the present, or that it be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. JONES. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. MOSES. It is evident there is no quorum here to-night. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside without prejudice. If that can not be agreed to we may as well adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I object.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 6.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I again ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. JONES. I object.

Mr. MOSES. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. As the tellers have reported no quorum, the Clerk will call the roll.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Under the rules, I ask that the roll be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

The roll call being concluded, the committee rose; and, Mr. BROOKSHIRE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CUMMINGS reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, had found itself without a quorum, whereupon he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to be recorded on the Journal.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5866) granting a pension to Julia E. Lock, formerly widow of the late Gen. Daniel McCook, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 31, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. and was called to order by the Speaker, amid general applause.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think the Journal ought to show when the message of the President was received which was laid before the House on yesterday, and in reference to which the ruling of the Chair was made. It ought to show that it was the message transmitting his veto of House bill 4956, directing the coinage of the silver bullion held as seigniorage in the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. That is shown in the RECORD of the previous day.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the Speaker made a ruling upon it yesterday that it was a message of a high public character and that it was necessary to lay it before the House at once. The title ought to be inserted so as to identify the message as one relating to a bill of that character when this question shall arise in the future.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will observe that the message in the first line states:

I return without my approval House bill numbered 4956, entitled "An act directing the coinage of the silver bullion held in the Treasury, and for other purposes."

Mr. SPRINGER. But, if the Speaker please, the Journal will not show that. The RECORD does, of course.

The SPEAKER. The title, of course, can be inserted if the gentleman thinks it is necessary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do; because only that part of the Journal will be referred to in future which relates to the ruling, and the message will not be inserted in the Journal, so that the title ought to be shown.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that insertion will be made, and the Journal, if there be no objection, will be approved.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WEADOCK. By direction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I ask that the report of the California Débris Commission be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Where is the report now?

Mr. WEADOCK. It has been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change of reference will be made as indicated by the gentleman from Michigan.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the RECORD of yesterday, in describing the proceedings of the House on Thursday, contains the following language, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read as indicated.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, is this a personal explanation or a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to say that it was a question of privilege.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD what I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The call of the roll having been resumed,

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will suspend for a moment. The Sergeant-at-Arms will request all gentlemen to be seated. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio will be seated. [Referring to Mr. PAYNE and Mr. OUTHWAITE, who were engaged in earnest conversation in the middle aisle.]

The conversation between the two members continuing.

The SPEAKER repeated: The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio will be seated.

Mr. PAYNE, amid much confusion, was understood to say: I will take my seat when I get ready.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The Speaker should require every member to take his seat.

The SPEAKER. If some gentleman will submit a motion in respect to the contumacy of the gentleman from New York, the Chair will entertain it. The Chair has specifically ordered the gentleman to take his seat; and he states that he will do so when he gets ready. If the House is willing to permit——

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say in justice to myself——

The SPEAKER. If the House is willing to permit the gentleman——

Mr. WISE. I move that the gentleman from New York be brought to the bar of the House for reprimand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] will please put his motion in writing. The Chair would like to ascertain whether the House is willing to permit the gentleman from New York to refuse defiantly to conform to the wish of the House as expressed by the rules of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that this proceeding followed an attempt on my part to make a motion to adjourn, a motion that had been repeatedly recognized by the Chair during the proceedings of that day, and which was also subsequently recognized when made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER]. The Chair decided that the motion I submitted was out of order, and I undertook to appeal from the decision of the Chair. Whereupon the Chair stated that it declined to entertain the appeal. Then I tried to make a point of order—having been appointed one of the tellers on a demand for the yeas and nays. In response to my point of order I was directed by the Chair to take my seat, and I did so at once.

Shortly after that, and when the roll call had commenced and while I was sitting here in one of the front seats, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], sitting in his place, addressed some remarks to this side of the House which attracted my attention. He was looking towards me, and I thought that he was addressing himself to me. Not being able to hear what he said, owing to the confusion in the House, and desiring to do so, I went over into the center aisle, and engaged in a discussion with him in reference to the disorder in the House and also on the question as to who was responsible for the disorder.

I have no objection in stating that conversation in full, and yet it is hardly necessary for the purpose of the correction which I desire to make.

After this conversation, or during this conversation, some gentlemen who sat near the gentleman from Ohio—I think one of them was the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], if I mistake not, and several others—directed me to go back to my own side of the House. I told them that I would go back when I got ready, and they making so much noise that I could hardly hear the further remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], I went nearer to him to get into a position where I could hear what he was saying, because I was interested in his conversation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Did you hear what I said?

Mr. PAYNE. I did. I will repeat it if you desire it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, no; you need not do that.

Mr. PAYNE. And also what I said in reply. I have no secret about it. After that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] ordered me to take my seat. I replied at once to the gentleman from Ohio, not recognizing that, although he was a member of the Committee on Rules, he had any authority to stand himself and order me to take my seat. I replied to him that I would take my seat when I was ready. About that time, or shortly after, one of the deputies of the Sergeant-at-Arms, I suppose, who occupied a seat near the desk usually, came through the aisle and said that the Speaker desired members to be seated.

That was the first time that my attention had been directed to what the Speaker was saying or doing, and I did not know that I had been mentioned so conspicuously in the House by the Speaker or anybody else until that moment, and learning that the Speaker had desired gentlemen to take their seats, I immediately took the first vacant seat, when I was astounded by being charged by the Speaker, in the language contained in the RECORD, that in answer to the demand of the Speaker that I take my seat, I had contumaciously replied that I would take my seat when I was ready.

As the RECORD shows, I appealed to the Speaker that, "in justice to myself"—when I was cut off by the further demand of the Speaker that some gentleman should offer a resolution whereby the House might protect itself and its dignity, and that the Speaker would immediately recognize such resolution.

Seeing that I was condemned by the Speaker without the action of the House, and without the Speaker understanding the facts and the circumstances, of course I smarted under this injustice from the Chair, but still was obliged to take my seat. Then I heard my friend from Virginia [Mr. WISE] get up and move that the gentleman from New York be brought before the bar of the House to be reprimanded by the Speaker. By the way, I have not heard of that resolution since.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think, having stated this much, having stated the facts in this case, I have stated all that is necessary perhaps upon this subject. I ought to add, however, perhaps, in justice to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], that after I had taken my seat, and during the roll call, some gentleman upon the other side came up and said he heard the remark made by the gentleman from Ohio when he told me to take my seat, and the quick reply that I made that I would take my seat when I got ready, and he said the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] added to his remarks: "Take your seat; the Speaker has told you to take your seat." I presume of course it is so, because the gentleman says so, although I did not hear it.

And yet I have wondered why the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] did not take his seat if he heard the remark of the Speaker.

Mr. REED. A Democrat!

Mr. PAYNE. I have wondered why the wrath that came upon my head from the Speaker's chair was not part of it directed toward the gentleman from Ohio. I have wondered why it was that I had not as much right, as a member of this House representing a constituency, to be heard for my rights as the gentleman who sits across the aisle; and I wonder, Mr. Speaker, why he was not compelled to take his seat, and why some one was not appealed to to bring him before the bar of the House to receive the reprimand of the House for his conduct. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any disorderly conduct that I was engaged in that should lead the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to express his wonder that I was not reprimanded. I made no remarks to the Chair. I did not attempt to disturb the orderly proceedings of this House. I did not refuse to take my seat as soon as I had been called or named by the Chair. I did not hear that I had been named by the Chair, and did not know it until I was informed by the RECORD the next morning. I suppose it occurred in the confusiok, that was very great upon the floor at the time. The conversation did occur between the gentleman from New York and myself, to which he has alluded. I did not know for what purpose he came around here to address himself to me and moved up like a great ship of war against this side of the House.

I was simply standing here, observing what was going on, as many other gentlemen were standing up. The colloquy between myself and the gentleman from New York perhaps was so loud as to attract the attention of the Speaker and to justify the Speaker in naming both the gentleman from New York and myself.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, just one word. I think that if the gentleman from New York had seen himself as others saw him he would not have arisen here this morning to impose upon anyone by his mock show of indignation. I heard the Speaker repeatedly order him to take his seat. I heard expressions from his lips which should never be used upon the floor of the House of Representatives; and I will say to the honorable gentleman from New York, that if he will read the reports in the papers of his own State, furnished yesterday, he will see sufficient cause for my action.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman ought to recollect that we are not all so even-tempered as he. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say one word further, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia. It is because this injustice was done to me by the Speaker of the House, in making that remark, and not recognizing me to correct it at once, that the reports of the proceedings went to the newspapers in New York as they did. That is the only reason; and it is because I have labored under this statement made by the Speaker, that I had said that in reply to his command to take my seat, that those remarks have gone into the papers; and that is one of the things that I complain of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in relation to the incident referred to, so far as the Chair is involved in it, there was quite an excited state of feeling upon the floor, and the Chair observing that the gentleman from New York had left the side of the House where he usually sits and had gone to the other side and was engaged in what appeared a heated altercation with the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair's attention was attracted. The Chair apprehended, from the fact that the gentlemen were very near each other, there might be some personal difficulty. Thereupon the Chair ordered both gentlemen, the gentleman from New York, as well as the gentleman from Ohio, to take their seats.

As the RECORD shows, that order was repeated more than once. The Chair then heard the gentleman from New York say he would take his seat when he got ready. The Chair naturally presumed that that remark was in reply to the order of the Chair requiring the gentleman to take his seat, because, of course, no other authority in the House would have the right to order a gentleman to take his seat when in violation of the rules. The Chair understood that to be the condition. Whereupon the Chair stated that the gentleman from New York not only was in disorder, but contumacious, and appealed to the House to know whether it was their wish and desire that such contumacy should pass unnoticed. The other incidents have been already described, and the Chair has no remark to make upon them.

ALEXANDER M. WINSTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney-General submitting for an appropriation the accounts of Alexander M. Winston, for services rendered, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF ARMOR CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, making corrections in a proof of a letter mailed to the House March 26, in reply to resolution of the House calling for information regarding the alleged violations of armor contracts by Carnegie, Phipps & Co.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the joint resolution (H. Res. 146) "providing for the payment of salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act of May 5, 1892, as amended by the act of November 3, 1893;" when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the following House bills with Senate amendments——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My attention was diverted for a moment. I ask the Speaker how it is in order for this business to come up under the operation of this special order. I make the point of order that under the ruling of the present occupant of the chair—the Speaker—no business can come in here under the operation of the special order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to this order?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, I do not understand that there is any discrimination made in regard to any morning hour in this order. It is very exclusive.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentlemen ask that these bills shall not be laid before the House?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I make the point of order that under the ruling of the Speaker it is not in order. That nothing can be in order, under the Speaker's ruling, except the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be equivalent to an objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can not control the manner in which the Chair will deal with the point of order; but I desire the RECORD to show that I make the point of order that under the rulings of the Chair nothing can be considered except the special order.

Mr. SPRINGER and others. Regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Whether the Chair will deal with that in an orderly manner is for him to determine.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the consideration of the contested-election case.

Mr. HATCH. I ask, before that is taken up, to present a request for the excuse of a member. I have received a note from Mr. SIBLEY, who is confined to his bed by sickness, and he asks to be excused for the day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has several other requests on the ground of sickness, which he will, without objection, submit to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ADAMS of Kentucky requests indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. HARTER requests leave of absence, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. SOMERS requests leave of absence, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. BUNDY requests leave of absence, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. RAYNER requests leave of absence, for four days, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. PAGE requests leave of absence, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

The SPEAKER. Without objection these several requests will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, there is a special order at 1 o'clock to-day, providing for eulogies upon the late member from Pennsylvania, Mr. O'Neill. It is now within thirty minutes of that time, and as I know it is the general wish of the House that the obsequies shall take place at that hour, I ask unanimous consent that the House proceed, with general unanimous consent, until 1 o'clock, and that the special order, the contested-election case, be set aside until Monday next.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that on Monday next the case of O'Neill against Joy will be called up and pressed to a final determination under the continuing order of the House.

THE DONATION ACT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "Donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill with Senate amendments, and it is in order to dispose of it at this time.

Mr. McRAE. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in all cases where persons under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands,' approved September 27, 1850, or the various acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, have made proof of settlement on tracts of land in either of the States of Oregon, Washington, or Idaho, and given notice, as required by law, that they claimed such lands as donations, but have failed to execute and file in the proper land offices proof of their continued residence on and cultivation of the lands so settled upon and claimed, so as to entitle them to patents therefor, such claimants shall have, and they are hereby given, until the 1st day of January, 1896, the right to make and file their final proofs and fully establish their rights to donations of lands under the aforesaid act of Congress, and no longer; and all claimants who shall fail to make and file final proof and perfect their claims to lands as donations under the acts aforesaid, before the said 1st day of January, 1896, shall thereafter be held to have abandoned their claims to the lands embraced in their notices: Provided, That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act notices shall be mailed to all such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, where their names and residences are known or by reasonable diligence can be ascertained by the register and receiver of the land office for the district in which the donation claims are situated, and shall be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in at least three newspapers of general circulation published in the land district, requiring such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, and all persons making claim to such donation claims, describing such claims, to appear and make final proof for such claims within the time herein provided, and that in default of such final proof such donation claims will be held to have been abandoned.

"SEC. 2. That all such donation claims held to have been abandoned for failure to make and file final proof as hereinbefore provided shall be restored to the public domain and shall be subject to disposal under the then existing laws providing for the disposition of the public lands: Provided, That where any such donation claims or any part thereof are claimed by descent, devise, judicial sale, grant, or conveyance, in good faith, under the original claimant, and are, at the date of this act and for twenty years prior thereto have been, in the quiet adverse possession of such heir, devisee, grantee, or purchaser, or those under whom they claim, such heirs, devisees, grantees, or purchasers, upon making proof of their claims and adverse possession as aforesaid, shall be entitled to patents for the land so claimed and occupied by them: Provided, further, That where any portion of any such abandoned donation claim shall have been settled upon prior to January 1, 1894, by any person under an erroneous claim of right and has been used as a bona fide residence by such settler where final proof shall not be made by the original claimant, and such settler has exhausted his or her homestead right, such settler may, within ninety days from the 1st day of January, 1896, file with the register of the land office of the district within which the lands are situate their affidavit and the affidavits of at least two disinterested witnesses establishing the facts of their bona fide settlement, occupancy, and improvement of said lands, and pay to the receiver of the proper land office $1.25 per acre for the land so settled upon, occupied, and improved, not exceeding 160 acres, and shall thereupon receive patent therefor.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the regulations governing contests in land cases, of his right to allow or direct hearings to be instituted to show that a donation claimant has abandoned the lands described in his notice, or prevent the Commissioner, when it is proven that such a claim is invalid or abandoned, from canceling the same upon the official records and thereafter disposing of the lands as a part of the public domain: Provided, That where hearings are allowed contestants shall pay the expenses incident thereto in the same manner that costs are paid in other contested land entries; and this act shall not be construed to affect any case now pending before the Land Department in which final proof has been furnished.

SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall issue the necessary rules and regulations to give full force and effect to the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and agree to a conference.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I wish to ask a question for information. The Senate seem to have struck out the House bill entire and to have substituted a new bill.

Mr. McRAE. That is exactly what they have done. It is not at all unusual for the Senate to make amendments of this kind.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the new bill in the same general line as the House bill?

Mr. McRAE. It is.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there any change in the phraseology of the House bill?

Mr. McRAE. There is, but I can not tell you just what the change is. So far as I am personally concerned, if the mover of the bill desires to have it go to the committee where we can consider the amendment, I have no objection, but I thought this was the most expeditious way of disposing of the matter; and besides, the Senate has asked for a conference upon the amendment. I am not prepared to vote for the amendment nor to explain the difference between it and the House bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Your motion is to nonconcur?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as this is an entirely new bill and as it affects my State, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. McRAE] whether, if the bill goes to a conference, members representing the States affected by the bill will have an opportunity to be heard; because, if not, I think the bill ought to go back to the Committee on Public Lands, where we can be heard.

Mr. McRAE. I can not of course make any agreement about that. This is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], and it is a matter that I know very little about, except from the investigation that we gave it when it was before the committee. If the gentleman from Washington wants to have the bill go to committee again, let him make such a motion. I have made the motion to nonconcur and agree to a conference simply because I thought that was a respectful way to treat the request of the Senate and the only practical way of reconciling the differences between the two Houses.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, let it be that way.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that after the House has fully considered a bill and sent it to the Senate, this practice of the Senate substituting an entirely new bill and sending it back here, and then having it go to a conference committee where it will not be open to amendment, seems to be not exactly just to the House.

Mr. McRAE. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that personally I have no objection to this bill going back to the committee. I do not care personally what is done with it. I have moved to nonconcur and agree to a conference, because that seems to me the most respectful way to treat the Senate, and is what ought to be done if we want to legislate upon this subject.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the changes in the phraseology of the bill are very slight and are simply intended to make it more lawyer-like, and perhaps it had better be disposed of as proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DINGLEY. Here is an entirely new bill of eight or ten pages, and the House has no information as to the effect of the changes.

The SPEAKER. Unless there be objection this bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McRAE. I do not agree to that, Mr. Speaker, and have made what I think is the proper motion; but if, when the Senate have asked for a conference, the House chooses to treat the request in that way, that is for the House to say. This is a bill that deals with a law applicable only in the State of Oregon.

Mr. DINGLEY. If there are no material changes from the House bill, I do not object to the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman says that the bill deals entirely with the State of Oregon, but it names specifically Washington, Oregon, and Idaho.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill does.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes, this bill does; and I think my State has some slight interest in it.

Mr. McRAE. My understanding was that the old "donation act" applied only to Oregon.

Mr. PICKLER. It applies to those three States.

Mr. McRAE. If it applies to Washington and Idaho, my statement was incorrect, and I ask to correct it.

The motion of Mr. McRAE to nonconcur and agree to a conference was adopted.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. McRAE, Mr. HARE, and Mr. LACEY.

TEXARKANA AND FORT SMITH RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 1919) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Caddo Lake, at or near Morningsport, La., and Cross Bayou, near Shreveport, La.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, in line 21, strike out the words "as nearly as practicable."

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. This amendment of the Senate is merely verbal. I move that it be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were read twice and referred as stated:

A bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 341) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PUNISHMENT OF BARRATRY.

Mr. EVERETT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill No. 4606, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4606) to amend sections 5365 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 5365 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5365. Every person who, on the high seas, willfully and corruptly casts away or otherwise destroys any vessel of which he is owner, in whole or in part, with intent to prejudice any person that may underwrite any policy of insurance thereon, or any merchant that may have goods thereon, or any other owner of such vessel, shall be punished by imprisonment for life, or for any term of years."

SEC. 2. That section 5366 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 5366. Every person, not being an owner, who, on the high seas, willfully and corruptly casts away or otherwise destroys any vessel to which he belongs, being the property of any citizen, shall be punished by imprisonment for life, or for any term of years."

Mr. EVERETT. I ask consent to make a statement.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to object until I have heard the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary has unanimously reported this bill with a recommendation that it pass. It was introduced by me at the instance of the marine insurers of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. This crime of wilfully casting vessels away—commonly called the crime of barratry—is under existing statutes punishable with death; and marine insurers represent to me that because of this penalty, juries steadily refuse to convict. Therefore gentlemen interested in marine insurance ask that the Revised Statutes be amended so that the penalty for this crime may be imprisonment for life, or for a term of years.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I understand that the only change proposed in the law is that this crime of barratry shall be punishable by imprisonment for life, instead of the death penalty.

Mr. EVERETT. That it shall be punishable by imprisonment for life, or for a term of years.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVERETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HALL OF RECORDS.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment in the form of a substitute the bill (S. 22) making appropriation for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompaning report, ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CATCHINGS, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported a bill (H. R. 6518) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. CHILDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 5649) providing an additional district judge in the northern district of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAW BOOKS FOR CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6396) to provide for purchase of law books for use of the circuit courts of appeals of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that bills reported at Friday night sessions of the House, and which are now on the Private Calendar as unfinished business, may be considered as having the previous question ordered upon them to the engrossment, third reading, and passage, with the right of fifteen minutes' debate on each side, subject, however, to all existing orders.

The SPEAKER having restated the request of Mr. MARTIN—

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I desire to ask whether this request includes the bill acted on favorably last night by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It does not, for the reason that, as we did not have a quorum when the Committee of the Whole rose, no bill acted on in the committee was reported to the House.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. But when that bill was laid aside for favorable report there was a quorum, so far as the record shows.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. My proposition does not include that bill, because it is still in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS (to Mr. SMITH of Illinois). Your bill can be taken care of later.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I should be very glad if my bill which was acted on favorably last night could be included in this motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN]?

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this request should be granted and the previous question ordered on these bills they would then become the regular order?

The SPEAKER. And would come up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BAILEY. So that upon a call for the regular order the consideration of these bills would supersede all other business.

The SPEAKER. With the exception of existing orders, which the gentleman from Indiana reserves from the terms of his request.

Mr. BAILEY. In view of that fact I must object.

MARGARET ENGLISH.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1686) "granting a pension to Margaret English."

This bill was objected to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS], but he is willing now to have it considered.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Margaret English, widow of William English, late of Company A, Ninety-fifth New York Infantry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman from New York if there is a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. TRACEY. There is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will not ask for the reading of the report, but ask that it be inserted in the RECORD to show the evidence sustaining the bill.

Mr. TRACEY. I hope that will be done.

The report (by Mr. HAINES) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1686) granting a pension to Margaret English, submit the following report:

This case was favorably reported by the committee near the close of the Fifty-second Congress, but failed of action in the House from want of time. The facts are as follows:

The petitioner is the widow of William English, alias William Quinn, to whom she was married September 2, 1851. This soldier, as is shown in a satisfactory manner, served under the name of Quinn in Company A, Ninety-fifth New York Volunteers, from November 23, 1861, until August 24, 1863, when he died of mania a potu (delirium tremens), as shown by the records of the hospital at Philadelphia.

The records of the War Department further show that he was present from enrollment (November, 1861) to August 31, 1862; properly accounted for until June 30, 1863; admitted to hospital at Philadelphia July 10, 1863, because of gunshot wound of hand received at Gettysburg July 2, 1863.

The official report of the death of the soldier also shows that the soldier was reported as a deserter (presumably from the hospital) from July 25 to August 19, 1863, having been on a spree. August 21 he first showed symptoms of delirium and jumped twice out of a window (15 feet), probably causing fracture of the internal table or base of the brain.

The evidence shows that the petitioner still remains his widow, and that she has no property except $500 equity in a dwelling, from which she has an income of $7 per month, and that she lives with a daughter and contributes by her own labor to her support.

This widow can not be pensioned under the general law, because the soldier's death did not occur in line of duty; she can not be pensioned under act June 27, 1890, because he was never discharged, although it is true that if he had died of the same disease one day after being honorably discharged his widow would be pensionable under that act.

Under date of July 13, 1893, Charles F. Poinsel and William Carmody, of Cohoes, N. Y., testify that the claimant has not remarried since the soldier's death, and that she has no income except from her own manual labor, and $60 from a small tenement.

This seems to be such a case as special acts of Congress are designed to relieve, and your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out all after the word "pension," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved June 27, 1890," and also by inserting the words "alias William Quinn" after the name William English in line 5.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TRACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will call the committees for reports.

There was no objection.

FOG SIGNAL, SUPERIOR, WIS.

Mr. BRICKNER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 6234) for the establishment of a fog signal at Superior pier-head light station, Superior, Wis.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

APPRAISEMENT OF IMPROVEMENTS, CHEROKEE NATION.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6013) making an appropriation to complete the appraisement of improvements of intruders in the Cherokee Nation.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SAYERS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to address a question to the gentleman who asks this consent. Has this bill ever been reported by a committee?

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I object.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE O'NEILL OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, March 31, beginning at 1 o'clock p. m., be set apart for eulogies to the late Hon. Charles O'Neill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOLVERTON in the chair). The Clerk will now report the pending resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of the Hon. Charles O'Neill, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania;

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate;

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased; and,

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned—

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask that the resolutions which I hold in my hand be printed with the proceedings of this occasion as an expression of the esteem and friendship with which the late Charles O'Neill, of Pennsylvania, was regarded by his associates of the Committee of Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which he was an honored member.

The announcement of his death was received by us with profound sorrow, and we wish to place upon record this imperfect estimate of his life and character.

Mr. O'Neill came to Washington to attend the first session of this Congress, which began under the proclamation of the President on the 7th day of August, 1893. One of his last official acts in the House of Representatives was the administration of the prescribed oath to its Speaker. It was then apparent that his strength and vital energies were being gradually destroyed by disease. The light had departed from the eyes, the step was no longer quick and elastic. Being in the waning age of life, his friends saw that he could not continue long in the discharge of his duties.

He was soon compelled by sickness to return to his home in Philadelphia, and there died on the 25th day of November, 1893. The end came suddenly and it seemed to be peaceful and almost painless. In the morning of his last day he rose from his couch, and having dressed himself passed down the stairs to his accustomed place at the breakfast table. The day was passed in reading and social intercourse with friends. No one dreamed that before its close the final stroke would fall. Only two hours before the hand of death was laid upon him he was talking of his early return to the capital and the work there before him. In the family circle the immediate future with its stirring scenes and sharp conflicts was the subject of conversation. While thus engaged he complained to his niece and brother of a sudden tightness of the chest and difficulty of breathing. This caused him to go to his room and retire to his bed. The last words he spoke were "I will sleep," and then laying himself back upon the pillow fell into eternal rest. There was only a momentary struggle, and then "that change which never changes."

Having met him here for the first time and known him only as a Representative, I must leave to others the task of relating the story of his life. Being the oldest in years and service, he was known as the father of the House. If he had lived to the end of this Congress the duration of his service would have been measured by the term of thirty years. Few men have held so long the high and responsible position of Representative, and in this fact we have the best proof that he was worthy of the distinguished honor.

Such instances of repeated popular approval happen only when there is the solid foundation of merit and worth. The best results are not always produced by those who possess the greatest intellectual power. To men of plodding habits we are often indebted for the most valuable achievements. The most solid benefits are secured by the Representative for his people by regular and methodical work. Mr. O'Neill was not a strong debater, nor was he a man of uncommon vigor of intellect, but was laborious, systematic, and conscientious in the performance of all his duties.

In the possession of these qualities we find his chief strength. He was indefatigable in efforts to promote the prosperity of his constituents, and they showed in a marked degree their appreciation of his services. Such success as he won comes only to those who deserve it.

It has been told of him that he never missed a day from the sessions of the House during all the years he remained here, until compelled by his last illness to return to his home for medical treatment. So much can be spoken in praise of but few of his colleagues. It was his habit not to postpone the work of to-day for performance to-morrow. Life is duty, and every man should consecrate himself to its fulfillment. From his conviction of it Mr. O'Neill derived his rule of action.

He was a faithful Representative and devoted to the interests of his people. He was quick to enter the arena of debate when Philadelphia or Pennsylvania required a champion.

He was a man of warm and generous impulses, of such gentle and kindly disposition as led him to do things agreeable to others. While at times warm and earnest in the expression of convictions, he was always fair and courteous. He caused no wounds by bitter reproaches or harsh words, but was regarded by all with warm friendship and will long be held in affectionate remembrance.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

"Your committee appointed at the meeting held December 8, 1893, to prepare a suitable memorial in honor of the memory of the late Charles O Neill, of Pennsylvania, late a member of the Committee of Interstate and Foreign Commerce, respectfully report the following:

"We, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress, have heard with deep regret the announcement of the death of our associate, Hon. Charles O'Neill, of Pennsylvania.

The loss of our oldest member, both in service and in age, would in itself call for respectful action on the part of this committee.

"But in the case of Charles O'Neill, in addition to his crown of years and length of service, his character, his abilities, his devotion to his duties on the committee have earned for near a score of years the respect of his associates, while his courtesy, his kindness of manner and of heart have inspired them always with personal regard and affection.

"Pursuant, therefore, to action of this committee heretofore taken, it is hereby

"Resolved, That this memorial be entered on the minutes as a mark of enduring respect to the memory of a courteous associate, a distinguished and laborious Representative, and an upright and God-fearing gentleman, whose death has been a lasting loss to his fellow-members in this committee and the House, to his constituents whom he served justly and faithfully, and to his country.

"And further resolved, That this memorial and resolutions be reported from this committee by its chairman to the House on the day set apart by special order for eulogies on Hon. Charles O'Neill, in order that they may form a part of the permanent record of the proceedings on that occasion."

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House of Representatives, at the beginning of the Fifty-second Congress, I was honored by being placed upon the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The first day that I entered that committee I met a gentleman who had been well known to me by name and reputation for many years. He was the senior member of the minority of that committee, and well as I had known his reputation I still was struck by the respect and personal regard that all the members who had known him before showed Charles O'Neill. I found that he, himself, had been made a member of that committee upon his first entrance into Congress, at the beginning of the Thirty-eighth Congress, in December, 1863. I found that he had served on that Committee on Commerce down to the end of the Forty-first Congress without intermission, and with distinguished usefulness to his constituency and to the work of the committee.

On his re-entering the Forty-third Congress, the Republican party, to which he from its birth belonged, being then in the majority, he was not put on this committee again, but on a committee at that time of much greater importance and much greater labor, that on Appropriations, on which he served through the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses. At the assembling of the Forty-sixth Congress, I learned, as the party now in majority in the House was at that time in control of its organization, he was again the senior member of the minority upon his old Committee on Commerce. The Forty-seventh Congress once more showing Republican control, Mr. O'Neill was again on Appropriations, but when the Forty-eighth Congress met, and from that time down to the date of his death he became and remained the senior member of the minority on his old committee.

To a young member, looking up almost with veneration to men who had served their people and the country faithfully and well for such a length of time, it seemed a thing to be very proud of to look back upon such a career as Charles O'Neill's. It was not long before I, myself, came to know him, and I looked upon him with the same feeling of entire respect, perfect confidence, and affection, if I may use the word, with which those who had known him longer always spoke of him. Of his usefulness to his State and his constituency, his State and his city can best speak through their Representatives; of his distinguished and devoted services on the floor of the House a hundred men can speak with more experience and information than myself.

But, Mr. Speaker, upon the Committee on Commerce there are but two of us, fellow-members of the minority with Mr. O'Neill, left over from the Fifty-second Congress, and one of these two is necessarily absent to-day. It is on this account and under this excuse that I feel justified in taking part of the time allotted by the House for remarks in remembrance and in respect of our deceased colleague. If there was anything that his fellow-members on the committee knew it was that Mr. O'Neill looked faithfully and well after the interests of everything and everyone, however remotely connected with the constituency that sent him here. He was, in the fullest sense of the word, a faithful representative of his people. Just to all men, trampling on no man's rights, interfering with no other man's prerogatives, he was all the time looking out for the interests of his people and his home.

In national matters he was not careless nor narrow-minded. In affairs that belonged to the business and commerce of the whole country he was not unmindful nor provincial, but when anything came near touching for good or for ill the welfare of the city that he loved so well, he was preëminently on the alert; then his mind seemed to quicken, his intelligence to brighten, he became aggressive, fearless, persuasive, emphatic, whatever the occasion seemed to require. He was a man of entire integrity of character, great experience in the routine business of committees, knowing well when to let a matter alone which did not necessarily demand his attention or his time, but never allowing anything to pass which it was his business to inquire into, to watch over, to oppose, or to press.

But with all this, Mr. Speaker, what endeared him to the men he was thrown with in almost daily work upon our committee was his never-failing courtesy and geniality of manner, his ready smile, his instant willingness to apologize for any offense given without intention (and he never gave offense otherwise), and the kindly spirit with which he accepted contradiction, argument, and dissent. He had that rarest of mental and physical attributes, a sunny temper. I think for a man of his age he was the most cheerful man and the most cheerful company that I have seen for many years. His conscience seemed at rest at all times with himself, with his fellow-men, and with his Maker. He was a man of kind heart. He was a man of deep religious conviction, and while his kindness of heart never showed itself in loose or inconsiderate way, his religious convictions, so far as I could learn, never degenerated into bigotry, bitterness, or narrowness.

The serene and cheerful spirit that he had was so strongly characteristic, and I might say absolutely the strongest characteristic of his mind, that grief or sorrow in the ordinary sense of the words, even in those very close to him, are not the feelings or the words that are naturally called to mind or which fitly describe our loss. It is not tears, it is not mourning that are suggested by his departure, but rather a confident hope and expectation of seeing again that cheerful smile, that kindly manner, that serene, sunny, and peaceful old age.

Without gloom, without solemn ceremony, without conventional melancholy of manner or of words, I say, "Good bye, dear old Charlie O'Neill."

Say not "Good night,"
But in some brighter clime
Bid me "Good morning."

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, it is a proverb among the Arabs that death is a camel that kneels at every man's door. He has knelt with sad and sorrowful frequency at the doors of the Pennsylvania delegation on this floor in the last five years; and we are again called to pay our respect to the memory of another distinguished Pennsylvanian, whose period of service in this House has established his title to the distinction of being the father of the House.

I therefore crave a brief indulgence to mingle my voice with the swelling anthem of affectionate and eloquent eulogy on this occasion, because I respected and honored our departed friend while living, and dead I feel a sincere and reverential regard for his memory.

The duration of his life, the usefulness of his labors, the benevolence of his feelings, the elevation of his sentiments, and the nobility of his character united to form an attractive and interesting personality and a career instructive and admirable in a high degree.

Those who wrought with him and observed him through the long period of years in which he served an appreciative and confiding constituency upon this floor are commissioned to speak of those excellencies of character which found their illustration in his extended and distinguished career in the service of his country, a service which he decorated and adorned with the finest fidelity and most disinterested devotion to every detail of duty.

My own acquaintance with him and observation of his career prompts me to say that Mr. O'Neill was in some respects an ideal Representative. He made no pretension to greatness. He never masqueraded as a leader or a master. He knew that in the lottery of faculties all men could not draw first prizes; that all members of Congress could not be front-rank statesmen—that in the gladiatorial contests of statesmanship a great majority of this body can only be helpers to the principal actors in the drama. He had no pride that made him ashamed to take a second place. He believed in the adage "the tools to those who can best use them; the floor to those who possess the highest aptitude for intellectual encounter in the arena of debate." Still he did not abstain from participating in discussion when impelled by a sense of duty to take part.

A local measure affecting his constituents, or in which the city of Philadelphia was concerned, awakened in him an enthusiasm of loyalty which overcame his reluctance and brought him to his feet. When he took the floor, he spoke with a clearness, force, and fervor which rarely failed to awaken interest in his views. But he never wasted the public time in needless words, and always ceased speaking when done—an example which statesmen of high and low degree might imitate with profit to their own and their country's fame.

To see others toiling and achieving in fields of action above his range never grieved him. He was content to serve where he could be most serviceable. If he was employed in an honorable, necessary, and useful task—though humble—though but cutting a face in a cherry stone, in the true spirit of patriotic service and dutiful endeavor, it did not trouble him that another was carving a colossus out of a rock. His kindly soul never knew the taint of jealousy or envy.

This quality helped him to usefulness within the limits which he prescribed for his exertions and furnished an example quite worthy of imitation.

A most notable characteristic of Mr. O'Neill was his kindly and sympathetic nature. His graces of mind and heart, amiability of character, sweetness of disposition, gentleness of manner, and fine courtesy made conquest of universal esteem and placed him high in the hearts of all who knew him.

He had a punctilious delicacy for the feelings of others, upon which he never inflicted an intentional wound. His heart was full of the healing balm of sympathy. In his breast was a perennial spring of the milk of human kindness, and he found delight in helping and serving others.

His devotion to his constituents was a conspicuous feature of of his public life. He was to them a father. It is said that he knew most of them personally. He took them into his capacious affections, watched their interests, guarded their rights, anticipated their wants, and served them in all needful ways with a fidelity as beautiful as his industry was tireless. The jocular observation of some one that he answered every letter from a constituent within twenty-four hours and then went home to see if the answer had arrived safely, was a hyperbolic expression of the prevailing sense and universal appreciation of the energy and promptitude with which he performed the duties of his representative office. That his constituents appreciated him, loved him, and reciprocated his affection and devotion by keeping him in Congress for more than a quarter of a century is not surprising. They knew his diligence in their service; they knew that the command of duty was to him a "thus saith the Lord;" that no draft made upon him in any matter whose claim he recognized would ever go to protest. So they trusted him, and were never betrayed; confided in him and found him worthy; continued him in their service and were always well served.

The lesson such a career teaches appeals to all of us; that the only way for a Representative to securely hold the confidence and affection of his constituents is in the demonstration of his worthiness by integrity, fidelity, industry, and efficiency in their service.

Our brother reached and passed the bounds of man's appointed years. The mysterious clock which the angel of life wound up to run three-score years and ten then closed the case and gave the key to the angel of the resurrection, as beautifully suggested by Dr. Holmes, ran a little beyond the appointed time. As the clock at his bedside struck the hour for the November sun to fling his goodnight kisses of crimson upon the pale cheek of the expiring day and sink to rest, his sun went down in the evening glories of his well-spent day to rise in the radiant light of a new morn.

How suddenly death came. They heard the rustle and saw the shadow of his wings, and it was over. He said to his attendant and affectionate niece, "I think I will sleep." In a moment he slept the dreamless slumber of the dead. In the words of another, "As the shadows steal at evening over the earth, softly closing the flowers and touching them to sleep, silently and lovingly in the promise of a bright waking," so he fell asleep. Nature, with no rudeness in her touch, but softly and gently disengaged the vital cord and he passed serenely into rest on the other shore of that mysterious sea "that never yet has borne on any wave the image of a homeward sail."

He is gone, but he left behind him for our instruction the lesson of his beautiful life of sympathy and service. To contemplate it and emulate it is the only way to make it profitable to us. Death comes like a faithful schoolmaster with the open book of a closed life and assigns the lesson which we must study or lose its teaching. I borrow the lines of a poet to express what I desire to accentuate as the "golden text" in the lesson of this dutiful and beautiful life:

The bravest lives are those to duty wed,
Whose deeds, both great and small,
Are close-knit strands of an unbroken thread
Where love ennobles all.

The world may sound no trumpets, ring no bells,
The book of life the shining record tells.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, there is to my mind always a tinge of sadness about the "last time," and when I hear that one of our members is dead, I frequently turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and see what was his last utterance on this floor.

And though it may only be a motion to adjourn or a call for division, there is a tinge of sadness about it. It is sad to think of the last day of school in our childhood, the last time you saw a friend, the last day of a Legislature, of a Congress, when we break up never all to meet again.

The last appearance of Mr. O'Neill in this Hall occurred only a short time before his death, and the last words uttered by him, which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are found on page 302:

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker. I move to strike out the proviso.

He had been for twenty-eight years a member of this House; these Halls had echoed with his voice, participating in the debates in all those years. These were his last uttered words in debate on this floor.

On page 1003, August 28, is recorded his last vote, where he responded "aye" in favor of the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, never to vote again.

His last speech was delivered August 14, on the question of mileage. His last question in debate was addressed to Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana, "I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question."

His last petition was filed October 23, and was a resolution of the Union League of Pennsylvania.

Did you ever think what it was that gave the pathos to that little couplet, which you used to recite when a boy at school, about—

The last rose of summer
Left blooming alone,
All her lovely companions
Are faded and gone.
* * * * *
I'll not leave thee, thou lone one,
To pine on the stem,
Since the lovely are sleeping,
Go sleep thou with them.

It is the fact that it is the last rose of summer that gives its pathos to this little couplet.

Our friend, in whose honor we have met, remained on duty here almost to the last. He died at the post of duty. You remember when the surgeons gathered around Mr. Garfield in yonder depot when he was stricken down by the vilest assassin that ever cursed the earth, you remember he asked the doctor if the wound was mortal? And the surgeon replied, "We fear the worst," and Mr. Garfield replied, "Doctor, I am not afraid to die." Why not? Because he was at the post of duty. Are you and I at the post of duty?

One of my illustrious and distinguished predecessors in this House, who represented the same district which I have the honor to represent, for sixteen years, John Quincy Adams, the old man eloquent, died in yonder hall.

He died, like our brother, at the post of duty. His last words were, "This is the last of earth; I am content."

Some of the oldest people who live in New England will tell you that in their boyhood they heard their parents tell about a dark day. It occurred on the 19th day of May, in the year 1780. It began to grow dark at 10 o'clock in the morning. At noon it was so dark that people could not see to read outdoors.

Our fathers had very few books besides the Bible. In that book they read that God had appointed a day in which he would judge the world, and in that day "the sun should be darkened." Very many of the good people of New England thought the day of judgment was at hand.

Indeed the strange prenomenon has never been explained. The only explanation ever offered was that the smoke from burning forest fires in the West met a dense fog from the east. Anyhow, on the 19th day of May, in the year 1780, the people in New England could not see to read outdoors at noon time.

This dark day overtook the Connecticut House of Assembly in session and amidst a profound stillness and silence and gloom a member arose in his place and said, "Mr. President, it is evident, sir, that a strange and wonderful providence of God is upon us, by which we can not see to read at noon time. It may be, sir, that the day of judgment is at hand. In view of this strange providence, I move you, sir, that the Connecticut House of Assembly do here and now adjourn."

There was a member of the House who was a Quaker, and whose name was Abraham Davenport, and he arose in his place and said, "Mr. President, I am opposed to the motion to adjourn, I am utterly unable to explain the darkness; it may be as my brother has said, that the day of judgment is at hand, but as I know of no better place to be overtaken by death and the judgment than at the post of duty, I move you, sir, that the candles be brought in and the act be read again;" and they were and the business of the House went on. Are you and I at the post of duty in the larger sense of those words? Then, like John Quincy Adams, James Abram Garfield, like Abraham Davenport, like our brother O'Neill, who has left us, we may not fear death or the judgment, and it will be well with us in time, and well with us in eternity.

Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to know quite intimately Charles O'Neill. When I became a member of the Fifty-first Congress, the kindly, benevolent face of this good man at once attracted me, and my later intercourse with him, as we went out and came in together during the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, confirmed my first impression of Mr. O'Neill.

It is recorded in the book that "Darius, king of Medes and Persians, after the fall of Babylon, thought to set Daniel over the whole realm, and made him chief of the three presidents, who should have charge of the affairs of the kingdom, because an excellent spirit was in him."

A similar reason might have been assigned for the honors that were paid Charles O'Neill by the great empire State of Pennsylvania during his long and eventful life, and during his long service, extending over a generation, on the floor of the National House of Representatives.

Mr. O'Neill was a modest, unassuming, honest, able servant of Pennsylvania and the people who honored him. In his death the nation has lost a statesman, the people have lost a champion, philanthropy, virtue, and religion have lost a consistent and earnest supporter, and I have lost a friend.

We shall all miss his pleasant smile and his cheery good morning. We shall see him no more. Farewell Charles O'Neill, a long, last farewell.

Mr. O'Neill was a religious man. I had several conversations with him upon matters pertaining to concerns of the soul. He made no boast or exhibition of his religion, and was rather inclined to distrust his own acceptance and preparation for the great hereafter; but I am fully persuaded that he was a thoroughly good man, that he leaned fully on the "Crucified One," and that he has now gone to see the "King in his beauty," and has exchanged his home on earth for a brighter and a better home in Heaven.

What is the lesson of the life and public services of Charles O'Neill, of Pennsylvania? First, it ought to be an inspiration to every American youth; his honesty, industry, patriotism, earnestness, and ability in his chosen calling proves to the youth of our land that these qualities carry in their hand the sure prestige of victory and success.

The honors showered upon this man by the great State of Pennsylvania, his long and eventful life, are but a demonstration of the fact that in this favored land of ours, "There is no royal road to learning," and "Honor and shame from no condition rise."

The youth of our land want to be impressed with the importance of laying the foundation of their character well, and that honesty, virtue, and religion are the only enduring foundations of character.

It has been said that character is a creature of slow growth; it buds in infancy, blossoms in childhood and has its fruitage in later years. I have seen young men who had a fear that they would not be appreciated, but my observation is that in the long run people pass for about what they are. Calumny or aspersion may for a time shadow a life, but in the long run we each and every one of us are sized up about right.

"And when the fitful fever is ended and the foolish wrangle of the market and forum is closed, and grass heals over the scar which our descent into the bosom of the earth made, and the carpet of the infant becomes the blanket of the dead," then, if not till then, justice will be done us, and with an iron pen a record will be made that is just and true.

I know little of the family life and home life of our dead brother, but I presume he had the usual allotment of joys and sorrows, of cloud and sunshine, of thorns and roses in his path.

I ran across a little piece the other day with the title "What is your life?"

A little crib beside the bed,
A little face above the spread,
A little shoe upon the floor,
A little frock behind the door,
A little lad with dark brown hair,
A little blue-eyed face and fair,
A little lane that leads to school,
A little pencil, slate, and rule,
A little winsome, blithsome maid,
A little hand within his laid—

That is where he got married—

A little family gath'ring round
A little turf-heaped, tear-dewed mound—

That is where the child died—

A little cottage and acres four,
A little old-time fashioned store,
A little added to his soil,
A little rest from hardest toil,
A little silver in his hair,
A little stool and easy chair,
A little night of earth-lit gloom,
A little cortége to the tomb—

That is what life is.

And I thought when I read those verses, "Oh, how sad they were without the light of immortality to shine upon them."

I attended church in St. Paul's Episcopal Church in London once; there were 15,000 people in the church. Canon Stubbs recited the Episcopal prayer, which says: "Oh, Lord, have mercy upon any that are afflicted in any manner, in body, in mind, or estate."

And I said to myself, is there a single person in this vast concourse that does not need to say that prayer; certain, sure, I was one there that needed to say it.

And do you know, the longer I live and the more I mingle with my fellows, the more I think that if this world is all there is to it, the game for the average man and woman is not worth playing, and in this sad circumstance I find an argument in favor of the immortality of the soul, and an argument in favor of the gospel, that points to a place and a tribunal where the inequalities and injustices of this world are made right.

Plato, a heathen philosopher, thanked God for three things: First, that he was born a rational soul; second, that he was born a Greek; third, that he lived in the days of Socrates. If this poor benighted philosopher, who knew nothing of God, of heaven, of Jesus, and of eternal life, had that for which to thank God, surely what have we, who stand in this apex of the nineteenth century, and who by a knowledge of the gospel, and who by repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ may look away from the disappointments and sorrows and vexations of this mortal life to that city which John saw in the island of Patmos, whose streets are gold, whose gates are pearl, whose walls are sapphire; a city that infinitely outrivals in its beauty and magnificence the almost fabled White City that recently sat on the shore of Lake Michigan; a city that has no need of the sun, and where there is no sickness, sorrow, or crying!

To that beautiful city our brother O'Neill has gone, and for aught I know looks down on us here and now, as we have assembled to do him honor.

The great dramatist has said "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players," of which Washington life, with its ever-changing panorama, is a fit illustration. A gentleman called my attention to the worn condition of one of the thresholds of solid stone of one of the gates leading to the White House from Pennsylvania avenue. Where are the feet that wore that stone? For a hundred years Presidents, Cabinet officers, Senators, members of Congress, statesmen, and thousands of citizens have passed over it.

Of this great army, most of them have long since played their part in the drama of life. With them life's fitful fever is o'er, and they have left the shores of time for that "bourne from whence no traveler returns."

They have had their little day of fame, of honor, of pleasure, and have joined the silent majority. Across this threshold passed in and out John Adams, the second President of the United States; followed later by that proud-spirited military chieftain Gen. Andrew Jackson, Gen. William Henry Harrison, Gen. Zachary Taylor.

Over that threshold, in and out, went our brother O'Neill for more than a quarter of a century; in the terrible days of the war went Abraham Lincoln. Over it, arm in arm with Secretary Blaine, went the lamented Garfield to his death by the hand of the vilest assassin who ever cursed the earth. It clanked with the arms of the British soldiers who sacked the capital in the war of 1812.

Over it have passed untold thousands of visitors. Oh, what a story of the drama of life could that threshold tell! Abraham Lincoln's favorite poem, which he loved to repeat was, "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" This city is less than one hundred years old, but it has witnessed the triumphs of peace, the pomp and circumstance of war, has been sacked by a foreign enemy, and was the scene of the final review of our returning victorious armies from the greatest war of all history.

In Westminster Abbey in London I saw a cenotaph to Gray, the author of "An elegy in a country churchyard," and I thought how he himself, like all the great men who have ever lived in this city and are a part of our history, was but an illustration of his immortal words, "The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

When we have the sad reflection that all worldly honor and fame, pleasure and riches are transitory and fleeting; when we reflect how fleeting are the great events in history, and how transient are the lives of individuals and sometimes of nations, it is refreshing to turn away to something that is enduring and abiding; to think of honors that will never grow dim, and of joys that will never end, so well expressed in the grand old hymn:

Great God, how infinite art Thou,
What worthless worms are we,
Let the whole race of creatures bow,
And pay their praise to Thee.

Thy throne eternal ages stood,
Ere seas or stars were made,
Thou art the ever living God,
Were all the nations dead.

What is the lesson that we should learn from what I have here recited? We should learn to—

So live, that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

The longer I live and the more I mingle with my fellows, the more I am impressed with the fact that vastly greater and more enduring than the pleasures of wealth, of military or civil honor, of which you are so often reminded here, is the honor and satisfaction that comes to those, no matter what their station in life, who exemplify in their walk and conversation the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, and who have treasure laid up that will abide when these canvas paintings in Washington have faded, when the marble of this beautiful city has crumbled, and when its granite has turned to dust.

The truly great are those who—

> Departing, leave behind them, footprints on the sands of Time,
> Footprints that perchance another,
> Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
> A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
> Seeing, may take heart again.

For Daniel said, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

So, once more I say farewell, Charles O'Neill, we shall feel the warm grasp of your hand no more, we shall hear your cheery, pleasant voice no more. It is still and hushed in death. We shall look up into your kindly, benevolent face no more. Farewell, Charles O'Neill. A long and last and sad farewell.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I had overlooked the fact that this day was set apart for paying tribute to the memory of my late friend Charles O'Neill. I am not in that condition, fortunately for the rest of the House, that I can occupy your time long; but I can not allow this occasion to pass without saying something of my old friend.

Fifty years ago, in front of the State House in Philadelphia, there stood seven gentlemen whose ages ranged, as my memory serves me now, from under forty to twenty-two years. I was one of these. The oldest of them, I think, was Robert T. Conrad, the jurist, orator, poet, and playright, whose name still lives in American literature.

There was George W. Barton, the judge, who when on the bench was always listened to with attention by the bar, and when at the bar was listened to with attention by the bench. There was Henry S. Patterson, who died too young. He was a man of the clearest ideas, with the power to couch them in the most vigorous and forcible language of any man I have ever known. There was William D. Kelley, who for a long time was known as the father of this House, and whose memory is still fresh in the minds of many members. There was Benjamin H. Brewster, afterwards Attorney-General of the United States, and there was the youngest of all then, only 22 years of age—Charles O'Neill.

They met together by accident, and, as men will, began to talk—at least the younger members did—of their hopes for the future, and they were chaffed not a little by their elders in the group. I remember very well what O'Neill and Brewster and partly what I myself said. They were the words uttered by young men of ambition and hope.

To-day I stand here, the sole survivor of the seven, to pay a tribute to the memory of the youngest of them all.

Charles O'Neill and I were boys together. He was younger than I by two years, and consequently, as we grew up, I somewhat lost sight of him until we became young men together, and then I lost sight of him after that for years.

I came to Washington on one occasion and took breakfast with William D. Kelley. Mr. O'Neill came in and made himself known to me, and recalled then many instances of our boyhood which he, being younger than I, had kept more vividly in his memory. We had a pleasant interview and it lasted for hours.

Although I remembered his early character, his early habits, and the pleasant times we had together as young men, I saw little of him after, until I became a member of this body, when we renewed our old acquaintance and strengthened our friendship. I learned to love him then, as most of the members of this House who knew him learned to love him.

He was truly a lovable man. There was a touch of feminine softness in his nature that made it difficult for him to do harm to anyone, even a foe; but it must not be supposed from that that he lacked firmness, or the power to defend, to oppose, or to attack, if need be.

He came of a race that has lived in history as one of the boldest and bravest of its kind, and there was never one of that lordly strain of the ua Nial, however great he may have been at counsel, or however mighty he may have been on the field, that had more real firmness when the need arose than the humble descendant who filled his place in this Hall. I have known him time and again when some one would presume on that kindly soft nature of his to show that he had an iron hand within the velvet glove. He was a man of courage, and stood up for his convictions manfully.

His views on public affairs were entirely different from mine. We never agreed; but it never broke our social relations, it never interfered with our friendship. I respected and loved him, as I believe he respected me.

I do not propose to waste time to speak of the long public service of Charles O'Neill. His colleagues who sat with him here and who come from his own State have done and will do justice to that part. I have only to say this, that his loss to me was something more than an ordinary loss, because it carried me back to the old days in Philadelphia when we were boys together, when we played together, and sometimes avoided our school together. It bears me back to many pleasant scenes of young manhood, when I had fire and ambition, and so had he.

He embarked on a different course of life than mine. He entered into the law and remained there until his fellow-citizens determined to have his services in a public capacity, and there he maintained his position well, while I went to follow a more erratic life, without a single purpose fulfilled, and without that fixity of purpose which marked him.

But though he made no great and commanding figure here, though he did not stand here as the leader of his party or as one who molded those around him to his will, his name will not perish because of that. There are men—and men. There are great men whom the world does not always recognize, and the greatest man of all is he who does his duty to his fellows and himself; and Charles O'Neill was preëminently that man. As the gentleman who spoke before me has said, men around us make their mark on the sands of time, but the waves of oblivion speedily efface them. Charles O'Neill did not make a deep mark on the sands of time, but he carved his name without effort on the rocks above, where the storm does not reach; and when men of more pretense are forgotten, those who knew him and loved him, and those to whom the story is told, will keep his memory green in their souls.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, to properly observe and faithfully commemorate the life and public services of one who had for so many years occupied so exalted a position as the Representative of a large district of one of the most flourishing and largest manufacturing cities of the world, as did Hon. Charles O'Neill, of Pennsylvania, requires more thought, and should receive a more careful review, in order to do proper honor and pay that meed of respect that is justly due to the deceased and his people, than can be given in the few moments of time allotted to me by the courtesy of the House in the brief space of time set apart for this service. And while the ceremonies of the occasion are solemn and impressive, it must be remembered that they are due, and the good man whose memory we honor was one of the trusted and true men of this great nation before the present generation was born; and the high and distinguished appellation placed upon him by naming him the "father of the House," was not won alone by long and continuous service, but gentleness of disposition, urbanity of manner, kindness of heart, and cheerful and polite deportment to all, placed him upon a pedestal of love and honor that is rarely reached by man among his fellows.

This Hall is in many respects, Mr. Speaker, like its marble exterior, cold and repelling. This is a place in which all of us find but a temporary residence. Our real friendships are elsewhere. This is a busy hive of concentrated thought, the workshop of the representatives of a great nation, whose duty it is to legislate for all, care for all; in which each Representative in his own way works for the interest of his own particular district, as well as for the country at large. In the inevitable bustle and struggle incident to such work we scarcely note one falling in the contest, and the death of a member is soon effaced from memory, and the note made upon the record passes with the day, and is soon lost to sight and mind. Yet when the death of this sweet-spirited man, this noble exemplar of God's handiwork, was announced, this active mass of active minds and of active work halted, yea, even stopped, and with one accord all was stilled, and the acknowledgment went forth that a good citizen, a true man, a patriot and statesman had fallen; and so long as memory lives and history inscribes its scroll the honored name of Charles O'Neill of Pennsylvania will be engraved upon its tablets as one of the ideal men of the generation. Not only will he be remembered as one who loved and served his country, but as one "who also loved his fellow-man."

The good people of the good city of Philadelphia, that seat of loyalty to country and the home and birthplace of American freedom and liberty, knew his worth, and as the coworker and colleague of that energetic and earnest defender of American industries, the untiring William D. Kelley, and the brave, vigorous, manly, and determined defender of the interests of his city and State, and leader of men, the honored Samuel J. Randall, he was the survivor, and fittingly so, of the work and services of these three of Pennsylvania's best and ablest contributions to the cause of "liberty, equal rights, and human progress" of the generation. And so long as the name of one of these great men shall live, so long will the three survive. They stand linked in-separably together as three of our country's best citizens and statesmen who, in all they did, never lost sight of those duties which should be ever uppermost in the mind of every true lover of his country, namely: "Loyalty to home, loyalty to State, and loyalty to country."

These three great thoughts controlled the mind and actions of these three great men and their names are inseparably united, and the great city of Philadelphia, true to its traditions and to the memory of its great name and fame, honored itself at each returning election in the election of this most unselfish of men to his honored place here. As the associate of Lincoln, the supporter of Grant, the colleague of Kelley and Randall, the trusted guardian of his city's honor and his State's fair name, he was faithful in all his undertakings and zealous in every good cause that interested his city, State, and country, and he had an abiding faith in "ultimate America," and firmly believed that ours was a destiny that had been intended from the beginning to ameliorate the condition of the human family and place it upon a higher plane of civilization and of happiness, and with that energy and purpose, characteristic of his Scotch-Irish ancestry, his efforts tended firmly yet certainly in that direction, and with as true and fixed a purpose as is the magnet to the pole, his eye, voice, thought, and labor was always in the direction and for the betterment of the human race. Conservative in thought and in action, yet he was among those who earnestly advocated the cause of the liberation of the slave, and when that great work was consummated he felt that the last blot upon the world's fairest banner, our own "Stars and Stripes," was through the providence of God obliterated.

In the legislation subsequent to the great civil war, when the passions of men were yet heated from the effects and memories of that great strife, his voice and vote was for moderation, and with open hands and a forgiving spirit he welcomed back to the Union of States our brethren of the South, and his earnest desire was that the great American Union should be a union of hearts as well as a Union of States. From his lips there never fell harsh criticism or unkind words of the erring men of that time, and in word and deed he carried out the prayer and spirit of Lincoln, "with malice towards none and charity for all, and with the high resolve and purpose that our dead shall not have died in vain, and that the nation shall under God have a new birth of freedom;" and in all his public acts as well as in private life he did all he could to bind up and heal the wounds of that unhappy struggle. He was a model of kindness, sympathy, and love, and richly deserved the title of "father." Such, Mr. Speaker, in brief was the public history of this good man, and during his entire career as a member of this House for thirty years, he stood pre minently as a faithful Representative, a pure-minded man, and a sincere lover of his country. He hath—

Left a name and fame above the blight
Of earthly breath;
Beautiful, beautiful, and bright,
In life and death.

The long-continued public service of our deceased friend had made him familiar with the details of that service that are so necessary to its proper conduct, and in public as well as in private affairs he believed in justice; and the least as well as the greatest was entitled to this consideration, and always received it from him; and he firmly believed that in the practice of justice was the only true road to success in all governments, and this practice meant "in doing injury to no man;" and as justice and judgment are the habitation of the throne of the living God, so were they ever present in the mind and life of our friend, and by this rule of life, and the practice of this principle, and his steady adherence to its cause, he enriched his long and useful life with contentment and insured a painless and happy death, and the promised reward that has been given us from the beginning to such as he, is now surely his.

Mr. Speaker, honor to our friend was the reward well earned by his fidelity, and of this ennobling trait of his character too much can not be said. Unto him no trust was committed to which he proved faithless or unworthy; and to him and his memory honor is as true gold that passes without other recommendation than its own purity. Self-respect, which is the corner stone and foundation of all virtues, was peculiarly his, and modesty resided within his breast to such an extent that his manner plainly indicated an enrichment from the enjoyment of all the nobler virtues, and his expressions always impressed one with his talent and genius. He had in a bountiful degree that God-given talent of industry, and by the use of this most excellent gift he was crowned by his own merits; and by its proper use success in life became to him a certainty, and by this blessed talent of being always employed it was to him a tower of both strength and defense.

Of integrity, which is manhood's true honor, let his constituency speak for him. For thirty years they kept him as their Representative in the fore front of one of the foremost districts in one of the foremost cities of the foremost country of the world, and in all these years not even a whisper or breath of suspicion of faithlessness, defection, betrayal, or even faltering in duty has been heard of or known to exist, nor did aught occur to mar or tarnish his good name and fame. The humblest citizen of his district knows of his good deeds and of his noble, pure, and stainless life as well as of his unselfishness and charity; he was a generous and faithful follower of the truth, and always kept his eye upon his guide, never deceiving either himself or others, and by his discernment and practice of the good in his daily life, he proved his commission to be from a higher than earthly source, and his belief in the Giver of all Good and in a just and merciful providence was evinced by his weekly presence in God's sanctuary on each returning Sabbath day, and there from God's acknowledged minister he received the message of peace and love that he carried into his daily life, and the lessons there learned from the sacred desk were beautifully exemplified in his daily walk with men.

It is well and we believe truthfully said, that the valiant never taste of death but once, and we who had the honor of knowing our friend knew that he was valiant, and death came to him, not with terrors, but like the serene and peaceful hour of a closing summer day, and the spirit of this good man when it passed into eternal and blissful rest, found a sweet repose from the labors of a useful and busy life, and when that great beyond and quiet haven known as death, which is but the tyrant of our imagination, was reached by him whose memory we honor to-day, we can not for a moment think or believe that he felt that his future was—

To die, and go we know not where:
To lie in cold obstruction and to rot.

Nay, nay. He went through "gates ajar," welcomed into a land of beauty and promise, a land of "pure delight," and there he found a cure-all for the fatigue of years. By death the gates of fame to him were opened, and the doors of envy forever closed. All competitions and rivalships were at an end, and our friend but used the path—

That must be trod
If man would ever pass to God.

In his death, as in the death of every good man, we look from time into the vale of eternity, and from a life of ache, imprisonment, and the infirmities of age, into a new life of eternal youth and blissful immortality. Death to such as he is but the opening of life, the life that lives forever.

Such, Mr. Speaker, was the peaceful and blissful end of one who had been faithful in all his doings, and it is an honor to this body to have it said he was one of us; his end was peace, the sure reward of a life of devotion to duty. Fidelity, integrity, and honesty were the marked characteristics of this good man. These speak louder than words of eulogy. Like unto a ripened shock of corn, like wheat ready for the garner, after the fulfillment of the allotment of years allowed by God to man he was gathered to his fathers. Of such we can truly say:

There are no dead, we fall asleep,
To waken where they never weep.
We close our eyes on pain and sin,
Our breath ebbs out, but life flows in.

And of our illustrious dead whose memory we this day honor we can say as was truthfully said and written of another of America's great men:

Of him no envious tongue upbraids,
His name a nation's heart shall keep
Till morning's latest sunlight fades
On the blue tablet of the deep.

His memory is sweet as the essence of the purest of flowers, and his example is one worthy of the emulation of each one of us.

[Mr. REILLY withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

[Mr. SPRINGER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, among all civilized peoples from immemorial times it has been a beautiful custom to mingle with laments for the dead eulogies of their well-spent lives. The Greek elegy, the resounding prose of the Roman orators, the limpid speech and incisive phrase of the French Academy, and the lofty and pathetic verse of Milton and Tennyson have been alike in the one great purpose of teaching the lesson that the highest life is that which is lived for others. The public servant has this reward, that as the tendency of his toil and labor is to take him out of himself and set before him the public good as his highest aim, so the popular heart is willing to condone his faults and errors and to remember only that he was one who had in his way striven to serve his fellow-man. But when such a public servant has brought uncommon physical energy, blessed with long life and large faculties of head and heart, to the tasks and obligations of political life, we must feel it to be a sad, yet sacred, duty to bring our unavailing regrets, mingled with words of commendation, to his bier.

Mr. Speaker, a good man has fallen; a valuable public servant has gone from among us. A representative of some of the best elements of our national progress, a tried and trusted legislator has answered at a higher roll call than this.

Charles O Neill came of old Revolutionary stock. His grandfather handled a musket in the war for Independence as a member of Capt. Helm s company of the New Jersey line. When the war was over he laid down his gun and took up the more peaceful occupation of teaching school at New Castle, in the State of Delaware.

His son afterwards removed to the city of Philadelphia, where his son, Charles O'Neill, was born on the 21st day of March, 1821, in a house built during the Revolutionary war on ground owned by the venerable parish of St. Peter's Church, on the north side of Spruce street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, and in it passed his youthful days. His preparatory education was received at the celebrated school of the Society of Friends on Fourth street in the said city, under the charge of John Sanderson, a scholar who has left his impress on many of his pupils. Thus, well grounded, young O'Neill entered Dickinson College at Carlisle, in the State of Pennsylvania, without difficulty in the year 1837, and while there that patient industry was developed which so characterized his later life.

During his stay in college the president wrote his mother that he had seen enough of the boy to know that he would make his mark in the world if given a chance, and advised on graduation that he should pursue the study of the law. This letter was the turning point of his life, for on taking his degree in the year 1840, he entered the office of that distinguished barrister, the Hon. George M. Dallas, afterward Vice-President of the United States, and in the year 1843 was admitted to the practice of law in the courts of his native city.

Mr. O'Neill soon developed a taste and aptitude for public affairs, and in the year 1850, while still a young man was honored by his fellow-citizens by an election to the house of representatives of the State of Pennsylvania on the Whig ticket, and was complimented by a reëlection in the years 1851 and 1852. So well did he fulfill his duties as a representative that his constituents in the next year promoted him to the State senate, where he was noted for the same strict attention to the interests of his district, which now covered a larger field and more diversified interests. In the year 1860 he was again returned to the house of representatives of his State as a Republican.

The career of Charles O Neill in public life was no sudden streak of fortune or of happy accident, as has characterized the beginning of so many men distinguished in the history of our country, but was founded and continued upon a conscientious performance of duty which gradually impressed itself upon the people of his city, and who showed their appreciation by his steady advancement at their hands, at the same time moved by a conviction that it was for their own advantage to retain the services of so faithful a public servant.

He was nominated by the Republicans for Congress in the year 1861. That party had not the hold upon the people at that date that it afterward acquired; and Col. Charles T. Biddle, a gallant soldier, was his Democratic opponent. Despite these facts so great was O'Neills' popularity that he was defeated by only 218 votes, and for the following term he defeated Col. Biddle by 2,546 votes. Mr. O Neill's majorities increased steadily during his nearly thirty years of service, his last being in the year 1892 6,405. He was returned as a Representative to Congress continuously except one term, when he was defeated by John V. Creely, an independent Republican supported by the Democrats.

The history of Mr. O'Neill for the nearly thirty years of his Congressional career is intimately interwoven with the history of the period of that service, and the student will find the record of his acts in harmony with the loyal efforts to preserve the Union and with the best interests of the financial management of the country and on the vital questions of currency, tariff, and commerce were conservative and sound, as propounded by the best minds and the closest thinkers of his party.

His chief and marked characteristic was his regular attendance upon the sessions of this House, his strict attentions to the questions under consideration, and to the wants of his people. No constituent ever had to write him a second time to secure attention to his request, and no interview was ever denied an applicant in Washington or at his home. The services of no Sergeant-at-Arms was ever necessary to notify him that the public business was being delayed on account of his absence, and but few quorums failed for the lack of his vote.

Mr. O'Neill did not pose as an orator, and never spoke unless he had something to say bearing on the question at issue. He never failed to command the respect and attention of his colleagues because they knew that peculiarity. His talk was always vigorous, concise, and accurate. In committee he was a most useful and indefatigable worker and always alert to advance or protect the interest of Philadelphia; and to him as much as to any member is she indebted for the appropriations made from time to time for the harbor improvements and also the appropriation for the new mint to be built in the city of Philadelphia.

The average citizen does not realize the requirements of legislative bodies and of governments as to details; both would become so clogged that the frame of society would dissolve if it were not for the patient, unassuming, industrious public servant like Charles O'Neill, who for forty years served his people so well. Through this long term of service no breath of dishonest scandal ever touched his name, and when it is remembered that great men, his colleagues and friends, were besmirched with the "Credit Mobilier" and "Star Route" frauds, to say nothing of lesser corrupt legislation, it adds the luster of unassailed integrity as another laurel to lay in his bier.

Mr. O'Neill was not ambitious, unless it was for the continued approval and acknowledgment of services advantageous to his constituents. His aspirations never led him to wish for or to seek the Speakership of the House, although his long service and great knowledge of parliamentary law gave him a claim to that honorable position. His idea of Congressional service was upon the floor of the House, continued by successive elections, showing the undiminished confidence of his district. He had his wish and died the "father of the House," and will take his place in history beside his colleagues who also attained similar honor, and the names of Kelley, Randall, and O'Neill will ever stand out brilliantly from among the sons of Pennsylvania who shed luster upon their native State by their able representation in the National Legislature.

During his course in Congress he had as colleagues Thaddeus Stevens, James K. Moorhead, Edward McPherson, and GALUSHA A. GROW, so recently returned a member, full of years and honors, but alas, to find but few of his former associates left. From other States were seated JUSTIN S. MORRILL, Henry L. Dawes, John A. Logan, William Windom, Elihu B. Washburne, Roscoe Conkling, James G. Blaine, James A. Garfield, Nathaniel P. Banks, Samuel S. Cox, and WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, who is still a member, and succeeds Mr. O'Neill as "father of the House."

It is given to but few of a member's constituents to know of his home life, but it was there that some of the strongest and loveliest traits of the one we mourn to-day showed themselves. It was in his library, crowded with documents of every sort that related to Philadelphia, that his great knowledge of her affairs and of all things that concerned her citizens was demonstrated. He was familiar with every measure, public or private, relating to Philadelphia, and his information was at the disposal of all.

One of the marked traits of the deceased was his gentle nature and kindness toward his associates. A beautiful compliment was once paid to a Senator that "the consciousness of having unintentionally used a discourteous expression would bring a blush to his face." It might with equal propriety be said of Representative O'Neill that the consciousness of having wounded a brother member would have given a much deeper wound to his own heart. One who knew him well thus described his character to me: "He had great determination and was sympathetic to a wonderful degree: duty was his greatest characteristic. No personal pleasure nor thought of self ever interfered with his public service. To his country and his family he was faithful the same. Truthfulness was another trait; he could not tolerate even in jest the least deviation from the truth. He had the simplicity of a child, the tenderness of a woman, with the strength of a man, and all that was most beautiful in him was thrown out most in his home life." His death was in keeping with his life.

The fatigue of the extra session in the summer was beyond his failing health. His last act was to administer, as the oldest member, the oath of office to the new Speaker. He returned to Philadelphia, where his vitality rapidly waned, and on November 25, 1893, he laid down for rest and it proved to be everlasting, for he never woke. His burial, too, was simple, save the official presence of the Congressional delegation, it might have been thought a plain citizen was being given the final rites. But as one looked around the Presbyterian Church he would have been impressed with the sad faces of the many gathered to do him honor.

Rich and poor were assembled there, for all classes knew they had lost a faithful Representative and friend, and as the plain coffin that held all that was left of Charles O'Neill was borne down the aisle but few of the eyes that beheld it were undimmed with tears, and yet all felt they could find some consolation in Cicero's eloquent words: "His end was not unfortunate, for he died mature in years and full of honors and at a moment happy for his fame, but unfortunate for his country."

[Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled in a historic Chamber whose walls during the long decade since its foundation have echoed and reëchoed infinite sounds as they reflected the roar of the lawmaking machinery of a great nation—the angry notes of heated partisanship and the persuasive plea of eloquence. Here, we are more accustomed to listen to the conclusive facts of the statistician, the logical argument of debate; to present stirring pleas for right or to hurl flaming denunciation of wrong.

But to-day no voices such as these resound. Argument has been stilled and genius employs its powers only to lay eloquent tribute at the feet of the dead. With sadness and the awed accents which we use toward the one who has performed his last earthly work and learned the final, the mightiest secret that nature withholds from mortals, we, his friends and colleagues, gather to give testimonial to the life work and character of the man who has recently passed from our midst. For every dead, some tear is let fall. The millionaire is wept by his retinue of beneficiaries; the ashen face of the beggar is fawned upon by his faithful dog; but the cynic complains that this grief is seldom sincere, that these trappings and suits of woe are but a mockery and that eulogy too frequently consists of fulsome encomiums, uttered in compliance with the dictates of empty formality and sounding with a hollow ring.

Human nature is indeed weak, but it has enough mingling of the Divine essence to appreciate what is good and admirable in man, and, when called upon to mourn a truly noble character, its grief is real, for its loss is genuine.

With such grief do we pay tribute to the memory of Charles O'Neill, a member of this House from the city of Philadelphia, and who was serving his fifteenth term in Congress when removed by the decree of the dread destroyer.

The announcement of his death last November was received with lamentations throughout the country, for he had gained a national reputation by a long and exemplary life devoted to the service of the people. The highest eulogium which can belong to anyone was paid to him when the people and their public exponent, the press, burned the incense of their sorrow around his bier, uttering voluntary praise of his virtues.

As private citizens we then mourned over his grave; it now remains for us to give official recognition of his character and to record in our archives the deep regret which we feel for the loss from our body of one who was for so many long years hailed as its Nestor.

The historical associations which so richly cluster around the city of Philadelphia are an inexhaustible theme for eloquence and reflection. Philadelphia gave birth to American liberty and proudly nourished the child into strength: there was framed the wonderful document which bound us into an indissoluble Union, and there the early years of our Government, presided over by Washington and Adams, were spent in building firm foundations for the greatest nation on the globe.

With such associations was Mr. O'Neill's whole life closely intertwined. Born in Philadelphia in 1821, his elder townsmen had heard the bell proclaiming liberty to all the world; had listened to John Nixon read the Declaration in the State House yard, and taken part in ratification, celebration, and inauguration ceremony. He himself passed daily under the shadow of that most notable State House and learned lessons in good citizenship and good government from the traditions of Penn and Franklin.

How sincerely he appreciated the great deeds of great men was shown in 1871 when, as the Representative of his city in the Forty-first Congress, he advocated the bill providing for the celebration in Philadelphia of the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence, and in an eloquent and effective speech said:

> The people want it [the celebration] where the events occurred, where the Continental Congress held its sessions, Carpenter's Hall, although surrounded by commercial warehouses, still standing and destined to remain forever a monument to the patriotic men who there assembled; where, too, as you all know, is Independence Hall, the very room in which the Declaration was agreed upon, unaltered in its interior arrangement, and the building itself consecrated to the end of time as the temple of American freedom, never to be closed to visitors, who ever delight to enter its sacred portals. Why, then [he asked] should we hesitate about the passage of this bill? Let us show to the world that we can compete with every nation in the arts, sciences, and in manufactures; and, more than all, let us declare that, at the distance of one hundred years from the day of the Declaration and from the very spot upon which we were made free, the men of America still cherish the memory of those who laid the foundations of our greatness and of our unequaled prosperity.

Mr. O'Neill soon realized his expectations of the Centennial Exposition; within a score of years thereafter he also saw his country so increase in wealth and power that it could give, to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of its discovery, another World's Exposition surpassing in beauty and wonder any previous human conception.

One of the most striking features of Mr. O'Neill's public life was his untiring devotion to the city of Philadelphia and its interests. Let but the word "Philadelphia" be uttered by a member in any part of this House and he was instantly on the alert watching proceedings, and always championing the cause of his city, no matter what the question might be; defending her when attacked, lauding her when criticised, and always guarding her fair name and fame with a true lover's devotion until we had all come to look upon him as the especial champion of Philadelphia.

No lover was ever more devoted to the object of his affection than was Charles O'Neill to the city he represented and which he loved so well. Even to have lived in Philadelphia was sufficient to secure for any such person his kindest consideration, and this affection for his native city was not that of the demagogue, but sprung from the heart, and as he grew older in years it seems his love for the city which he had honored became more and more intense, and none of us who sat with him during his last few years in Congress have failed to note the fact that his life seemed bound up in the interests and welfare of his native city. Never having been married, and having no family of his own, it seemed that the love which might have gone to wife and children was bestowed upon the city and people of Philadelphia, and it can be truly said that while that city honored him with such a long period of continuous service, yet he in return by his undying devotion and splendid championship conferred an equal honor upon the city he represented.

Mr. O'Neill's education at Dickinson College had strengthened his ties to his State, and when, after his admission to the bar, he proved himself not only an able forensic pleader, but a citizen alive to the public needs, his native city, whose hearth he never deserted, sent him as one of her representatives to the State Legislature. For two years from this time (1860) he served in one or the other of the branches of the Pennsylvania Legislature, a period memorable in our history for the heated discussion arising from the sectional differences existing north and south of Mason and Dixon's line, a boundary which the famous surveyors had dated from Mr. O'Neill's own city.

True to the traditions of that State which had been the keystone of our early Union, he was staunchly faithful to the National Government, and when the awful throes of civil war racked the country his townsmen recognized his loyalty and sterling worth by sending him as one of their Representatives to the Thirty-eighth Congress. From this year (1862) up to his death in 1893 the name of Charles O'Neill was omitted from the roll call of this House for but one term, that of the Forty-second Congress, when the gallant war record of Mr. Creely aroused the enthusiasm of a people just mustered out of a victorious army.

Faithful to his constituents, fully awake to the public welfare, steadfastly upright in all his aims, he conscientiously and ably performed his duties as a representative of the people for nearly thirty years, a term of service equaled only by one now with us and far distancing all others.

Among the ancients such length of time devoted to the people and to the nation would have been deified in their temples. They would have believed the gods to be the direct coadjutors of a man who could for such long years, through varying epochs of social and political progress, retain the unshaken respect and confidence of his constituents. Among the first to enlist in the ranks of that party who took "The Republic" as its banner cry, he forever remained unwaveringly true to its tenets. He was a firm believer in and teacher of its liberal conservatism, of its care for the people's industries and interests. In witness of its wisdom, he saw it safely guide his country through the perils of a tremendous civil war, and healing and strengthening, increase the Union from thirty-three to fourty-four States, the greatest nation in history.

A typical gentleman in habits, manner, and tastes, the influence of Mr. O'Neill's quiet personality was always for good. His were not the rhetorical soarings of the loud-voiced orator, nor the blatant leadership of the demagogue. He spoke to speak well, whether for or against the question in debate, and his words always received that attention which they deserved, since his absolute integrity and his knowledge of the principles and details of his duties in this body secured him a respectful and attentive hearing made more voluntary by his uniform courtesy and genial disposition.

"Mild in manner, resolute in conviction," his name is permanently written in the annals of our nation as an exemplary type of citizen—a benefactor to his fellows, a lover of his country, an honest man.

The legions of heaven had watched him perform, day after day, year after year, the work laid to his hands, with never a shirking of responsibility nor a diminution of fidelity. At last they cried: "This man is unimpeachable; we have tried him well and found him not wanting;" and, as he was again about to put his shoulder to the wheel, yet unbent by the weight of more than his allotted three score and ten years, they called to him: "Rest, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. REYBURN. Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns I desire to ask leave that all gentlemen who desire to do so may print remarks upon this subject. I have received telegrams from my colleagues [Mr. DALZELL and Mr. BINGHAM] who were to be here to-day, but who are sick and unable to be present. I ask leave to print, not only for these gentlemen, but for such other members of the House as may desire it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I hope that request will be granted. I myself had intended to submit some remarks on this occasion, but on account of sickness have been unable to prepare any. I desire to pay some tribute to the memory of our departed friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request will be granted in the absence of objection.

There was no objection.

And then, in accordance with the terms of the resolutions (at 2 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, April 2, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COFFEEN: A bill (H. R. 6517) to provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. COGSWELL: A bill (H. R. 6521) to provide for the support of bastard children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6522) to provide for the support of wives and minor children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOLMAN: A resolution authorizing the payment of $200 to Isaac F. Smith for services as messenger of the House—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. BAILEY: A resolution inquiring of the Secretary of the Treasury regarding certain interest-bearing Treasury notes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 6519) for the relief of Shields and H. Bryant, executors of J. Youngblood, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6520) for the relief of Thomas J. Lawson, sr.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 6523) authorizing the President to appoint and retire John B. Turchin as a brigadier-general in the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6524) to place the name of John B. Turchin on the pension rolls at the rate of $100 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6525) for the relief of Josiah R. Allen—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6526) for the relief of Robert Coombes, of Harrisonville, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 2, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (S. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "Donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants of said lands, and had appointed Mr. MCRAE, Mr. HARE, and Mr. LACEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1919) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Caddo Lake at or near Mooringsport, La., and Cross Bayou, near Shreveport, La.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4328) for the relief of William B. Chapman, George W. Street, John W. Hoes, Emmet C. Tuthill, and Joseph H. Curtis;

A bill (H. R. 4954) relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon;

A bill (H. R. 6042) to authorize sale of lot 8, block 3, city of Hot Springs, by school directors thereof, and use of proceeds for school purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6110) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Red Wing, Minn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 146) providing for the payment of salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act of May 5, 1892, as amended by the act of November 3, 1893; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of E. A. Hopkins and 14 other citizens of Litchfield County, Conn., and the petition of M. Falrey and 25 other citizens of Litchfield County, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the States to enforce State laws regulating the sale of substitutes for dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of Capital City Lodge, No. 3, Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Iron Shipbuilders, of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the passage of House bill 2655, granting American registry to foreign-built ships; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's National Indian Association, of St. Paul, Minn., praying that an increased appropriation be made for the better education of Indian children; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented petitions of St. Croix Lodge, No. 14, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Stillwater; of Invincible Union, No. 785, of Winona, and of Lodge No. 63, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Worthington, all in the State of Minnesota, praying that fraternal college and society journals be admitted to the mails as second class matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. QUAY. The fact that I am a resident during the winter of the pineapple district of Florida is my apology to the Florida Senators for presenting a memorial of the Legislature of that State; which I send to the desk and ask to have it read.

The memorial of the Legislature of Florida was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

House joint resolution relating to duty on foreign pineapples.

Whereas the production of the pineapples is rapidly assuming proportions of magnitude in the semitropical portions of the United States; and

Whereas the large territory adapted to the growth of this fruit which is now being provided with transportation facilities is sufficient to supply the demands of our own country, if put under cultivation; and

Whereas our people can not successfully compete with foreign producers who have the advantage of more fertile soils, much cheaper labor and less transportation rates; and

Whereas this industry, by being husbanded, will rapidly multiply, affording rich fields for investing capital, and giving profitable employment to a large class of our citizens: Therefore

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to use every effort to secure the passage of a law imposing a duty of $2 per barrel crate of 4 cubic feet, or, when shipped in bulk, $3 per 100, on all foreign pineapples imported into the United States; and that the secretary of state be requested to furnish a copy of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved May 11, 1893.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Indiana County, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation granting arrears of pension to Henry Sohnetberg, a veteran of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of Metzler, Sacks & Co. and sundry other importers and dealers in leaf tobacco, of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on cigars; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of Catharine Clark, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying that she be granted a pension as one of the heirs of Louis Glass, late quartermaster sergeant, Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rising City, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the lottery traffic; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of 74 citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the preamble of the Constitution of the United States, recognizing the Deity; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial of wool merchants of Boston, Mass., signed by nearly all the merchants engaged in that business in Boston, without distinction of party, remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill, and especially against the woolen schedule of that bill, and praying that a duty be placed on wool. I move that the memorial be printed as a document with other memorials on the same subject which have already been ordered printed, and that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of B. H. Welsh and 24 other citizens of Somerville, Mass., and the petition of Charles S. Gibbs and 28 other citizens of Lawrence, Mass., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present resolutions adopted by Sub-Lodge No. 32, of the Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Iron Ship builders of America, and indorsed by the Industrial Council, of Kansas City, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the bill pending in the House of Representatives providing for free ships. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO presented the petition of B. F. Hall and 22 other orange and lemon-growers of Florida, praying that such provision be made in the pending tariff bill as will enable them to overcome the difference in the values of labor between the old country and the new, and which will preserve their industry from destruction; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I have received a communication from a constituent of mine, residing at Bly, Klamath County, Oregon, inclosing a resolution favoring a reform in spelling, and for the calling of an international convention to effect that end. I do not like to introduce a bill to be printed, but I should like to have the matter go before the Committee on Education and Labor. I present the communication and accompanying resolution, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR presented the petition of R. M. Pratt and 29 other citizens of Dummerston, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the States to enforce State laws regulating the sale of substitutes for dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the petition of Dr. Philip S. Wales, late medical director, United States Navy, praying that he be granted certain relief by Congress, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Joint Commission of Congress to Inquire into the Status of Laws Organizing the Executive Departments, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1831) to improve the methods of accounting in the Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon, and moved that the bill and report be referred to the Committee on the Organization, Conduct, and Expenditures of the Executive Departments; which was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3135) granting to the University of Utah a site off the public domain, to report it back and recommend that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill relates to a reservation which has not been abandoned and properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Public Lands will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1127) for the relief of Francis M. Tomlin, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 19th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, relating to the resurvey of the lands of Grant and Hooker Counties, Nebr., reported it favorably with amendments, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1583) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. KYLE on the 28th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 680) conveying to Rafael Seguro, of Iberia Parish, La., the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in said parish of Iberia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 684) for the relief of the heirs of the late Mrs. Catherine P. Culver, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH. I report, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, the bill (S. 76) for the relief of William P. Keady, which may be indefinitely postponed, as such action has been taken in the Interior Department as renders the passage of the bill unnecessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DOLPH. Also, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 889) for the relief of William P. Keady, I report it back, and for the same reason I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by him on the 28th ultime, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing for an appropriation for surveys and resurveys of public lands, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. 3740) to amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," heretofore reported from that committee and now on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1772) extending the time for the completion of a railroad bridge over the Columbia River at or near Vancouver, in the State of Washington, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1808) to amend the act of June 22, 1892, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5041) to extend the time authorizing the St. Louis and Birmingham Railroad to build a bridge across the Tennessee River at Clifton, Tenn., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. POWER on the 28th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

BOOK-MAKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 1680) to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia, heretofore reported by the committee. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan reports an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on the District of Columbia report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 31st day of January, 1893, entitled "An act to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia," and also the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 21 day of March, 1891, entitled "An act to prevent book-making and pool-selling in the District of Columbia," shall not apply to book-making at the spring and fall meetings, at the Bennings and Ivy City race tracks when such meetings are held by organizations duly incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia: Provided, That such meetings shall be held only between the 1st day of March and the 15th day of December in any year, and shall not exceed a period of eighteen days each: And provided further, That there shall be but one spring meeting and but one fall meeting at each of the above-named tracks in any one year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. PEFFER. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1893.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 139) to print the Agricultural Report for 1893, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to appropriate $300,000 to print 500,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture for the year 1893; 110,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 360,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland why it is that only 110,000 copies are appropriated for the Senate and there are 360,000 copies provided for the House of Representatives? My recollection is that with respect to the printing of documents generally, one-half of the number usually given to the other House is given to the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Tennessee is quite correct in his statement as to the usual order, but in the matter of the agricultural report, after a very long controversy in both Houses in years past, this proportion was finally determined upon, and it was so fixed in the printing bill which passed the Senate in the last Congress and is now pending in the other House. The joint resolution is in exact conformity with the numbers ordered printed in the last two or three years.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall raise no question in regard to the matter.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL WOOLGROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 2,500 copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 124, Fifty-third Congress, second session, being an "Appeal of the National Woolgrowers' Association, etc.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. POWER, March 6, 1894, providing for the printing of 500 copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 77, a memorial of the National Woolgrowers' Association, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I present reports to accompany the joint resolution and the resolution just passed, and ask that they be printed in the usual form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1837) providing for an international humane conference; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is accompanied by a number of petitions of boards of trades in its behalf. I introduce the bill without knowing whether it is right in every particular, and therefore do not care to be entirely responsible for it. I move that the bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 1838) to increase the pension of Caroline B. Andrews; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCPHERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1839) to incorporate the American College of Musicians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 1840) to establish a department of public health; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRAY. I ask that the bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a bill proposing to create a department of public health. Every bill or petition upon that general subject since the winter of 1878–'79 has been referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and I move that this bill take the same direction. That is the committee which has had jurisdiction of the subject-matter for a number of years, and there is no other committee of the body which can legitimately take charge of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. I wish merely to state my reasons for asking the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. I, of course, know there is such a standing committee as the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and certainly intended no disrespect to that committee, but it occurred to me and to those who are interested in the bill, that inasmuch as it has no reference to any of those subjects which are generally supposed to occupy the attention of that committee, and does contemplate the creation of a new department in the Government, to wit, a secretary of public health, making a new department, just as the Department of Agriculture, it ought to be considered gravely by the committee to which we refer all bills that propose to make any material or serious change in the organization of our Government. I introduce the bill at the request of respectable medical authorities and societies and not as my own bill or as in all respects representing my own views; and for the reasons I have stated I think it ought to have the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to suggest to him that there are two bills already introduced upon the same subject and for the same purpose that have gone to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases? That committee has charge of the subject-matter now by the introduction and reference of two bills during the present session of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not now a member of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, but I certainly think the Senator from Delaware ought to consent to have the bill go in the first instance to that committee. If it should turn out in the consideration of the question that there are grave legal matters or matters so connected with the organization of the Departments of the Government that it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, I know the Senator from Tennessee well enough to believe that when he reports the bill to the Senate he will himself ask that it shall have further consideration before the Committee on the Judiciary.

If the Senator from Delaware were to introduce a bill to create a Department of Agriculture, he would not think of sending that bill in the first instance to the Committee on the Judiciary. It would necessarily first go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for consideration by that committee, and if it were thought advisable it could be further considered by the Committee on the Judiciary or any other committee of this body. The bill for the creation of the Department of Agriculture was considered and reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. If the Senator from Delaware makes objection to the reference I will move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. GRAY. That motion has already been made. I will state that I have no personal feeling in regard to the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary rather than the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. I am inclined to believe that the sense of the Senate is that it ought to go to the latter committee, in the first instance, and therefore I will accede to the proposition made by the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that the bill be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases? The Chair hears none, and the bill is so referred.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1841) to provide that all persons employing female help in stores, shops, offices, or manufactories shall provide seats for the same when not actively employed; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 1842) granting a pension to Eliza E. Reed; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1843) to authorize the Philadelphia and Camden Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Delaware River, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 1844) granting an honorable discharge to Jacob L. Neighbarger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 1845) granting a pension to Isaac D. Gregg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1846) granting a pension to J. M. Swift; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1847) for improving the Yamhill River; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompany paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 1848) granting a pension to Julia Weeks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 1849) for the relief of H. A. Eldred; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HIGGINS introduced a bill (S. 1850) making an appropriation to complete the appraisement of improvements of intruders in the Cherokee Nation and to ascertain and adjudicate their rights therein, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HIGGINS. I desire to say that I have not prepared the bill and do not wish to be held responsible for all its provisions. But it is a subject that needs consideration and I have consented to introduce the bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIGGINS introduced a bill (S. 1851) for the relief of Samuel V. B. Strider; which was read twiceby its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LODGE introduced a joint resolution (S.R. 72) to permit Capt. T. O. Selfridge, United States Navy, to receive a decoration conferred upon him by the President of the Republic of France; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. VILAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HOWARD'S PAPER ON THE LABOR PROBLEM.

Mr. KYLE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor 1,000 copies of Miscellaneous Document No. 95, entitled, A Solution of the Labor Problem.

COINAGE OF STANDARD MEXICAN DOLLARS.

Mr. WOLCOTT submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States with a view to encourage and extend our commercial relations with China and other Asiatic countries, be requested to enter into negotiations with the Republic of Mexico, looking to the coinage by the United States, at its mints, of standard Mexican dollars, under some proper agreement with the said Republic of Mexico as to seigniorage, method and amount of said coinage; and that he be further requested to report the result of his negotiations to the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The resolution may lie over until to-morrow, when I shall call it up at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH RUSSIA.

Mr. TURPIE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be requested to consider the expediency of considering the undertaking of further negotiations upon the subject of procuring certain modifications of the existing extradition treaty with the Russian Empire concerning the arrest and extradition of persons charged with offenses designated in said treaty as not political.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4328) for the relief of William B. Chapman, George W. Street, John W. Hoes, Emmet C. Tuthill, and Joseph H. Curtis was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 4954) relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 6042) to authorize sale of lot 8, block 3, city of Hot Springs, by school directors thereof, and use of proceeds for school purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 6110) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Red Wing, Minn., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ISSUE OF BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER March 28, 1894, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to prepare and report as soon as practicable a bill to repeal all laws authorizing or permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government, and to prohibit any and all such issues in future without express authority by act of Congress first had and obtained.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to make a report, which I ask leave to submit at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama to make a report.

BERING SEA AWARD.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a bill, which originated with the committee, to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of fur seals.

I ask that the bill may now receive its first reading in the Senate at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read the first time at length.

The bill (S. 1836) to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals, was read the first time at length, as follows:

Whereas the following articles of the award of the Tribunal of Arbitration constituted under the treaty concluded at Washington the 29th of February, 1892, between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, were delivered to the agents of the respective Governments on the 15th day of August, 1893:

ARTICLE 1.

The Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall forbid their citizens and subjects respectively to kill, capture, or pursue, at any time and in any manner whatever, the animals commonly called fur seals within a zone of 60 miles around the Pribilov Islands, inclusive of the territorial waters.

The miles mentioned in the preceding paragraph are geopraphical miles, of 60 to a degree of latitude.

ARTICLE 2.

The two Governments shall forbid their citizens and subjects respectively to kill, capture, or pursue, in any manner whatever, during the season extending, each year, from the 1st of May to the 31st of July, both inclusive, the fur seals on the high sea, in the part of the Pacific Ocean, inclusive of the Behring Sea, which is situated to the north of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude, and eastward of the one hundred and eightieth degree of longitude from Greenwich till it strikes the water boundary described in article 1 of the treaty of 1867 between the United States and Russia, and following that line up to Behrings Straits.

ARTICLE 3.

During the period of time and in the waters in which the fur-seal fishing is allowed, only sailing vessels shall be permitted to carry on or take part in fur-seal fishing operations. They will, however, be at liberty to avail themselves of the use of such canoes or undecked boats, propelled by paddles, oars, or sails, as are in common use as fishing boats.

ARTICLE 4.

Each sailing vessel authorized to fish for fur seals must be provided with a special license issued for that purpose by its Government, and shall be required to carry a distinguishing flag to be prescribed by its Government.

ARTICLE 5.

The masters of the vessels engaged in fur-seal fishing shall enter accurately in their official log book the date and place of each fur-seal fishing operation, and also the number and sex of the seals captured upon each day. These entries shall be communicated by each of the two governments to the other at the end of each fishing season.

ARTICLE 6.

The use of nets, firearms, and explosives shall be forbidden in the fur-seal fishing. This restriction shall not apply to shotguns when such fishing takes place outside of Behring Sea, during the season when it may be lawfully carried on.

ARTICLE 7.

The two governments shall take measures to control the fitness of the men authorized to engage in fur-seal fishing; these men shall have been proved fit to handle with sufficient skill the weapons by means of which this fishing may be carried on.

ARTICLE 8.

The regulations contained in the preceding articles shall not apply to Indiansdwelling on the coast of the territory of the United States or of Great Britain, and carrying on fur-seal fishing in canoes or undecked boats not transported by or used in connection with other vessels and propelled wholly by paddles, oars or sails and manned by not more than five persons each in the way hitherto practiced by the Indians, provided such Indians are not in the employment of other persons, and provided that when so hunting in canoes or undecked boats, they shall not hunt fur seals outside of territorial waters under contract for the delivery of the skins to any person.

This exemption shall not be construed to affect the municipal law of either country, nor shall it extend to the waters of Behring Sea or the waters of the Aleutian Passes.

Nothing herein contained is intended to interfere with the employment of Indians as hunters or otherwise in connection with fur-sealing vessels as heretofore.

ARTICLE 9.

The concurrent regulations hereby determined with a view to the protection and preservation of the fur seals, shall remain in force until they have been, in whole or in part, abolished or modified by common agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain.

The said concurrent regulations shall be submitted every five years to a new examination, so as to enable both interested governments to consider whether, in the light of past experience, there is occasion for any modification thereof.

Now, therefore, be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no citizen of the United States, or person owing the duty of obedience to the laws or the treaties of the United States, nor any person belonging to or on board of a vessel of the United States, shall kill, capture, or pursue, at any time, or in any manner whatever, outside of territorial waters, any fur seal in the waters surrounding the Pribilov Islands within a zone of 60 geographical miles (60 to a degree of latitude) around said islands, exclusive of the territorial waters.

SEC. 2. That no citizen of the United States, or person above described in section 1 of this act, nor any person belonging to or on board of a vessel of the United States, shall kill, capture, or pursue, in any manner whatever, during the season extending from the 1st day of May to the 31st day of July, both inclusive, in each year, any fur seal on the high seas outside of the zone mentioned in section 1, and in that part of the Pacific Ocean, including Behring Sea, which is situated to the north of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude and to the east of the one hundred and eightieth degree of longitude from Greenwich till it strikes the water boundary described in Article 1 of the treaty of 1867, between the United States and Russia, and following that line up to Behring Straits.

SEC. 3. No citizen of the United States or person above described in the first section of this act shall, during the period and in the waters in which by section 2 of this act the killing of fur seals is not prohibited, use or employ any vessel, nor shall any vessel of the United States be used or employed, in carrying on or taking part in fur-seal fishing operations, other than a sailing vessel propelled by sails exclusively, and such canoes or undecked boats, propelled by paddles, oars, or sails as may belong to and be used in connection with such sailing vessel; nor shall any sailing vessel carry on or take part in such operations without a special license obtained from the Government for that purpose, and without carrying a distinctive flag prescribed by the Government for the same purpose.

SEC. 4. That every master of a vessel licensed under this act to engage in fur-seal fishing operations shall accurately enter in his official log book the date and place of every such operation, and also the number and sex of the seals captured each day; and on coming into port, and before landing cargo, the master shall verify, on oath, such official log book as containing a full and true statement of the number and character of his fur-seal fishing operations, including the number and sex of seals captured; and for any false statement willfully made by a person so licensed by the United States in this behalf he shall be subject to the penalties of perjury; and any seal skins found in excess of the statement in the official log book shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 5. That no person or vessel engaging in fur-seal fishing operations under this act shall use or employ in any such operations, any net, firearm, airgun, or explosive: Provided, however, That this prohibition shall not apply to the use of shotguns in such operations outside of Behring Sea during the season when the killing of fur seals is not there prohibited by this act.

SEC. 6. That the foregoing sections of this act shall not apply to Indians dwelling on the coast of the United States, and taking fur seals in canoes or undecked boats propelled wholly by paddles, oars, or sails, and not transported by or used in connection with other vessels, or manned by more than five persons, in the manner heretofore practiced by the said Indians: Provided, however, That the exception made in this section shall not apply to Indians in the employment of other persons, or who shall kill, capture, or pursue fur seals outside of territorial waters under contract to deliver the skins to other persons, nor to the waters of Behring Sea or of the passes between the Aleutian Islands.

SEC. 7. That the President shall have power to make regulations respecting the special license and the distinctive flag mentioned in this act and regulations otherwise suitable to secure the due execution of the provisions of this act, and from time to time to add to, modify, amend, or revoke such regulations, as in his judgment may seem expedient.

SEC. 8. That, except in the case of a master making a false statement under oath in violation of the provisions of the fourth section of this act, every person guilty of a violation of the provisions of this act, or of the regulations made thereunder, shall for each offense be fined not less than $200, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both; and all vessels, their tackle, apparel, furniture, and cargo, at any time used or employed in violation of this act, or of the regulations made thereunder, shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 9. That any violation of this act, or of the regulations made thereunder, may be prosecuted either in the district court of Alaska or in any district court of the United States in California, Oregon, or Washington.

SEC. 10. That if any unlicensed vessel of the United States shall be found within the waters to which this act applies, and at a time when the killing of fur seals is by this act there prohibited, having on board seal skins or bodies of seals, or apparatus or implements suitable for killing or taking seals; or if any licensed vessel shall be found in the waters to which this act applies, having on board apparatus or implements suitable for taking seals, but forbidden then and there to be used, it shall be presumed that the vessel in the one case and the apparatus or implements in the other was or were used in violation of this act until it is otherwise sufficiently proved.

SEC. 11. That it shall be the duty of the President to cause a sufficient naval force to cruise in the waters to which this act is applicable to enforce its provisions, and it shall be the duty of the commanding officer of any vessel belonging to the naval or revenue service of the United States, when so instructed by the President, to seize and arrest all vessels of the United States found by him to be engaged, used, or employed in the waters last aforesaid in violation of any of the prohibitions of this act, or of any regulations made thereunder, and to take the same, with all persons on board thereof, to the most convenient port in any district of the United States mentioned in this act, there to be dealt with according to law.

SEC. 12. That any vessel or citizen of the United States, or person described in the first section of this act, offending against the prohibitions of this act or the regulations thereunder, may be seized and detained by the naval or other duly commissioned officers of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, but when so seized and detained they shall be delivered as soon as practicable, with any witnesses and proofs on board, to any naval or revenue officer or other authorities of the United States, whose courts alone shall have jurisdiction to try the offense and impose the penalties for the same: Provided, however, That British officers shall arrest and detain vessels and persons as in this section specified only after, by appropriate legislation, Great Britain shall have authorized officers of the United States duly commissioned and instructed by the President to that end to arrest, detain, and deliver to the authorities of Great Britain vessels and subjects of that Government offending against any statutes or regulations of Great Britain enacted or made to enforce the award of the treaty mentioned in the title of this act.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this bill is reported by the unanimous vote of all of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations who were present at the meeting this morning. It is important, and it is so considered by the Government, that action on the bill should be taken at a very early period of time. I ask that the bill may lie on the table and be printed, and I give notice that, after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] upon the tariff bill, I shall ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take the bill up for consideration to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the bill been read the second time?

Mr. MORGAN. It has not been read the second time.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the bill simply proposes to carry into effect the conditions prescribed in the award, it seems to me that there will be no controversy about it; there was none whatever in the committee, and I hope the Senator from Alabama will allow the bill to be considered and the vote taken now, unless he desires to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. DOLPH. There is no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. If there be no objection to that course on the part of any Senator, I shall be very glad indeed to have the Senate consider and pass the bill now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Every Senator has been provided with a copy of this bill substantially as it is now reported, with some slight amendments in harmony with its general purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Alabama indicate the course he desires the bill to take?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a second time by title, and that the Senate then proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama for the second reading and consideration of the bill?

Mr. PEFFER. I have no objection to that if the resolution which I offered a few days ago is permitted to retain its place, so that it will be laid before the Senate to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas that the resolution referred to by him shall retain its place and be laid before the Senate to-morrow morning? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Now I ask that my request may be stated by the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama, that the bill reported by him be now read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the bill was read the second time by its title, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill having been read at length, there is no use in having it again read as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read at length and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama what would be the condition of an American vessel seized by a British vessel for violation of this proposed act and handed over to the authorities of the United States? Section 12 provides that the seized vessel—

Shall be handed over as soon as practicable, with any witnesses and proofs on board, to any naval or revenue officer or other authorities of the United States.

Is there at present an existing law which authorizes a naval officer—this would be done at sea ordinarily—to receive such a vessel and to bring it home for trial? Should there not be a clause making it the duty of the proper officer to whom the vessel was delivered to bring the seized vessel into port?

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator that the bill, as I understand it, carefully provides for the case which he mentions. The seizure, of course, is an act of the executive department of the Government in the execution of law, and that gives to the court of admiralty, or the court designated in this bill, the jurisdiction of the ship, tackle, apparel, and furniture, and also of the persons found upon it, and the court can proceed under the general laws for the confiscation and condemnation of vessels which violate the laws of the United States to the condemnation and sale of such ship.

I will say further to the Senator that, of course, this legislation is expected to be supplemented by corresponding legislation on the part of Great Britain in her Parliament, and that that subject is to-day to be considered in the Parliament of Great Britain. We take it for granted, of course, that the Parliament will enact laws of equal stringency, and conferring upon the courts of Great Britain equal jurisdiction with that conferred by the provisions of this bill. If in any respect that confidence should be disappointed, the Government of the United States will find itself amply provided with laws for the purpose of executing this award; but we have no expectation that Great Britain will in any respect recede from the execution of this award, especially in view of the high example which the Congress of the United States is now about to set, of its willingness in good faith to execute every part and parcel of the award of that tribunal.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to indicate any over-refinement in this matter, but at the same time I want to be quite sure that the committee, who are primarily responsible for this bill, see the point.

The bill provides in section 11, in the first instance, for the seizure and bringing into port of any offender caught red-handed, found in the commission of the offense. It provides that "The commanding officer of any vessel belonging to the naval or revenue service of the United States" may "seize and arrest all vessels of the United States found by him to be engaged, used, or employed in the waters last aforesaid in violation of any of the prohibitions of this act," and take it "to the most convenient port in any district of the United States mentioned in this act, there to be dealt with according to law."

That is all plain sailing. Then, the provision is for the detention in certain cases by the officers of Her Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain, and they are authorized to seize the vessel and to deliver it "to any naval or revenue officer or other authorities of the United States."

That would be done frequently, and perhaps ordinarily, on the high seas. Most nations have cruisers on the sealing grounds. Now, where does the naval officer of the United States in this proceeding, which is a criminal one, and therefore to be construed pretty strictly, get authority to detain until he can bring into port a vessel which he has not seized, which he has not found in the commission of the offense, but which has only been delivered to him by a British officer? Should not section 12 repeat the language of section 11 where it provides that it shall be the duty of such officer to take the vessel "with all persons on board thereof to the most convenient port * * * to be dealt with according to law"?

It seems to me those words should be inserted unless there is some existing provision of law I do not know of which covers it.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts a little more closely to the language of the two sections which he has just read. Section 11 provides that—

All vessels of the United States found by him—

That is, by any officer of the United States—to be engaged, used, or employed in the waters last aforesaid in violation of any of the prohibitions of this act—

Shall be dealt with in a certain way. Section 12 says that—

Any vessel or citizen of the United States offending against the prohibitions of this act—

That is, a vessel in precisely the same circumstances which are described in section 11 taken by a British officer shall be handed over to a United States cruiser, and when handed over the vessel, having been taken in violation of the provisions, of this act, will be in precisely the same situation, it seems to me, that she would have been in the case of an original seizure by the officer of the United States, and that the duty devolved upon them—which is the important thing—will be the same that is prescribed in section 11.

Mr. HOAR. That is undoubtedly the meaning of the bill, but the question is whether that meaning is expressed.

Mr. GRAY. It seems to me it necessarily is so.

Mr. HOAR. My difficulty is—if it be a difficulty—that neither officer has the right to seize any person for a past offense. That can only be done when he finds the offender "engaged, used, or employed in the waters." If the commander of a British cruiser finds such a thing, he seizes the vessel; but suppose he meets an American cruiser on the high seas afterwards, there is no authority to take possession given to the American ship if it has not found the vessel engaged in the criminal and prohibited acts. So it seems to me there should be an express authority.

Mr. MORGAN. I think I can point out to the Senator from Massachusetts that the express authority is this: Section 7 of the bill provides—and that language is also followed up in other subsequent sections:

That the President shall have power to make regulations respecting the special license and the distinctive flag mentioned in this act and regulations otherwise suitable to secure the due execution of the provisions of this act, and from time to time to add to, modify, amend, or revoke such regulations as in his judgment may seem expedient.

That is a power given under the laws of the United States in a great many instances to correspond with the powers which are conferred by the acts of Parliament really upon the privy council, the power to establish regulation. If there is any difficulty at all in the interpretation of this act, if there should be the slightest hesitancy in its execution, it is quite easy for the Secretary of the Treasury to make a regulation to cover the precise state of case which the Senator from Massachusetts supposes.

Moreover, I should like to say that the committee in considering this bill and all those who have had conferences about it—and they have been very numerous and very close, including some of the ablest lawyers in the United States, and one of the gentlemen who was most eminent in conducting the case before the Tribunal of Arbitration has been consulted about this matter, and he has passed a very critical judgment upon every word in this bill—have found it necessary to leave open several matters that might be suggested in the way of administration under this bill for regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill must have, of course, that degree of flexibility, so that the regulations can be accommodated to a number of questions and a number of persons who are included within the purview of its provisions; for instance, in regard to the Indians on the coast of North America, both in the British Possessions and in the United States, who have rights guaranteed to them under this award of hunting for fur seal under certain specific conditions and at certain times and places, regulations are very essential, of course, to accommodate this bill to the peculiarities of these different tribes, and also to provide in respect of our own laws such changes as may be found necessary in the nature of restrictions upon the different tribes of Indians, so as to permit them to go out and exercise the privileges which they enjoy under this bill. So that we have left included quite a number of matters which fell within the power of regulation to the discretion of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have observed in my humble professional experience when one good lawyer, like the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], is responsible for the drafting of an instrument it is always more thoroughly done; but when ten of the best lawyers that can be found put their heads together, there is almost always some defect in the instrument, each of them abating a good deal of his own circumspection because of his reliance on the others. I therefore am not in the least impressed by the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Alabama, that a good many other gentlemen whom he has consulted think this bill is all right. If he had said he had examined it himself, or drawn it himself, and was responsible for its being all right, I should take it almost without criticism, but as it is, I think I shall venture to move an amendment at the end of line 5, of section 12, which certainly can not do any harm, and can not be objected to. I move, after the words "on board," to insert "to be dealt with as hereinbefore provided."

Mr. MORGAN. I have not the slightest objection to that amendment, but I think it is included in the language of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. It may be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the bill had passed beyond the third reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment can be made only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Chair to announce that the bill was in the Senate. I did not understand that it had been passed to a third reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has so announced.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move to reconsider.

Mr. FRYE. That can be done by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair had announced the third reading of the bill. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts can be considered only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like the amendment to be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 12, line 5, after the words "on board," it is proposed to insert "to be dealt with as hereinbefore provided."

Mr. MORGAN. And a comma to be inserted after the word "provided."

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been waiting for an opportunity to interpose an objection to the passage of so important a bill as this to-day. I have not been able to hear the colloquy between the learned chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], also a member of that committee, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. No doubt that colloquy was interesting to them, but it could not be heard in this part of the Chamber. I inquired for a copy of the bill in order that I might acquire a knowledge by reading which I was unable to get by the ear, but I find the bill has not been printed for the use of the Senate.

I suggest to the Senator from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, after such amendments as Senators choose to offer and find acceptance with the committee are adopted, it will be more satisfactory to the whole Senate. I doubt not, if the bill can be printed and allowed to go over until to-morrow, when a final vote can be taken thereon. It does not seem to me that so utterly unprecedented action ought to be taken by the Senate in reference to a bill which contains penal clauses of the most stringent character applicable to citizens of the United States. It is a bill making regulations in connection with the fisheries, creating crime, and declaring statutory penalties against American citizens.

I do not wish to unduly delay a body which is so noted as the Senate is for the celerity with which it transacts business, but I do feel that I should like to see a copy of the bill before the final vote is taken thereon. Therefore, if at this time an objection can be interposed to the request for unanimous consent, I wish to interpose an objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the condition of the bill. The bill has been read the third time and the question now is upon its passage. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment proposed by him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to that amendment, but I shall ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not desire to object, but it seems to me a better form for the request for unanimous consent would be, that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading be reconsidered, so that the bill may be open to amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is right.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the bill was passed to a third reading be reconsidered, and that the bill be open to amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is barely possible some other Senators may desire to offer amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]?

Mr. FRYE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. MORGAN. When I had the honor to report the bill this morning, I found myself upon a sort of tidal wave of Senatorial anxiety to have the bill immediately considered. It was not my purpose when I brought the bill in here to have it considered at this hour of to-day, but to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it might be considered at some time during the day. All Senators, I think, have been provided with copies of the substantial parts of the bill and have had an opportunity to consider it. The case, as I have stated, is in an international sense an emergency case, and therefore I have very quietly gone along with the Senate in permitting the consideration of a measure all the features of which and the necessity for the enactment of which are perfectly understood by this body.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish simply to make an inquiry. I see in the beginning of the twelfth section these words:

> Any vessel or citizen of the United States offending against the prohibitions of this act or the regulations thereunder may be seized and detained by the naval or other duly commissioned officers of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain.

I desire to inquire whether that is an authority usually given to a foreign country, to arrest and detain American citizens. It seems to me it is rather an unusual provision of law.

Mr. GRAY. Let me refer—if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CULLOM. I make the inquiry merely for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is a character of legislation such as is usually enacted by Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this is a very unusual proceeding, through and through. Some great publicists have styled it as an epoch in the history of diplomatic association or relation between foreign governments, having for its object the substitution of methods of settlement of great international controversies that will be peaceable and satisfactory and will not lead to war. A very similar condition existed about the time of the establishment of the Constitution, when the slavery question was taken up in the Constitution itself and a provision was made against bringing slaves into this country after the year 1808. The Governments of Great Britain and the United States entered into treaties with each other for the suppression of the slave trade, and they went on with a series of treaties. In the course of their diplomatic agreements they made provisions very similar to the one which is contained in the pending bill—provisions which are necessary in all cases where concurrent action, whether by convention or by legislation between two governments, is found to be necessary in order to execute a common purpose.

It will be seen by the third article of the treaty with Great Britain as late as 1870, that before that time this same thing had occurred at various times:

> It is agreed that in case of an American merchant vessel searched by a British cruiser, being detained as having been engaged in the African slave trade, or as having been fitted out for the purposes thereof, she shall be sent to New York or Key West, whichever shall be most accessible for adjudication, or shall be handed over to an United States cruiser, if one should be available in the neighborhood of the capture: and that in the corresponding case of a British merchant vessel searched by an United States cruiser, being detained as having been engaged in the African slave trade, or as having been fitted out for the purposes thereof, she shall be sent for adjudication to the nearest or most accessible British colony, or shall be handed over to a British cruiser, if one should be available in the neighborhood of the capture.

Now, in this particular section of the proposed act in execution of the general purposes of this award, which are the protection and preservation of the fur seal (that is the great purpose of this treaty and of the award; in fact, it is the only purpose), this method of arrest has been adopted corresponding to those provisions which attended the effort of these two great governments to suppress the slave trade. The bill, however, contains a provision that this part of the proposed act shall not be in force until Great Britain shall have authorized the seizure by American ships of British vessels, to be carried into British ports. We, of course, expect that that will be done. If it is not done this provision of section 12 will be null and nugatory. I hope that is a satisfactory explanation, both upon principle and upon precedent, of the question asked me by the Senator from Illinois.

I wish to state what I understand to be the status of the bill. The bill passed its third reading. Thereupon the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked unanimous consent that he might move an amendment to the bill. That consent was granted, and the amendment was made without objection. That is what I understand to be the situation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that when the Chair inquired if there was objection, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] obtained the floor and, without stating that he objected, addressed the Senate. That left the matter somewhat undetermined in the mind of the Chair. The Chair has not yet announced that the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know the importance of passing the bill, and I suggest to my friend from Alabama, that I do not believe any Senator here, when he reads the bill as it stands, will object to it. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I may say it meets the entire approval of the Secretary of State. Still, there is a little feeling on this side of the Chamber that Senators have not yet had an opportunity to read the bill. I think, under the circumstances, he had better consent, whether the rule requires it or not, that the bill go over until to-morrow, to be taken up immediately after the Journal is read, because I think every Senator must feel the importance of acting upon these regulations under the award which has been made.

Mr. MORGAN. In the course of four hours, at any rate, I can have the bill printed and back on the desks of Senators.

Mr. GEORGE. That will do.

Mr. MORGAN. It is very important, as we all understand, that the bill should be passed to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then let it go over.

Mr. TELLER. Why not pass it this afternoon?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Alabama to allow me to say a word. I did not intend to criticise him for urging the consideration of the bill at this hour, because the suggestion that he should proceed with it at this time came from the Senator from Ohio. I do not see any reason why the bill can not be considered later in the afternoon, or even this evening, but I do protest against the passage of a penal statute of this kind without an opportunity on the part of Senators to read the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator from Alabama permit an interruption for a moment? I do not know what was done with the request for unanimous consent made by myself a few minutes ago, that the vote by which the bill was passed to a third reading be reconsidered.

Mr. GRAY. It was objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that an objection was interposed to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire simply to state that in my brief experience in this body I have known but two instances where, a bill having passed to a third reading without a yea-and-nay vote, a request for unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote made instantly afterwards was refused. One instance occurred a few days ago with reference to what is termed the seigniorage bill, and the effort there I need not refer to except to say that the purpose of the motion to reconsider was that the bill might be rid of some of its ambiguities, which certainly was desirable in view of the veto message which has been lately received. This is the second effort in that regard.

The pending bill was called up without many Senators upon the floor realizing its full import, its effect, its great importance. It is, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has stated, a statute with penal clauses, designed undoubtedly to carry out an existing treaty; I am in accord with the general purposes of the bill. I see the necessity for dispatch in its passage; but I knew nothing of the bill until this morning, and then I received in the usual envelope of the State Department a copy of the bill marked "confidential, subject to amendment." The bill, I understand, has received certain amendments, but what their character is I do not know. There was a colloquy here almost in an undertone that certainly those who were within easy distance did not appreciate or understand.

It seems to me it is no more than fair that the bill shall be placed where it may yet be open to amendment, back to the amendment stage of all bills, and that it be passed over until a later hour in the day, that we may have a chance to examine it and see whether amendments should be proposed. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire or myself can be charged with any desire to cause a delay that is unnecessary, but we do desire on legislation so important as that proposed in the pending bill that we may have an opportunity to consider it and not take the mere word of the Secretary of State that it is desirable, or even the word, without report, of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand the Senator from Alabama is willing to allow the bill to go over for the present and be printed with the hope of getting it up later this evening. The Senate having given unanimous consent for its consideration, however, I think relieves it from any objection to going on with it. I need not suggest to my friend from Nebraska that he has no occasion to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course I can move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HARRIS. A motion by the Senator to that effect will be in order, as he knows very well.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator knows that quite as well as I. But it seems to me all the trouble is obviated by the consent of the Senator from Alabama to allow the bill to go over until a later hour this evening, and be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I was going to make that suggestion, Mr. President. The Senate has seen of course that I have not been pressing the bill with this very remarkable haste, as it is termed, to its passage, nor has any Senator pressed it without due consideration and without there being a great public necessity, as is conceived, for the early action of the Senate upon the bill.

I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] upon the tariff bill, and after the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] shall have taken the floor, as I believe he intends to do, the Senate proceed to the further consideration of the bill, leaving it precisely in the attitude it is now until that time shall have arrived.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first inquire if there is objection to the amendment to the bill proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that is a question which ought to be considered on a little broader plane than just one single amendment. I suggest that the bill be understood as being open to amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall not consent to that. I have been forced into an attitude that I can not recede from.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the third reading of the bill was ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand whether the amendment I proposed has been acceded to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that it be read, so that we may have some idea of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill by adding after the words "on board," in the fifth line of section 12, the following:

To be dealt with as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I object. I have no bill before me, and I can not tell what is the effect of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, as the Senator from Alabama proposes to have the bill printed and go over, that the question on the motion to reconsider had better be taken after the bill is printed and again called up, and not now.

Mr. ALDRICH. My motion will be pending then.

Mr. HOAR. With the Senator's motion pending. I understand that is agreeable to everybody.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the bill going over with the motion to reconsider pending.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. When do I understand the Senator from Alabama intends to have the bill taken up?

Mr. MORGAN. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana on the tariff bill and after the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] shall have taken the floor.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Before the Senator from Indiana proceeds with his remarks, I desire to inquire of him whether the bill upon which he is about to address the Senate has been printed in the form in which it was promised it should be printed before the bill came up for discussion?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes. I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania and to the Senate that the bill has been printed in comparison with existing law and with the bill as it came from the other House. The bill in that form is now in the room of the Committee on Finance and can be supplied to any Senator who wishes a copy. I presume it is on the desk of every Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the chairman of the committee will permit me, I do not think the comparison has yet been printed. At least, I have not seen it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg pardon, I think the Senator from Rhode Island will find it.

Mr. MILLS. I have it here.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is not the comparison; it is simply the bill itself.

Mr. VOORHEES. I myself am in error, then, as to the information which the Senator will find in the Finance Committee room. I think the messenger of the committee will inform him that it is there.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may be in the Finance Committee room, but I have never seen it, and it has not been laid on the desks of Senators.

Mr. VOORHEES. As the Senator from Rhode Island is a member of the Finance Committee, he can very easily see it if he goes to the committee room.

Mr. HOAR. What is this copy?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is not a comparison with existing law. It is merely a comparison of the rates of the bill, not a comparison of the text with existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, I will state that I think the comparison contemplated last week has not yet been printed. I understand it requires some little time to prepare it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I have been misinformed.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that within a day, probably, the original text of the present law, with the bill as it came from the other House and the Senate amendments, will be printed in form.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that has not been prepared and will not be perhaps for a day.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Iowa be kind enough to call a page and send him to the room of the Committee on Finance and ask for the publication which arrived there this morning? I have not examined it myself, but I am under the impression that it is the comparison referred to.

Mr. ALLISON. Is this to what the Senator from Indiana refers? [Exhibiting].

Mr. VOORHEES. It is not that.

Mr. HOAR. Here it is. I have just sent to the committee room for it, and this is the publication brought me.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to state to the Senator in charge of the bill that I called at the Finance Committee room and found this is the only document printed. So I think the Senator is mistaken as to the comparative text.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well; I have been misinformed, then. I do not wish to interfere with the matter which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has in hand, although I do desire to go on with the discussion of the tariff bill at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. All I desire is that the unfinished business, the bill to provide for the destruction and extermination of the Russian thistle, shall not lose its place on the Calendar as the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will at the proper time lay before the Senate the unfinished business. The hour has not yet arrived. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order, and the first bill on the Calendar will be announced.

VOLUNTEERS IN INDIAN WAR.

The bill (S. 743) for the relief of the citizens of the States of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington who served with the United States troops in the war against the Nez Perces and Bannock and Shoshone Indians, and for the relief of the heirs of those killed in such service, and for other purposes, was announced as the first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DUBOIS. In the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] I ask that the bill go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The bill (H. R. 3246) for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROCTOR. In the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], who reported the bill, I suggest that it go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 971) to open, widen, and extend alleys in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read at length. It has been amended, and it is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read again for the information of the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

FORMS OF DEEDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 832) to simplify the form of deeds of conveyance, trust, and releases of land in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 37) to provide for the printing of the history and digest of international arbitrations to which the United States was a party, and for other purposes.

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically Salsola kali tragus.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] may address the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the motion is not debatable, but I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Tennessee. The bill which has been the unfinished business for some days will probably not take a very great length of time, and I hope the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Tennessee will make some reasonable adjustment about it, so that it may be understood that the bill can be reached at an early day.

Mr. HARRIS. I am unalterably opposed to the bill the Senator from North Dakota has in charge, but if there shall be a gap at any time during the consideration of the tariff bill where the bill for the destruction of the Russian thistle can be considered and disposed of, I will cooperate with the Senator from North Dakota to give him his day in court. My object, however, is to make the tariff bill the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator's object.

Mr. HARRIS. It is my object to hold it as such, and that whatever other bills may be considered shall be considered by consent of the Senate. I will cooperate with the Senator from North Dakota at any moment that can be conveniently spared to complete the consideration of the bill in his charge.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that the unfinished business be allowed to remain upon the Calendar as the unfinished business, so that I may ask unanimous consent at the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning, before 2 o'clock, to take it up and consider it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I can not afford to allow the great tariff bill to play second fiddle to the thistle bill. I shall interpose no objection if the Senator from North Dakota will get the floor during the morning hour to-morrow and ask for the consideration of the bill. I will cooperate with him to secure its consideration at that time.

Mr. VOORHEES. So will I.

Mr. MILLS (to Mr. HANSBROUGH). You will have no trouble about it.

Mr. HARRIS. But the tariff bill must become the unfinished business now or a majority of the Senate must decide that it shall not so become.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota, if he will permit me, that he ask unanimous consent that the thistle bill be taken up to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the routine business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Russian thistle bill is a measure intended to preserve and foster the institution of agriculture in this country, and that the bill the Senator from Tennessee refers to, the tariff bill, is a measure which, in my judgment at least, is intended to destroy it, I yield to superior force.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me a single second?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. In accordance with his suggestion, I have inquired at the Finance Committee room and I there found that the bill printed in the form suggested by the Senator the other day, that is, a comparison of the text of the bill as reported from the committee with the existing law, has not yet been received by the committee and they do not know when it will be received.

Mr. HARRIS. In this connection, if the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I will state that I was informed by one of the experts who is engaged on this particular matter, that within the next day or two the work will be completed and the print upon our desks.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that is very well understood.

Mr. HOAR. I think the pending bill should be read in full.

Mr. ALDRICH and others. Oh; no.

Mr. MILLS. I hope we may have order in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to refrain from conversation. The Chair was unable to hear the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Massachusetts requested the reading of the bill at length.

Mr. HOAR. I made no request. I called for the enforcement of the ordinary rule of the Senate, that when a bill is taken up it shall be read. If the Senator from Indiana desires to proceed with his remarks at this time I shall make no objection to a request for unanimous consent that the reading be postponed until he shall have concluded; but after what we have heard I think we are entitled to proceed in an orderly way.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, which is very often done.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Then let the Senator from Indiana proceed, and afterwards the bill may be read line by line and word by word.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I proposed, if the Senator from Indiana prefers that course. He has not stated whether that course will be more agreeable to him.

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course I prefer to go on now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the Senator from Indiana shall proceed with his remarks and that the bill shall be read at length after he has concluded?

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. TELLER. Or at some other time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Or at some other time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, great abuses in government, strong by the sanction and growth of years, embedded in the powerful interests of privileged classes, created, fostered, encouraged, and protected by the laws themselves, have rarely, if ever in any age, been promptly and totally eradicated except by forcible revolution and bloodshed. Such is the concurrent and unbroken testimony of history. The spirit of peaceful and practical reform, on the other hand, is a reasoning and progressive spirit, moving forward, step by step, no matter how radical and thorough its ends and aims may be, and overcoming the most gigantic evils with patient wisdom and courage, rather than by violent and wholesale assault.

The protective system of tariff taxation as developed and fastened upon the business and labor of the American people, especially during the third of a century past, growing worse at every stage, is a system of indescribable injustice and oppression; and yet who will contend that all its vicious principles and workings, ramified as they are through every branch of trade and commerce, can be annihilated by a single blow, or totally wiped out by a single legislative enactment? For the bill now under consideration no such claim is made, but in its behalf can be truthfully asserted, and will be successfully maintained, that it accomplishes a vast work in the field of tariff reform, embodies a great relief to the people from iniquitous existing burdens, and constitutes a long stride, though not a final one, towards the approaching day of a full and perfect deliverance.

Sir, I challenge the attention of the Senate and the country to the great and commanding fact that by the provisions of this bill the seeming paradox of a reduction of taxes and at the same time an increase of public revenues will be reconciled when it becomes a law. I will not stop to consider at this point the vast individual robberies committed in protected markets, the untold and incalculable millions of blackmail levied by American manufacturers for their own pockets on their enforced customers when cut off from all outside competition; it is enough for my present purpose to say that we have liberalized American markets, made them more accessible to the traffic of the world, and, while not establishing free trade, we have made trade freer and more even-handed between the manufacturer and the consumer. But over and above and beyond this wide and well-known field of extortion and injustice, it will be found from the schedules of this bill that tariff taxes now officially ascertained and paid under existing law on the wants, necessities, and daily consumption of the laboring men, women, and children of the United States, have been reduced more than seventy-six millions per annum. These reductions are as follows:

On chemicals	$1,000,000
On pottery	1,900,000
On glass	1,500,000
On metals	12,500,000
On wood	300,000
On tobacco	3,300,000
On agricultural products	3,300,000
On spirits, wines, etc	1,500,000
On cotton manufactures	3,450,000
On flax, hemp, and jute manufactures	6,000,000
On woolen manufactures	23,500,000
On silk manufactures	3,500,000
On paper and pulp	300,000
On sundries	2,450,000
Transferred to the free list	12,170,000
Total	76,670,000

To this must be added the further imposing fact that the bill provides for a full and ample revenue, largely in excess of present supplies, with which to meet all the requirements of the public credit. Such a consummation as this, so full of relief to the people and of strength, safety, and honor to the Government, may well atone for the imperfections and shortcomings alleged against the pending measure, and will constitute the rock on which the temple of tariff reform will be built, and against which, in the ameliorated future, the gates of avarice, oppression, and fraud shall not prevail. With such a beneficent and stupendous result now plainly within the reach of the American people, and almost ready for their eager enjoyment, I envy not the fate of the party, nor the man, nor the set of men who shall constitute themselves a hindrance and an obstruction to its speedy fulfillment.

Faults and imperfections can, of course, be alleged and pointed out; concessions are apparent which have been unwillingly made, and only when found absolutely necessary, in order to secure its passage; articles on the free list as they came from the House have been made dutiable under the duress of a small majority here, yet, deeply as I regret the necessity for these changes, and earnestly as I opposed them, I do not hesitate to say that the bill, taken as a whole as it now stands, with its combination of lower taxes on the necessaries of life, and at the same time increased revenues for the Government, will be hailed as a substantial measure of reform and relief by the great producing masses of the American people.

In fact, the average rate of duty, advalorem, on all articles made dutiable in the pending Senate bill, and in spite of all changes made by the Senate Committee on Finance, is lower than in the Wilson bill when it left the House and came to this body. This officially ascertained fact is overwhelming in its character and shall not be lost sight of.

At this point I submit an estimate of the expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1895, made in official quarters from the best data obtainable up to date. It may be stated as follows:

Civil and miscellaneous	$90,000,000.00
War	55,000,000.00
Navy	33,000,000.00
Indians	9,000,000.00
Pensions	145,000,000.00
Interest	29,000,000.00
Postal service, including $5,971,736.89 deficiency in postal revenues	90,399,485.33
Making a total of	451,399,485.33

To meet the appropriations made necessary by the foregoing estimates, I here place before the Senate the estimated revenues which are expected to accrue under the provisions of the bill now before us:

Internal revenue under present law	$160,000,000
Additions made by the pending bill:
Income tax	30,000,000
Spirits	20,000,000
Cards	3,000,000
Customs	163,361,000
Miscellaneous	20,000,000
Postal service	84,427,766
Total	480,788,766

Sir, it will here be seen that the Committee on Finance of this body has taken a bond of fate, as it were, that no harm shall come to the credit and financial honor of the Government. The criticisms which assailed the bill as it came from the House because it created a deficiency in the Treasury no longer apply. We present a measure full freighted with revenue for every call that can be made on the Republic at home and abroad, and with a surplus besides of $20,389,245. Sir, there is no terror to me in a surplus like this. On the contrary, it is a source of safety, and can at any time be wisely and honorably devoted to the best purposes of good government, the payment of debts, and the stoppage of interest. It can also be reduced by a revision of tariff rates whenever found necessary. My greatest apprehension in public affairs is a deficiency in the finances and consequently in the power of the Government to maintain its honor and to hold its head high among the nations of the earth. On this point we feel that we have made the future secure, while at the same time we have made lighter the burdens of the people. Nor do we disguise from ourselves the fact that we are under very positive instructions in regard to the reform of tariff taxation.

The appalling legislation of 1890, known as the McKinley law, unlimited in its scope and purposes of spoliation and plunder, created a necessity for relief more immediate and absolute than was ever before known in American history, and the people issued their instructions at the ballot box accordingly. At the same time the riotous extravagance of the party then in power, taking an overflowing Treasury from an outgoing Democratic Administration in March, 1889, and leaving it practically bankrupt four years later, imposed upon those who are now responsible for the support of the Government the imperious duty of providing against ugly deficiencies and impending national dishonor. In reaching results of such magnitude and importance as these, and in carrying out the interests and declared wishes of toiling millions as contradistinguished from powerful and favored classes, obstacles have of course been encountered gigantic in size, arrogant, insolent, dictatorial, and in some instances sinister, perfidious, and dishonest in character. This fact could not be otherwise under the protective system which has for so many years prevailed in this country. The natural selfishness of the human heart, prone to avarice and greed as sparks to fly upward, has been educated, developed, fed, nourished, pampered here on American soil by the Government itself, until it now stands not only revealed, but confessed as a giant robber, a predatory monster, obstructing the highways of legislation, and challenging legislators themselves to stand and deliver.

Manufacturing interests, which a hundred years ago were indeed and in fact in their infancy, and were nursed and fostered while yet in the cradle of their birth, are now the colossal taskmasters of the whole people, commanding tribute from every day's labor beneath the sun, haughtily striding the corridors of this Capitol, and issuing their edicts in the tones of dictators for or against the enactment of pending measures in the Halls of Congress. Those who own and represent these swollen and arrogant interests do not hesitate to declare on what terms a bill vitally affecting 70,000,000 of people will be permitted to become a law, and in default of what provisions for financial profits to themselves they will insure its defeat. In the hard-working days of attempted tariff reform they are met everywhere, and, as a rule, bear themselves as favorites of power generally do.

A great specialty is their persistent and imperious demand to be heard. It is true they and their predecessors have been heard on the same monotonous topic of monopoly in trade for more than a century; they themselves have said at this session and at the other end of the Capitol all they could possibly say in behalf of their huge gains, and it is printed for public use. The old stereotyped theme of Government protection for the lust of riches has long since been exhausted; not a new word or thought on the subject from their standpoint is now possible; time is precious and delay ruinous on the subject of tariff legislation to the business of the whole country; yet in spite of all these things they assume an injured air, and raise a dismal clamor because they have not been allowed to occupy from January to November of the present year in giving dictatorial instructions and edicts to the Senate Committee on Finance in behalf of their own unworthy, unmanly, unchristian desires to commit extortion in markets protected from free and open competition. They are also wholly and absolutely unmindful of the fact that every laboring man and woman in the United States, numbering millions while the protected few number only by thousands, has a vastly higher right and interest to be heard in his or her self-defense against iniquitous taxation than any manufacturer can possibly have in favor of the right to plunder by law.

The farmer, the mechanic, the wage-worker, and the manifold producers of every kind come not here; they have neither time nor money to spare from their busy, overworked lives; they can not visit the lobbies of Congress to argue their side of the case; their careworn, sunburnt faces have never been seen in the purlieus or in the hurried, heated, anxious haunts of unhallowed avarice; their hard, toil-worn hands are not grasped or felt in salutation as we struggle through waylaying crowds from committee room to the door of the Senate; the labor element, on which protected monopoly preys ravenously and unceasingly, is absent from the precincts of this Capitol, and well the millionaire beneficiaries of protection know that their victims on farm, field, and ranch; in workshop, mine, and furnace; on railroads, rivers, and in every toiling pursuit in which bread is honestly earned, can never confront them here and demand a division of time in discussion before the committee. The favorites of fortune, pets of vicious legislation; those to whom the Government has farmed out the power of oppression over others, take no heed of the rights, the protests, the sufferings, or the servitude of the mighty masses who constitute the nation's strength and glory.

To the thoroughly protected and self-complacent American manufacturer, sole master of his own market and incarnation of human selfishness, his enforced customers, those to whom he sells at his own protected price, have a value, as slaves once had to their owners. Not more than four days in the week belong to the laborer himself under tariff laws as they now stand; every hour of the other two days are absorbed in paying the manufacturer's increased prices on the necessaries of life which a protective tariff guarantees.

Sir, can there be any wonder that protected classes, and protected individuals, who have been, as it were, taken into partnership by the Government, every one of them, should break out into vehement protest and angry outcry when touched and disturbed by the spirit of reform and equitable legislation? The only policy, the only request of a practical protectionist is to be let alone in the enjoyment of the highest duty and the fattest bounty the Government can give. He makes himself an obstacle to change from no other or higher consideration than sordid, brutal selfishness.

Whatever may be his line of manufacture, from hooks and eyes to machinery for ships, from pins and needles to the wearing apparel of the human race, he cries out against all competition or interference with his prices, not that his love of country or of humanity is shocked or offended, but simply that his lust for riches takes alarm. Nothing in the condition of his fellowmen, or even in the laws of nature, ever deters or diverts him from his intense pursuit of worldly gain. It is told by an old chronicler as an incident of the great fire which swept London almost out of existence in 1666, that when the flames were in their fiercest wrath, carrying consternation and ruin into every quarter and every home, and the people, pale-faced and panic-stricken, were struggling to and fro in the crowded streets, a thrifty, economical-looking huckster was seen with his basket, diligently inquiring the price of kidney beans, which he had to sell. The only fault he found with the fire was that it interfered with his trade. This is the only fault which a protected manufacturer ever finds with anything. He must sell his kidney beans at a high price whatever else may happen.

It is perhaps no more than just, however, to state in this connection that there is one circumstance which mitigates, to some extent at least, the obstructive avarice, at all times and everywhere so vehemently displayed by the protected manufacturer. The Government itself, or rather the party leaders who have administered it during the past generation, are more to blame than he is. By bad laws they have tempted him beyond his power to resist and by an elaborate and skillful system for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many, they have opened the way for him to commit crime with impunity every day and hour of his existence by robbing his fellow beings under the forms of law. He has the license of the Government for monopoly and extortion—a license issued and reissued, multiplied and supplemented in a thousand ways, authorizing him to rule markets, oppress labor, and get enormously rich.

The enactment of the McKinley law in 1890 was a gigantic crime, not only against every working man and working woman in the United States, but also against every individual manufacturer, and against all manufacturing interests. It was not so designed by its authors, but such was its real and inevitable character. It declared a policy so flagitious in principle, so rotten in morality, and so ravenous in its exactions on the absolute wants of life, that its possible duration was only a question of time when the next election by the people should occur, and yet the vast manufacturing interests of the country were tempted and seduced into accepting its delusive bribes, and into an eager adjustment of themselves to its alluring, though evanescent, and short-lived provisions.

The most needed feature of tariff taxation is permanency, at reasonable rates for revenue, and with a due regard to the business and commerce of the country. The McKinley law was necessarily an unstable, unsafe measure; it was a reckless, foolhardy experiment on the forbearance of the American people; it had no precedent in American history for its rash and insolent assault on the toiling masses; it dealt in dizzy heights and in profound depths, and placed tariff duties on foreign goods, seeking our markets for sale to our people, at prohibitory rates; it provoked the wrath of the people, and the condemnation of Divine justice. And now that we are compelled to repeal and tear down this odious structure of evil legislation, it is some compensation for intense labor and anxiety to hear it often bitterly cursed by the most intelligent business men we meet as having been to them a delusion and a snare. Our purpose is to replace the law of 1890 with a measure of reform, safe, conservative, and harmonious in itself, and to which all the wholesome and legitimate industries of the country will speedily adapt themselves, and tenaciously cling for secure development and undisturbed growth in the future. If this can be done without needless delay, an era of prosperity will dawn upon all the diversified interests of the country such as has never been surpassed in our history.

In considering, however, the obstacles which assail every effort at tariff reform, the specious plea made by the manufacturer for the alleged protection of his employed labor can not be ignored or overlooked. Brazen as the manufacturing classes have become, after a hundred years of Government caress, endearment, and untinted bounty, they are at last ashamed to plead infancy any longer or to ask further protection and Government alms as minors in the manufacturing manhood of the world. Like the Greek soothsayers of old, who laughed in each other's faces when they met, American manufacturers can not keep straight countenances when talking together of infant industries. They have, in the main, abandoned that old, stale, worn-out plea, and adopted another more enticing in sound but equally deceptive and false in substance. They are now masquerading here and all over the United States as missionaries in the cause of labor; they make most earnest appeals to Congress to protect them in a monopoly of trade and in amassing great riches in order, as they declare, that they can, and will, pay increased wages, and give a more generous care to those who work in their employment.

Nothing could be more sublime than benevolent professions like these, if they were found to be sincere and true; but on the other hand, the lowest depths of human depravity may be raked in vain for a baser or more infamous scheme by which to obtain money dishonestly, when it is found after thorough investigation and long experience that the pretense of benevolence, or even of justice to labor, is absolutely and corruptly false.

Sir, I stand here to deny that it can be shown anywhere since the Republican party came into power thirty-three years ago, that the wages of a working man or woman, in furnace, factory, or delving mine, has ever kept pace with increased tariff rates, or indeed had any increase at all, on account of high protective tariff legislation. I challenge any Senator, or any workingman, or any assumed representative of workingmen, to show a single instance in the history of a protective tariff, where labor was ever recognized in a division of profits, where it was recognized in proportion to increased tariff duties, or where it was ever taken into consideration at all on pay day on account of the highest protective tariff legislation ever known.

Millionaire manufacturers now profess a deep concern for the wages and the welfare of their employés, but will anyone in their behalf point out what law or provision of law, during a century's experience, they have ever suggested for the protection of their employed people in the duration of their contracts, their right to living wages, or even for the certain payment of what they earn? We are asked here to enable the manufacturer to amass money unjustly from farmers and their families in order that he can pay another class of workers better wages. On the contrary, all history shows that not a dollar extorted by the tariff ever goes beyond the pocket of the protected manufacturer, or reaches the cheerless home and stinted income of his employed wage-worker.

If the reward of labor had ever been increased as an incident or consequence of increased tariff duties on foreign imports, nothing would be easier or more gracious to the advocates and beneficiaries of protection than to show that fact. The very reverse, however, is true. It can never be forgotten that the enactment of the McKinley law in October, 1890, was followed almost immediately by a reduction of the wages of all workers in iron and steel, beginning at Homestead, in Pennsylvania, under Carnegie, resulting in bloodshed and wholesale murder, and extending to all parts of the country and to almost every branch of manufacturing industry.

Manufacturers of iron and steel were especially favored by the law of 1890, and they talked then, as they do now, about the necessity of high protection for themselves in order to enable them to better pay their hired labor. They plead then, as they do now, for more money for themselves on the pretense that they would divide with the men and women who toiled in their service. The whole world has taken notice, not only of their falsehood and perfidy, but also of the ghastly results which followed. Wage reductions, strikes, lockouts, and labor strifes of all kinds contending for fair treatment at the hands of capital in every branch of manufacturing, have never been so prevalent in American history as since October 4, 1890, when the McKinley bill became a law.

A compilation of facts on this subject, of the most remarkable and startling character, has been made by the Hon. JOHN DE WITT WARNER, an able and distinguished member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York. It is shown by him in chronological order, beginning in October, 1890, that within the next two years, the McKinley law all the while prevailing, more than five hundred strikes and violent contentions between labor and capital on the subject of wages took place in various States in the Union; almost an average of one strike or collision for each and every working day during that entire period.

Such have been the hideous fruits borne for labor by the highest protective tariff ever known in this country. Uproar and strife, from day to day, have marked the relations between protected capital and unprotected labor, while the homes of the industrious poor have been filled with distress, often with actual want, and sometimes with murder. The most needed legislation in our statute books now is a strong and carefully prepared chapter giving legal security in the courts and before boards of arbitration, to helpless, oppressed, and outraged labor in its dealings with capital; capital made oppressive, insolent, intolerant, and intolerable by the protection it receives from the Government. An enactment like this, by reason of its overshadowing importance, must be a separate work, and can not be long delayed. In the mean time, I arraign those who hinder and obstruct tariff reform in the name of protection to labor, as shams and betrayers of the people and of the truth.

Of the more than six millions of people employed in the manufacturing establishments of the entire country from ocean to ocean, not one has ever appeared before Congress, or any committee of Congress, or made response in any public meeting, stating that his employer, upon the enactment of higher rates of duty on imports, ever gave or suggested to give him a farthing's increase of pay for his work. What the wage-worker wants, and of right should have, is not the false promise and false pretense of manufacturers pleading in his name for their own enrichment, but the solid protection of law against the instability of his contracts, the uncertain duration of his employment, and the fluctuating rates of his wages.

SHALL DUTIES BE MADE SPECIFIC OR AD VALOREM?

Another objection, however, persistently urged against the pending bill as it has been reported from the Finance Committee of the Senate claims attention at this point. There are two directly opposing policies in regard to the proper method of levying import duties which fall as a tax on purchasers and consumers. One policy demands that specific rates, as they are known shall be levied on importations without reference to their value, but according to quantity or mere description. This is the favorite device of high protection. It completely covers from the plain tax paying people the actual amount they have to pay. For instance, who except a tariff expert with pencil in hand can tell how much per cent on actual value the purchaser pays when he buys matting made of cocoa fiber or rattan, with a duty on it of 12 cents per square yard, or mats made of the same material with a duty of 8 cents per square foot?

How much light does it throw on the subject of equitable taxation to inform the day laborer as he smokes his pipe in the evening that there is a duty of 15 cents per gross on all common tobacco pipes of clay? What kind of an idea does the purchaser obtain of the amount of tariff tax he pays on cotton cloth when he finds that on one kind of cotton cloth, not exceeding 50 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, the duty assessed is 2 cents per square yard; or another kind exceeding 50, and not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, the duty is 2½ cents per square yard; if bleached, 3 cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 4 cents per square yard?

These illustrations, taken from the McKinley law as it now exists, might be continued indefinitely. The object in laying specific duties like these and others is plainly manifest. It is not desirable on the part of protected wealth that the people should know how much tribute they pay, or to what extent they are plundered. Specific duties are therefore assessed, not according to the well-known methods of purchase and estimate of values in daily practice by the plain, laboring people, but by arbitrary rules which have no intelligent meaning except to expert manufacturers who profit by them. When the farmer goes to town and amongst other things for his household gets a supply of pearl buttons for their home-made shirts, he is informed, if the subject is mentioned at all, that the tariff tax on them is only 2½ cents per line. It sounds like a very small thing, and though he does not understand how it is done, yet he is not startled or indignant as he would be if he knew the real facts in the case.

Under that little clause of 2½ cents per line there is concealed from view a tax of more than 143 per cent on those buttons according to their actual value. The farmer has paid for them at the rate of $2.43 for a dollar's worth of buttons for his wife and children, and he returns home as unconscious and contented a victim of robbery as one who has had his pocket picked by a thief and has not yet found it out. Under such a system as this duties as high as 400 per cent on the value of the goods assessed have been successfully hidden from ordinary observation by a small, harmless-looking specific duty: and such is the case now in the McKinley law on our statute books.

I turn, however, from this dangerous policy, this chief instrument of high protection and unbridled extortion, to another policy of tariff assessment which a schoolboy can comprehend. An ad valorem system of duties on imports was never a delusion or a snare to even the humblest and most uneducated in the land. A given per cent on the value of goods bought can never deceive or cheat the consumer. With a piece of chalk on a board he can figure out for himself what he pays for the goods and what in addition he pays as a tax. Light and instruction for the people are to be found in every line of an ad valorem tariff, while darkness and deception lurk in the very principle of specific rates of duty. It is true that exceptional instances sometimes compel the use of specific duties, but it may be stated as a rule that tariff reform never adopts them if it can be avoided, and that the protectionist, on the other hand, shuns ad valorem rates as guilt shuns discovery.

THE WALKER TARIFF.

In the history of tariff legislation in this Government, from the first act in 1789 to the present day, there is one enactment which stands out in its wisdom, its success, and its glory over all others. The Democratic tariff of 1846, devised by Robert J. Walker, ad valorem in its rates from beginning to end, with not a specific duty in it, has had no peer, no rival even, in the prosperity it secured for the American people during its existence as a law. The protective tariff of 1842, enacted during the ascendency of the Whig party, was in force when the Administration of James K. Polk came into power and Robert J. Walker took the portfolio of the Treasury. The friends and beneficiaries of protection were deeply enamored of the law of 1842, and claimed for it a greater degree of prosperity, confidence, and happiness throughout the country than had been known since 1828; but the new Secretary of the Treasury assailed it at once and in unsparing terms. Mr. Blaine, in his brilliant book entitled Twenty Years of Congress, speaking of the tariff of 1842, and Mr. Walker's course in regard to it, says:

Robert J. Walker was a Senator from Mississippi when the act was passed and was bitterly opposed to it. He was a man of great originality, somewhat speculative in his views, and willing to experiment on questions of revenue to the point of rashness. He was not a believer in the doctrine of protection, was persuaded that protective duties bore unjustly and severely upon the planting section with which he was identified; and he came to his office determined to overthrow the tariff act which he had been unable to defeat in the Senate. Mr. Walker was excessively ambitious to make his term in the Treasury an era in the history of the country. He had a difficult task before him—one from which a conservative man would have shrunk. The tariff was undoubtedly producing a valuable revenue, and as the Administration of Mr. Polk was about to engage in war, revenue was what they most needed. Being about to enter on a war, every dictate of prudence suggested that aggressive issues should not be multiplied in the country. * * *

Mr. Walker made an elaborate report on the question of revenue, and attacked the tariff of 1842 in a manner which might well be termed savage. He arraigned the manufacturers as enjoying unfair advantages—advantages held, as he endeavored to demonstrate, at the expense and to the detriment of the agriculturist, the mechanic, the merchant, the shipowner, the sailor, and, indeed, of almost every industrial class. In reading Mr. Walker's report a third of a century after it was made, one might imagine that the supporters of the tariff of 1842 were engaged in a conspiracy to commit fraud, and that the manufacturers who profited by its duties were guilty of some crime against the people. But extreme as were his declarations and difficult as were the obstructions in his path, he was able to carry his point.

Sir, the glowing tribute here paid by the most distinguished apostle of protection to the great Democratic Secretary is amply justified by the results which followed and the work accomplished by Mr. Walker. With the courage and daring of a self-reliant, creative genius, he followed a financial chart and compass of his own, and did indeed "make his term in the Treasury an era in the history of the country." The law of 1846, which bears his name and immortalizes his memory, is a most interesting and instructive piece of legislation for examination at the present time. Brief, condensed, and comprehensive, containing less than 5,000 words in all; terse, vigorous, and explicit in language; bold, fearless, and commanding in tone, this old act of Congress will never cease to be an object of admiration to the student of American legislation. But the policy which it embodies, still more than its mere structure, will remain through distant years for the study of the statesman and the historian.

All the goods, wares, and merchandise of the world liable to be imported from foreign countries to our shores are classified under the Walker tariff in eight short schedules, each schedule being marked by an ad valorem rate of duty, which applies alike to every article it contains. The whole field is covered by a system which lays taxes according to the value of the article taxed, and enables the purchaser to know how much he is paying for the article and how much he is paying as a tax. The ad valorem rates fixed in the law of 1846, the Walker law, range from 100 per cent, the highest, down to 5 per cent, the lowest, and they were all imposed for revenue only and in no instance for protection. Not a single specific duty is to be found in the entire law; every ambuscade wherein protection and indefinite taxation lie hidden together under specific duties was destroyed, and the burdens which toiling millions have to bear for the support of their Government were made easy of comprehension.

The opposition to such a daring and sweeping measure of reform was necessarily most vehement and resentful. Its attack on existing abuses was bold and peremptory, and the strongholds of avarice were startled to their foundations. Indeed the circumstances and proceedings connected with the enactment of the tariff of 1846 have a peculiar interest for tariff reformers now. The bill was reported to the Senate from the House on Monday, the 6th day of July, whereupon a motion was made that it be printed and made the special order of the day for Monday, the 13th, at 12 o'clock. There ensued at once a most strenuous demand for its reference to the Committee on Finance, but the motion to make it a special order with only seven days' delay and without any reference at all, prevailed after an earnest discussion. The bill was taken up for consideration July 13, and the debate in the Senate closed on the 27th by its passage through this body. It was approved by the President and became a law July 30, 1846.

Sir it must have been a rich compensation for hard work in the discharge of public duty to have lived in a day of such prompt and wholesome action in a good cause. The public men of fifty years ago were not controlled or embarrassed by entangling alliances with great riches and giant monopolies; they moved forward in their work, not as men wearing manacles and subject to masters, but with the free gait of conscious rectitude and absolute liberty of thought and action. The coercive power of consolidated and organized millions did not obstruct their patriotic efforts at every step nor impede their achievement of speedy and glorious results. The debate which took place in the Senate on the Walker tariff, although lasting but fifteen days, was of the most powerful and commanding character.

This was more especially true of the opponents of the measure, since its supporters, to a great extent, refrained from taking part in the discussion. The opposition was led by Daniel Webster, Reverdy Johnson, John M. Clayton, George Evans of Maine, Willie P. Mangum, and others of great note in the councils of the Government at that time. Their speeches were characterized by impassioned eloquence, powerful argument from their standpoint, bitter assault on the proposed measure, and the most intense predictions of ruin by wholesale and in detail of the business interests of the entire country in the event of its passage.

The speech made by Mr. Webster, occupying two days in its delivery, was one of the ablest and most remarkable of his great intellectual career. In the full prime of his majestic powers, he launched them all against the pending bill. As an enactment for revenue, the object for which it was devised, he said it would fail, declaring it would "deceive the hopes of those who expect to derive from it that measure of abundant revenue which has been stated." He was unsparing, inflammatory, and, as it would seem now, unparliamentary in his language towards those who supported it. At one point in his speech he was so carried away as to exclaim:

I must say, sir, that the notions which prevail in the Treasury Department, and in the Executive Government appear to me to be almost insane. We were told at the early part of the session that the taxed portion of the community paid fifty millions to the manufacturers; it has now got up to ninety-four millions! Mr. President, if intelligent men, of patriotic purposes, good intentions, and great respectability, in many walks of life, private and public, ever were seized with a monomania, that disease has taken a strong hold on those who come to us with such statements and sentiments as these. How else can we account for such a zeal for overimportation, a zeal which looks for a paradise on earth, if we can only be surrounded by British manufacturers without stint and without count. The love of importation has become a sort of passion with those at the head of affairs—an unthinking, headlong passion.

Mr. Webster then proceeded to a very elaborate discussion of the bill under four propositions: First, as a measure for making all duties on imported goods ad valorem duties; secondly, its effects on certain interests, supposed to be protected by former and then existing laws; thirdly, its effects on the navigation and commercial interests of the country; and fourthly, its effects on the great industrial employments and labor of the people. In every aspect presented by the bill to his mind he saw nothing but disaster and ruin. In its enactment he beheld widespread bankruptcy and national dishonor; paralyzed industries at home, and our armies in Mexico at that time put in peril by the loss of revenue which its provisions were certain, in his judgment, to entail on the Treasury. There was not a gleam of light to his eye in a single word or line it contained. The woes and afflictions foretold by Isaiah and Jeremiah of the guilty city of Jerusalem were hardly more dismal or terrible than the evils prophesied of his own country by the great New England orator in the event the bill he was discussing should become a law.

Sir, I have thus dwelt on the ad valorem tariff law of 1846, and in some detail on the remarkable speech of Mr. Webster, in order, at this point, to say that not a single word of evil prophesy uttered by him or his able associates ever came true—not one. Their arguments were reduced to absurdity by swift-coming results, their frantic predictions of ruin became a scoff and a byword in the midst of the swelling and unparalleled prosperity which immediately followed and remained so long after the law went into force. So overwhelming was the success of the new law, and so absolute and universal was the satisfaction of the people with its workings, that the subject of the tariff ceased to be an issue between parties during the next four Presidential elections. Controversy ceased in the presence of demonstration, peace and contentment between labor and capital prevailed throughout the country, strikes and disturbances such as have since been the last resort of oppressed labor were unknown, the homes of working men and women were not darkened by the presence of armed force in the employment of monopoly and brutal avarice, no one was shot down in the presence of his wife and children in a dispute over his wages, nor on the other hand did millionaires multiply so rapidly or wax so fat and insolent as they have in later years. Indeed, the doctrine of Government protection, gratuity, and gain for one class of citizens at the expense of all other classes would never again have been asserted, had not the war between the sections fifteen years later given it another and a tremendous opportunity to curse the land.

The political campaigns of 1848, 1852, 1856, and 1860 were devoid of tariff issues and tariff debates, because of the great and general business prosperity which then existed under the ad valorem, revenue, Democratic tariff law then in operation. The only tariff discussion to be found from 1846 to 1861 occurred in 1857. At that time more revenue was being obtained under the Walker tariff than was necessary for the economical administration of the Government, and duties on imports were therefore again reduced, and made lower than they had been at any time during forty-five years of our previous history. Mr. Blaine, in commenting on the enactment of the Walker tariff and the extraordinary results which followed, says:

The Whig victory of 1848 was not sufficiently decisive to warrant any attempt, even had there been desire, to change the tariff. Gen. Taylor had been elected without subscribing to a platform or pledging himself to a specific measure, and he was therefore in a position to resist and reject appeals of the ordinary partisan character. Moreover, the tariff of 1846 was yielding a buoyant revenue, and the business of the country was in a flourishing condition at the time his Administration was organized. Money became very abundant after the year 1849; large enterprises were undertaken, speculation was prevalent, and for a considerable period the prosperity of the country was general and apparently genuine. After 1851 the Democrats had almost undisputed control of the Government, and had gradually become a free-trade party.

The principles embodied in the tariff of 1846 seemed for the time to be so entirely vindicated and approved that resistance to it ceased not only among the people, but among the protective economists, and even among the manufacturers to a large extent. So general was this acquiescence, that in 1856 a protective tariff was not suggested or even hinted by any one of the three parties which presented Presidential candidates. It was not surprising, therefore, that with a plethoric condition of the National Treasury for two or three consecutive years, the Democratic Congress, in the closing session of Pierce's Administration, enacted what has since been known as the tariff of 1857. By this law the duties were placed lower than they had been at any time since the war of 1812. The act was well received by the people, and was, indeed, concurred in by a considerable proportion of the Republican party.

Sir, a higher, stronger tribute to the triumph of a tariff composed solely of ad valorem rates of duty, imposed for revenue only, can nowhere be found in the entire range of economic literature than is here presented by the most brilliant antagonist that system has encountered in the last forty years. It is true Mr. Blaine does not in words surrender the doctrine of protection and embrace the principles of the Walker tariff, but as a historian he states facts which not only justify, but demand such a course on the part of all impartial readers and thinkers. I commend this notable chapter of his writings, together with the jeremiads of Mr. Webster in 1846, to those dismal croakers who are now in our midst, and every day and hour are shedding pretended tears over the anticipated ruin that will befall the country when the bill now before the Senate shall become a law. It is to be regretted that this bill is not more nearly an exact counterpart of the Walker tariff than it is, but it has the great merit of being framed on the same principles and devoted to the same end as far as possible under existing circumstances. We therefore invoke the confidence of the American people, and ask them to believe, in the light of history, that its enactment as a law will be followed by a full share of those national blessings which so signally immortalized its great prototype, the tariff of 1846.

SUGAR.

And now, Mr. President, coming to a closer look into the details of the pending bill, I propose to briefly discuss a few of its provisions which have in certain quarters provoked comment and attack. On the subject of sugar the McKinley law is a juggle and a fraud, and was intended as such; it was framed to deceive, and in thoughtless minds it has succeeded. Its authors had the hardihood, the audacity to mention it as an article on the free list and unthinking people have dreamed of free sugar ever since, while in point of fact the meanest, the most odious, unjust, unequal, un-American, and unconstitutional tax ever known in our history is the sugar-bounty tax now paid by the American people. It is not necessary for me to say that I would rejoice to make sugar free from taxation had I alone the power; but the provisions of the bill now before us on that subject, in comparison with the vicious principles and vicious results of the McKinley law, are as equity is to corruption, and as integrity is to crime.

Absolute free trade in sugar is an attractive theme, but no such thing has ever existed for a single hour since the organization of this Government. A moderate duty has always been imposed on sugar, and it has always been a stanch revenue support to the Government. In that great model of a Democratic tariff for revenue only—the tariff of 1846—it was declared in short and simple phrase that "sugar of all kinds" and "sirup of the sugar" were subject to a duty-laid tax of 30 per cent ad valorem. The fact that the duty tax on sugar has inured more to the benefit of the revenues of the Government and less to the profits of private parties than any other tax known to tariff legislation may be stated as the main reason why the Democratic party has never made an issue against it. Every dollar collected from a tariff tax on sugar and paid into the Treasury relieves some other article of even higher necessity in the economy of life from the imposition of tariff taxation.

It is conceded by all parties that the duty paid on imported sugar goes more fairly and squarely into the Treasury than any other duty provided by law, and it follows, as light follows darkness, that tariff taxation can therefore be reduced in proportion on other things which the people have to buy and use. The McKinley bill, on the contrary, by pretending to take sugar off the dutiable list, was intended to reduce the revenues of the Government, and thus make an apparent necessity, a fraudulent excuse for higher rates of duty on woolens, on iron, on tin plate, on salt, on binding twine, on cotton ties, and on all other articles of prime necessity in agricultural life. It must be remembered, too, that the chief outrage of the sugar-bounty tax consists in the fact that not a dollar of it ever goes to the assistance of the Government. It is taken from the pockets of one class of people and paid directly, without anything in return, to another class.

During the present fiscal year, ending June 30, there will be paid by the Treasury $12,300,000 as bounty to the producers of sugar, and every dollar of this vast sum is first collected from those who plant corn, raise wheat, and engage in all the various pursuits of labor. Nearly thirty millions of bounty money have been handed over to the sugar-makers of the United States since the law went into operation, and each year the sum is rapidly increasing. It was thought when the law was under discussion that the bounty would not exceed $8,000,000 per year, but the stimulating influence of such an enormous donation to the manufacturers of sugar was greatly underrated. If the law is to remain unrepealed the time is near at hand when it will confer as a mere gratuity more than $50,000,000 per year on a small fraction of our population, engaged in no public service, but in their own private enterprises.

That such an enactment is in harmony with the Constitution can not, of course, be maintained for a moment. The speech of the present Secretary of the Treasury, then a Senator, on the unconstitutionality of the sugar bounty was not answered at the time of its delivery, and it never will be. No further argument is now needed, and yet I can not forego the pleasure of reading one of the many decisions cited by Mr. Carlisle. It is the case of The People vs. Salem, decided by that great jurist Judge Cooley. Amongst other things he said:

But it is not in the power of the State, in my opinion, under the name of a bounty, or under any other cover or subterfuge, to furnish the capital to set private parties up in any kind of business, or to subsidize their business after they have entered upon it. A bounty law of which this is the real nature is void, whatever may be the pretense on which it may be enacted. The right to hold out pecuniary inducements to the faithful performance of public duty in dangerous or responsible positions stands upon a different footing altogether; nor have I any occasion to question the right to pay rewards for the destruction of wild beasts and other public pests, a provision of this character being a mere police regulation. But the discrimination by the State between different classes of occupations, and the favoring of one at the expense of the rest, whether that one be farming or banking, merchandising or milling, printing or railroading, is not legitimate legislation, and it is an invasion of that equality of right and privilege which is a maxim in State government. When the door is once opened to it there is no line at which we can stop and say with confidence that thus far we may go with safety and propriety, but no further.

Every honest employment is honorable; it is beneficial to the public; it deserves encouragement. The more successful we can make it the more does it generally subserve the public good. But it is not the business of the State to make discriminations in favor of one class against another, or in favor of one employment against another. The State can have no favorites. Its business is to protect the industry of all, and to give all the benefits of equal laws. It can not compel an unwilling minority to submit to taxation in order that it may keep upon its feet any business that can not stand alone.

Here in this brief but glorious decision is contained the whole doctrine of free government in its exercise of the taxing powers granted to it in the Constitution. How like an oracle of truth and justice the last sentence rings out on an atmosphere impregnated with the odor of protective tariff jobs, trusts, monopolies, bounties, and all manner of ill-gotten gains! I repeat:

It can not compel an unwilling minority to submit to taxation in order that it may keep upon its feet any business that can not stand alone.

This great declaration of constitutional law and of Democratic principle ought to be repeated whenever and wherever the policy of protection and bounty is asserted; and over the portals of every department of this Government—legislative, executive, and judicial—it ought to be engraved in letters of ever-living light as a fundamental maxim of liberty and equality in the enjoyment of individual rights, public and private.

Sir, in the light of the Constitution as judicially interpreted by the wisest minds of the country, it may be safely asserted that worse legislation, on principle and in practice, than the bounty tax now being paid on sugar never before cursed the people of a government calling itself free, upright, and enlightened. In this connection, however, arises a very proper demand to know the exact nature and effect of the measure proposed in its place and stead. I propose to the best of my ability to meet that demand. The duty on sugar as placed in the bill now pending before the Senate may be stated at 1 cent per pound on raw sugar, and one-eighth of 1 cent per pound additional on refined sugar. If this specific duty should be changed to an ad valorem rate, as I think would have been better, it will be found to be about 35 per cent on the value of the goods assessed.

I have already pointed out the fact that under the Walker tariff all sugars were made dutiable at 30 per cent ad valorem, but it must also be borne in mind that forty-eight years ago the consumer paid 12 cents a pound for sugar, while at the present time he pays only 4 or 5 cents per pound at the most. It may be estimated that 8 pounds of sugar, when the Walker tariff was enacted, cost the purchaser $1, while that amount of money will now buy 24 pounds. In 1846 the consumer of sugar paid 30 cents tax on 8 pounds; by the provisions of the pending bill he will now pay 35 cents tax on 24 pounds; showing a reduction in favor of the bill before us of nearly 60 per cent even when compared with the great Democratic tariff of nearly a half century ago. In other words, owing to the difference in the value of sugar then and now, the duty proposed by the Committee on Finance is but slightly more than one-third the amount imposed by the Walker tariff, of blessed and glorious memory.

On the subject of refined sugar, the committee courts the closest scrutiny into its methods and its motives, and into everything it has done. Under the McKinley law the duty on all refined sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color is one-half of 1 cent per pound. In the pending bill we have reduced that duty to one-eighth of 1 cent per pound, thus wiping out three-fourths of the entire amount and would gladly have wiped it all out. If to some peculiar minds this action of the committee appears to be a compliance with the demands of the sugar trust, it must also be apparent that the demands of that institution were of the most extraordinary character—demands for a very deep cut in its rates of duty, for a strong downward slope in its profits, and for an almost total annihilation of all the protection it ever had.

Let the sugar question be not misunderstood or misstated. The issue here and before the country is between the McKinley law, with its unconstitutional individual bounty plunder, already amounting to over twelve millions a year, and rapidly increasing, together with its high protection for the trust, on the one hand, and an old-fashioned tariff duty, two-thirds less than the duty on sugar in the tariff of 1846, every dollar raised for revenue, and going into the Treasury as revenue, together with its sweeping reduction against the trust, on the other hand. Nor must the reciprocity features of the McKinley law be overlooked in connection with this issue. The so-called reciprocity contained in that law may much more properly be styled an act for the punishment of our own people by retaliating on them the offenses committed by foreign countries in keeping our goods out of their markets by the imposition of high tariff duties. That unparalleled and clearly unconstitutional piece of legislation reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, whenever, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which, in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country, as follows, namely:

All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic tests, as follows, namely:

All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, syrups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75° seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound; and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscopic test, two-hundredths of 1 cent per pound additional.

All sugars above No. 13 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color, and pay duty as follows, namely: All sugar above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard of color, 1¼ cents per pound.

All sugar, above No 16, and not above No. 20, Dutch standard of color, 1½ cents per pound.

All sugars above No. 20, Dutch standard of color, 2 cents per pound.

Molasses testing above 56°, 4 cents per gallon.

Sugar drainings and sugar sweepings shall be subject to duty either as molasses or sugar, as the case may be, according to polariscopic test.

On coffee, 3 cents per pound.

On tea, 10 cents per pound.

Hides, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled; Angora goat skins, raw, without the wool, unmanufactured, asses' skins, raw or unmanufactured, and skins, except sheepskins, with the wool on, 1½ cents per pound.

Sir, here is a tariff schedule containing five articles of prime necessity to the American people which are to be heavily taxed, and their cost to the consumer largely increased, at the mere will and pleasure of the President of the United States, whoever he may happen to be, and as often as he pleases. The Executive can not, in my judgment, be clothed with the power thus to legislate by proclamation, and I regard this entire enactment as an unconstitutional freak in our statutes. I cite it now, however, in order to show that under the McKinley law an average duty of at least 1½ cents per pound, or over 60 per cent ad valorem, is authorized to be placed on sugar by the edict of the Executive alone, and at his individual discretion.

With the same stroke of his pen he can, by virtue of this law, put a tariff tax of 3 cents per pound on coffee, 10 cents per pound on tea, and 1½ cents per pound on raw and uncured hides of nearly every description known to the uses of civilized people. These burdens, when imposed as they are authorized, will have to be borne by the American consumer and taxpayer, and by no one else. The inhabitants of the offending country against whom proclamation is made are indifferent or perhaps amused spectators of our retaliatory proceedings against our own citizens. I commend this pernicious and unconstitutional section of a bad enactment to the careful consideration of such, if any there be, who, claiming to be tariff reformers, have declared their preference for the McKinley law over the bill now under discussion.

Sir, I fear not the day when I shall be called to answer on this subject before the people of that great State which has so long honored me with a seat on this floor. The people of Indiana, at least, will be slow to believe that I have been guided in my conduct by any other thought than a supreme and sincere devotion to their interests, and to the interests of the laboring people of every State in the Union. I have had their confidence during the average lifetime of man; I have never had their distrust.

THE TAX ON DISTILLED SPIRITS AND THE EXTENSION OF THE BONDED PERIOD.

In turning to another subject on which much ignorant and some malevolent criticism has expended itself, my task is easy and the way smooth. In securing a sufficient revenue for the support of the Government with as light a tax as possible on the necessaries of life, I have at all times earnestly favored an increased tax on whisky. I would be glad to day if the pending bill provided for a tax of $1.20 per gallon, instead of $1.10, as it does. Revenue raised from distilled spirits, the purchase and consumption of which is never a necessity of life, is a deep gratification to me, and the fact that twenty millions of the surplus accruing under this bill will be furnished by the tax on whisky is a genuine joy to my mind. My sincere regret is that more money for the Government was not obtained from the same source, and consequently less from other sources of a different character.

As to the extension of the period during which distilled spirits may remain in bond before being required to pay the Government tax, it is proper to say that there is no new privilege given by such a provision in the bill before us. The owner of distilled spirits has the right now, and at all times, to export his goods to foreign countries for an indefinite period, hold them there as long as he pleases and until they acquire the age he wants them to have, or until a profitable market revives here at home, then import them back to his own country for sale, paying a customs duty equal to the revenue tax, and securing a still further delay in making payment if he so desires by placing his spirits in a customs bonded warehouse on their return.

The customs duty on such reimported spirits is, of course, collected only on the quantity actually contained in the casks or packages when they start back, the owner being subjected to loss on account of the inevitable leakage and waste of an ocean voyage and storage in a foreign warehouse and the Government being at considerable expense in connection with the exportation of that portion of the spirits which is never returned to this country and consequently never tax-paid. Here is a loss to the Government which I am authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to say will not occur under the extension provided for in the pending bill, and that such extension, with the safeguards provided for in this bill, will not increase the cost of collecting the revenue from distilled spirits.

The claim that certain classes of spirits require more time than others in which to pass through all the necessary manufacturing processes, and thereby to become marketable, is admitted to be true and just in all quarters where this question is dealt with. It is but just also to the officials and to the owners of distilled spirits, as well as to those who framed the extension clause of the pending bill, to say that the privilege of completing the process of manufacture before payment of tax is accorded to the producers of all other articles, tobacco and the like, which are subject to tax under the internal-revenue laws, including spirits other than the classes needing the aging process; and that the tax on each of said articles becomes due and payable only upon the removal of the article from the place of manufacture for consumption or sale.

Under existing laws there is a discrimination against distillers on this point for which there is no reason whatever. Those who produce the finer grades of spirits are required not only to remove their spirits before their manufacture is finished, before the aging process is perfected, but frequently at a time when the market is broken down, and no sale is possible except at a heavy loss. An order for the compulsory removal of spirits out of bond under circumstances like these, especially during seasons of financial depression, not only works great hardships, but in very many cases compels the distiller to export his spirits, as I have already stated, in order to get time for the aging and maturing of his goods and for the recurrence of a market at home which will enable him to sell and pay his tax.

If I am reminded that speculation by private parties is made possible by the pending legislation, my answer is, that no increase of tax on any article known to man can ever be made without a temporary benefit to the holders of the article at the time the increase is made, who manufactured or purchased it while the lower tax prevailed. All the benefit, however, which the distillers can secure in this instance must be by paying their taxes and removing their spirits from bond prior to the 30th of June next, when the increased rate of tax is to take effect. All remaining in bond after that date, of course, pays the increase. It is a fact also to be considered that the bulk of the spirits now in distillery warehouses is not owned by the distillers, but by persons in business in all parts of the country, many, I am officially informed, owning from 1 to 5 barrels only; others, with more capital, such as bankers, owning or controlling much larger quantities. As the tax which is imposed on the manufacturer is really paid by the consumer so also the benefit which the tax confers is equally widespread.

Sir, I have no hesitation in declaring, upheld as I am by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who have both recommended every step taken on this subject, that one of the wisest, safest, most useful, and necessary provisions in the pending bill is that increasing the tax on distilled spirits and granting an extension of the time they may remain in bond without being driven out of the country.

On this point I quote from the report of the present very able and efficient Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in November, 1886, under a former Administration. It will be seen that he held then, as he does now, that the same "principle of taxation which applies to all other articles taxed under the internal-revenue laws should be made to apply to distilled spirits; and that, as in the case of tobacco and beer, and of the new subject of taxation, oleomargarine, the tax be levied upon the spirits which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption or use." His full statement on the point is as follows:

The above table and other statements heretofore made show that, although the tax was paid during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, on more than 1,000,000 gallons of bourbon and rye whiskies in excess of the quantity on which tax was paid during the next preceding fiscal year, the production in 1886 was so much greater than the withdrawals as to leave a net balance in warehouse June 30, 1886, of 4,000,000 gallons greater than was on hand July 1, 1885. It will also be seen from a table on a following page that the production of all kinds of spirits was 2,000,000 gallons greater during the months of July, August, and September, 1886, than during the corresponding months of 1885, while the tax-paid withdrawals were half a million gallons less.

A glance at the table of exportations to foreign ports shows that the bulk of the bourbon and rye whiskies in 1886 went to swell the stocks in the warehouses of Bremen, Hamburg, and Bermuda. The tendency since June 30, 1885, has been, up to the present time, to increase the stock of bourbon and rye whiskies in distillery warehouses. The bulk of the assessments made in 1886 was to enforce the collection of the overdue gallon-tax on spirits of these classes, and the increased production indicates that heavy assessments of this character, which empower the collector to distrain for the tax with 5 per cent penalty and 1 per cent per month interest, must be made during the present and future years.

It has come to my notice that many distillers have organized themselves into associations, each member of which has agreed to limit his production so that the entire product of all will be not greater than that demanded by the communities supplied by them. But it is evident that unless all distillers of one kind of spirits, say bourbon whisky, were associated, such distillers would be liable to find themselves unable to sell their spirits when the taxes become due, and therefore unable to pay the tax at that time. From the nature of things it is hardly to be expected that such a union will occur. Nor am I sure that even if all were so united the combined wisdom of the association would be sufficient to foretell the state of the markets three years hence. I am therefore constrained to again recommend to Congress that the principle of taxation which applies to all other articles taxed under internal-revenue laws be made to apply to distilled spirits; and that, as in the case of tobacco and beer, and of the new subject of taxation, oleomargarine, the tax be levied upon the spirits which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption or use.

In connection with the foregoing I submit also another most important communication written by the Hon. Hugh McCulloch when Secretary of the Treasury for the last time in his long and able career in the service of his Government, and recommending the passage of a bill "to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distillery and special bonded warehouses and the withdrawal of the same therefrom." It will be seen that he earnestly concurs with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and indorses in forcible terms the policy of the pending bill. His communication is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 12, 1885.

SIR: Herewith I hand you a bill, prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distilleries in special bonded warehouses, and the withdrawal of the same therefrom, which I will thank you to present for the favorable consideration of the House.

The manufacture of whisky is one of the largest and most important branches of domestic industry in the United States, and is at the present time, like other manufacturing interests, greatly suffering from overproduction. A legitimate business from which large revenues are derived, it is not only depressed by overproduction, but by being burdened by heavy taxes the payment of which, as is the case with no other article, is required within a fixed period, whatever may be the condition of the market. In other words, the present whisky tax is a tax upon production, and is thus in contravention of the general policy of our own Government, and of the policy of other enlightened nations which derive large revenues from articles of a similar character.

Under existing laws the manufacturers or holders of whisky are compelled to pay a tax amounting to nearly five times its cost upon an article before it is withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, or to export it, at great expense, to be held in foreign countries until there is a home demand for it, or to be sold in such countries, to the prejudice of our public revenues. Some nations have been unwise enough to resort for revenue to export duties upon their own productions. The United States stands alone in enforcing the payment of tax upon one of its chief productions before there is a demand for it for consumption.

These considerations, in my judgment, should be sufficient to warrant such a change in existing laws as is contemplated by the bill herewith presented; but I should not feel at liberty at the present time to recommend the subject to the consideration of Congress if the general trade of the country were in a healthy condition. There are now in bond about 48,000,000 gallons of whisky, on about 20,000,000 gallons of which a tax of 90 cents a gallon must be paid, under the existing laws, before the next session of Congress, unless the payment is avoided by exportation. On a large part of this whisky the banking institutions of the Western States hold liens which stand in the way of its export, and the indications now are that unless the laws are changed the general distress which prevails throughout the country will be greatly aggravated by forced sales, which might not even cover the taxes.

On the other hand, the relief proposed by this bill would, in my judgment, tend to remove the despondency which so generally prevails, and open the way for the gradual improvement of other languishing industries. The relief can be granted without detriment to the public revenues by merely putting whisky on the same footing with tobacco and beer; by an exaction of duties upon consumption instead of production—the only policy which is consistent with justice and sound economic principles. Whisky is manufactured for sale, and it will always be sold as soon as there is demand for it. There would be no gain to the Government by compulsory sales, while the revenues would suffer by its exportation. It is securely held, and every gallon will contribute 90 cents to the public revenues if it is left subject to the laws of trade. Ought anything more to be required?

The question thus briefly presented is a very important one in its bearings upon public revenues and business generally. In the consideration of it the cause of temperance (worthy as that cause is of hearty approval) ought not to be involved. It will neither be aided nor retarded by the proposed change in existing laws. As long as the manufacture of whisky is lawful, it should be treated with even-handed justice. It can not be otherwise treated without detriment to the public welfare.

I recommend the passage of this bill as a measure of simple justice to the manufacturers and holders of whisky, which could hardly fail to be beneficial to general trade, and, consequently, to the Treasury.

Very respectfully,

H. MCCULLOCH, Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. President, the proposition contained in the pending bill to levy a tax of 2 per cent on all net incomes of corporations and of individuals in excess of $4,000 per annum is so just and equitable towards the hard-working taxpayers of meager resources throughout the entire country that not a word in its defense or explanation would seem necessary here or anywhere else. But the narrow and corroding selfishness of riches has been aroused by this simple measure of justice into fierce resentment and contention. We hear on all hands the dictatorial voice of individual and corporation wealth demanding that it shall not be disturbed by the slightest touch of the taxgatherer, whatever may be the demands of the Government, or the oppression of the toiling masses.

On all the wants and necessaries of life the man of wealth, with a heavy income, pays less rates of tariff tax under existing laws than the laboring man or laboring woman whose wearing apparel is of coarser material, and whose household living is supplied with cheaper goods bearing higher rates of duty. His bonds, his accumulated riches of all kinds, and all incomes arising from them, are exempt from all Government burdens, remaining not only undiminished and unmolested amidst darkened homes and flagrant distress, but growing fatter, stronger, and more defiant as the days and the years go by. He who has spent his life in making an amassment of wealth looks out upon the poor, tired, toiling world as if from a fortified castle. He feels himself sumptuously provisioned against all wants, and amply protected against all contact or concern with the labor-stained millions who struggle from one ocean to the other for the means of existence.

Sir, for no earthly consideration would I paint an unjust or overwrought picture of the dangerous pretensions and intolerable arrogance of accumulated wealth now manifest in this country, but, speaking in the fear of my Maker, I devoutly believe that the limit of endurance has been reached; that the time has come for a test to be made between the power of hoarded money and the power of productive labor; that the people from this time forward, more than ever before, will organize and take rapid and heroic measures against the continued and brutal dictation of the plutocracy, against the paramount influence of wealth, against the rule and supremacy of the rich in shaping the financial policy of this Government in their own interests.

Let no man imagine, or lay the flattering unction to his soul, that party names or party ties will bind the American people on this question, or compel their submission to the financial servitude sought to be fastened on them by the power of colossal wealth. And when the contest comes, as it will speedily, and in many ways and forms, the bankers, money-changers, usurers, and possessors of millions who have provoked it will stand aghast at the consequences of their own folly: they will figuratively, if not literally, cry out for the rocks and hills to hide them from the wrath of an outraged people. A 2 per cent tax on a portion of their incomes will appear, in the hour of reckoning, a very small and trifling matter compared to others more serious. But unto that day, now near at hand, I remit the further discussion of what it may bring forth, and proceed with the point immediately in hand.

In considering an income tax the most extraordinary and startling fact we discover, is the very small number of people to whom it applies. I well remember when the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in 1890 declared on this floor that while the population of the United States would at that time reach 65,000,000, yet at least one-half of the entire wealth "of this, the richest country on the globe," was owned by not more than 100,000 of its inhabitants. The wealth of the world has in all ages been condensed into the hands of the privileged and favored few, who thereby seek to become the governing class; and this has been more especially true and striking during the last thirty years in this country than in any other known to history.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in a recent communication to the Ways and Means Committee of the House estimates the present population of the United States at not less than 65,000,000 and the wealth of the country at $65,000,000,000, or an average of $1,000 per capita, if there was an equal distribution. His further estimate, however, is that so great has been the condensation of capital into the ownership of a small and powerful class that the tax here proposed on incomes of over $4,000 will reach only about 85,000 individuals and corporations out of the more than 65,000,000 who now inhabit this land of boasted liberty and equality.

Sir, these figures may well give the country pause. They recall the worst days of Rome, and of other governments, both ancient and modern, whose liberties were lost by the accumulation and power of wealth in the hands of patrician aristocracies. How small in number is the income class in the United States, yet how potent! How few in comparison with the great body of the people, but little more than one in a thousand, yet how aggressive and strong! How pretentious, how presumptuous in dictation to the Government in regard to all its policies, yet how unpatriotic in the hour of peril, how mean in the face of danger to the country! The income class, based upon the principal ownership of the entire wealth of the country, is mainly the illegitimate offspring of Government paternalism and Government support, yet neither gratitude nor love of country has ever moved it to respond in aid of the Government in an hour of emergency and need. From no other class could the payment of the whole pension roll be required so justly.

Sir, I am loth to say these things, but so destructive to human happiness, so unjust, relentless, unsparing, insolent, and brutal has been the money power in these later days, and indeed for years past that rather than leave them unsaid I would cheerfully leave my seat on this floor to be occupied by someone else.

What shall be said of one of the leading arguments always urged against the enactment of an income tax? We are gravely informed that such a tax can not be collected because of the wholesale perjury which income owners will commit in order to evade the law. I was a member of the House when the income-tax law of 1862 was repealed. I listened to this plea of infamy at that time, and it increased the pleasure with which I voted to keep the law on our statute books, as it will now to vote to put it back again. If the criminal classes of the country or those of assumed respectability can defeat the enactment of laws by threatening to commit crime in their violation, then, indeed, have we reached a depth of degradation far beyond the hand or the power of resurrection.

I will believe nothing so infamous of the Congress of the United States as its submission to a threat so atrocious, or an argument so revolting. It is also seemingly incredible that the owners of taxable incomes should allow such an argument to be made in their behalf; and yet all is silent, and no word of protest is heard when in their very presence it is declared and urged that they will commit felony, general and widespread, and for which the convict stripes of a penitentiary are the only punishment, in order to defeat the execution of a law taxing incomes, if one should be enacted. What a spectacle is here presented! I mourn and lament to look upon it. In the course of a life, now no longer a short one, I have believed in the predominating good, rather than the predominating evil of the human race.

I have looked with a hopeful, trustful eye upon the efforts of my fellow-beings to become better, wiser, kinder, purer; and with a helping hand, though feeble it has been, I have tried to aid them forward. I confess that I am shocked, inexpressibly shocked, to be assured now by gentlemen of great ability and high position that the principal property holders and income owners of the United States are ready, for the sake of defrauding the Government out of a small pittance, to blacken their souls with the detestable crime of false swearing; to render themselves fit associates for thieves, housebreakers, forgers, and cutthroats in the prison houses of this world, and to become everlasting inhabitants of hell in the world to come.

My great and only consolation is in the fact that the income class, thus stigmatized and depicted by its friends, in colors so dark, foul, and hideous, is so few in number and bears so small a proportion to the mighty mass of glorious men and women who live under the flag and uphold its honor. Judas Iscariot could not discredit the apostles of the blessed Master; Benedict Arnold failed to tarnish the honor of the Revolution, and those who are willing to perjure themselves to escape taxes can not shake my faith in the integrity of my countrymen, or in the predominating virtue, goodness, and purity of the human race.

But I deny that an income tax law, properly adjusted and guarded, can be rendered incapable of execution by the most expert villainy that may be threatened or practiced against it. The experience of the Government is the other way. Under a law of this kind, the records in the Treasury show that the collections from 1862 to 1870, for the support of the Government, amounted to the sum of $346,000,000, an average of $43,250,000 per annum during the eight years of its existence. This does not look like a general escape from the operations of the law had been at all successful. It was a large and gratifying sum of money, paid no doubt amidst cursings and gnashing of teeth, but with a wholesome regard for the open doors of Sing Sing and other convenient criminal resorts.

We hear also the unmeaning, senseless, inane cry that an income tax is undemocratic, un-American. This argument is based on the noisy and resounding charge that an income tax is inquisitorial in its character and operations. Permit me to ask what tax was ever collected without inquiry and inquisition into the nature or value of the article taxed? Without such inquiry no tax, whether in Federal or State government could ever be collected. If there is to be no inquiry or inquisition into property interests subject to taxation, the taxgatherer can be entirely at once and forever dispensed with. The Ways and Means Committee of the House in reporting on this point very justly said:

> In the collection of our customs duties the packages, boxes, and baggage of the citizens are taken, opened, and inspected. The citizen, whether male or female, is often taken into a room and searched. In the collection of State, county, and municipal taxes in most of the States of the Union the citizen is required to make sworn returns concerning his property—its value, nature, and whereabouts. Nothing in this bill is more inquisitorial than the provisions of law now enforced every day. To guard against improper disclosures of the taxpayers' business the bill provides that no officer is allowed to disclose any fact he ascertains concerning the property or business of the taxpayer. If he does so he is liable to removal, and is fined and imprisoned.

If all other classes of men and women in the United States can submit to the laws of their country on the subject of taxation, there is no reason to my mind why the owner of a net income of over $4,000 a year should fail to obey. A man with a large fortune has more need of protection by law than his impoverished neighbor; hence, he owes more to the support and the enforcement of the law. It is pure and simple equity that he should pay a tax on his realized wealth in return for the Government care and protection against lawlessness, which he incessantly claims, and which is incessantly bestowed. Why should such a system be stigmatized as un-American, undemocratic? What is there in our system of government, or in the democratic principles on which it is founded, that exempts the rich from contributing to its support according to their means? Those in poverty have to do this: why not those who have a net surplus of wealth at the end of every year? Is justice un-American? Is equality before the law, and in the enjoyment of natural rights, undemocratic?

Sir, the first income tax known to history was of a higher origin "than aught assigned to earth," nor was it a feather-weight enactment such as we now propose. For the support of his own government among the children of men in the beginning, the Supreme Ruler of the universe tithed His whole people—taxed them one-tenth of their entire possessions: nor did statesmen and lawgivers of the school of Moses, Aaron, and Joshua, and of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob denounce its principles, or threaten it with criminal violation. From that high and ancient day to the present time a tax on incomes has been no novelty or mere experiment in the history of governments. Such a tax has always been regarded as a measure of relief to the working classes, while at the same time inflicting no injustice on those best able to pay it, and having the greatest interest in the stability of government and the supremacy of law.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VOORHEES. I decline to yield, I will say to the Senator from New York with the utmost possible respect. Before beginning my remarks, I went to the Presiding Officer and told him I was not feeling at all well to-day and begged to be excused from interruptions. I will answer any question hereafter.

Mr. HILL. I simply desired to ask the Senator a question that I might understand his position on the subject of the income tax.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should be very glad to yield to the Senator under other circumstances.

WOOL AND MANUFACTURES OF WOOL.

Sir, I come next to talk for a few moments to woolgrowers and to the wearers of wool. This is an old theme, but one that will never lose its interest for civilized people. In the higher and colder latitudes of the earth's surface, sunlight, air, fire, salt, and water are hardly of more prime necessity to human existence than wearing apparel made of wool. A tax on the breath of life would not more surely exact its own payment or be of more universal application. A tax on the only spring in a wide desert of burning sand or on the only salt well in a wilderness would hardly be a worse monopoly, or lead to extortions more oppressive in the hands of a private protected individual, than a tax on woolen goods in use by the human family.

How vividly every stage of human life appears to the reflective mind, and how absolutely and universally this one great article is interwoven with them all! From the new-born babe in soft, warm flannel, on through all the years, until the gray-haired grandfather or grandmother sinks to rest in the grave, the fabric made of wool is never absent from the domestic uses of men, women, and children. Duties on manufactures of wool, their enormous rates often obscured and hidden by the specific system, have always constituted the very Gibraltar of high protection in this country.

With this fortress of greed and gain, dedicated now to the plunder and spoliation of the people, once overthrown the whole system of tariff protection will receive its death blow and totter to its early fall. A mighty advance towards such a result is made by the bill now before the Senate. In the list of reductions proposed by the bill it is most gratifying to be able to announce that the reduction of duties on woolen wear leads all others, and that wool itself is transferred to the free list. The reductions on iron, steel, lead, copper, zinc, and other metals are placed at $12,500,000, while a reduction of $23,500,000 is placed to the credit of the people on their woolen clothing and woolen household supplies.

Sir, we are traveling in the right direction, and though we may not finish our journey in a single day, as some eager and inexperienced guides think we might, still we are in the right road and far on the way, in spite of all the obstacles and dangers by which we have been beset. By the passage of the pending bill many millions of hard-earned money will be saved to the pockets of the people. We hear much in these days about pledges which were made to the people by the Democratic party in 1892. We promised a reduction of tariff taxation, and we are making it in no stinted measure. Edmund Burke defined statesmanship as the science of circumstances, and when this bill becomes a law all I shall ask is that it shall be judged by the fruits it will bear for the homes and happiness of the people, as well as by the circumstances under which it was brought forth.

But another point in connection with wool remains to be noticed. While making a heavy reduction on manufactures of wool, the raw material, or wools on the skin as they are described, have in the pending bill been put on the free list, and we are informed that thereby serious injury has been inflicted on the farmer and sheep-raiser. If I believed so I would not vote for the bill. My heart is very tender toward the farmer. I was born in one of his humble pioneer homes, near the edge of the wilderness. I engaged in all his daily work until I approached the estate of manhood, and my hand has not now lost its cunning. I can yet go into the field, and sometimes do with some comrade of my youth, and plow and sow, and reap, and mow, for a brief spell, in memory of working days long ago. I love the farmer, and am more at home with him than with any other class of people the sun shines on. I love to wander over old homesteads, and hear him talk of his horses, his cows, his oxen, his sheep, his hogs, his barnyard poultry, his swarming bees, and of his growing corn, his ripening wheat, his meadow lands, his orchards, and his gardens, and indeed of everything that pertains to farm life.

Sir, I repeat that if I believed wool on the free list would hurt the farmer I would not vote for the pending bill. It is a matter of actual demonstration, however, which has been often made, that free wool, accompanied by such reduced rates as can then be placed on manufactures of wool, and which are placed on them in this bill, is one of the greatest blessings that can befall the farmer. If the farmer should get an increased price for his wool by reason of a tariff for its protection, he will pay it all out, and much more, to the manufacturer as a duty on woolen goods when he next buys a flannel shirt, an overcoat, or a pair of trousers. Some years ago I stated my views on this point, and I may be pardoned for repeating a few lines of what I then said.

Take the case of a farmer with fifty head of sheep which at shearing time yield him 250 pounds of wool. The duty proposed by the bill before us on imported wool of the same grade is 11 cents per pound. If that wool can be sold for 35 cents per pound, it will bring the farmer $87.50 all told, $27.50 of which sum will constitute the protection afforded by the 11 cents per pound tariff duty on foreign wool. But when the farmer in the fall or winter purchases back $87.50 worth of the wool he sold, and of his neighbors' protected wool, now manufactured into blankets, flannels, and clothing of all kinds, he will find himself not only refunding the $27.50 which he swallowed as a most alluring bait, but he will pay in addition all the way from 38 to 238 per cent ad valorem on every article of woolen goods he is compelled to have, and this enormous plunder of his hard earnings he is coolly informed is for the protection of the manufacturer who has worked his 250 pounds of wool into cloth.

A bill of untaxed goods which he could buy for $87.50, the amount received originally for his wool, will be rendered to him over the protected counter where he trades at from $125 to $300, according to the articles he calls for. While he is interested and entertained with the so-called protection he receives on his wool he is at the same time robbed of five times the amount for the benefit of a far different class from himself. While this bill seeks to tickle the farmer's fancy and divert his attention by putting $10 into one of his pockets, the privileged and adroit monopolist will be taking $50 out of his other pocket.

But I deny that a high tariff on wool has ever even temporarily been a benefit to the woolgrower, or the sheep-raiser. Twenty-seven years ago the woolgrowers and the manufacturers of wool throughout the United States formed a sort of mutual benefit association and secured the passage of the act of 1867, putting an all-round, ironclad, high-protective tariff on wool. The mutual benefit, however, of the scheme totally failed. There was no mutuality about it. The manufacturer's class in general has grown rich; the farmer's class in general has remained poor. The price of wool has in the main steadily declined ever since the act of 1867. In 1867 the price of wool was 68 cents per pound; in 1888, twenty-one years later, it had made a decline of just one-half, and stood at 34 cents per pound; all this time under high Republican tariff protection.

Under the operations of the McKinley law the condition of the farmer is infinitely and indescribably worse. How can the advocate of protection explain that with a tariff of 11 cents per pound wool is selling now not only lower than ever before in the markets of the United States, but at less than one half the amount of the duty paid for its protection, the outside price to the manufacturer in New York being 7¾ cents per pound. This is the most miserable and disgraceful showing to be found in all the wretched history of tariff protection! What farmer does not feel its shame and humiliation?

But what has also been the effect on the sheep-raiser as well as on the woolgrower? Have the flocks increased on a thousand hills by virtue of the combination between wool producers and manufacturers of wool in behalf of a high tariff so many years ago? On the contrary, in 1867 the farmers of the four States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Michigan owned 16,846,750 head of sheep. Twenty-one years afterwards, in 1888, the people of these same four great States owned but 6,018,784 head of sheep, a loss of 10,827,966, and were selling their wool at exactly one-half the price it formerly realized. I have not examined the census returns for 1890 on this subject, but the whole world knows that the situation has not been improved but deeply degraded by Republican high-tariff legislation, so far as the farmer is concerned, during the last seven years and during many years prior thereto. His fortunes have been downward, and with every tariff law now in existence of Republican design and origin they will continue in the same direction.

It seems to be out of the eternal fitness of things for the farmer, the tiller of the soil, the inhabitant of the fields, canopied by the free open heavens, and the intimate associate of nature, to prosper by the artificial and unfair processes of protection, whether the protection is aimed in his favor or against him. He belongs to a wholly different system; he is the offspring of more natural and more upright influences than were ever known to dwell in the scheming schedules of a protective tariff. The principle of tariff protection, come in what shape it may, is to him a poison and a curse. He sells his produce in the unprotected markets of the world, and it is his right to buy in the same. What he most needs is the lowest taxation possible on everything he touches, and the nearest approach to an absolute freedom of trade consistent with a proper revenue for the support of his government.

When the day shall dawn in which the farmer, the mechanic, and the wage-worker shall alike have the right and the privilege to go into the open, liberated markets of the land and buy where their hard-earned money will buy most for their wants, with none to molest, to assess, to levy, to take toll, or to tax, then indeed will the millenium of labor have come, and all the sons and daughters of toil shall rise up and call their Government blessed.

Sir, this is the birthday of Thomas Jefferson. One hundred and fifty-one years ago to-day he came into the world the greatest emancipator of thought, philosopher of liberty, and teacher of the natural rights of man ever known in human history. The blows he struck for freedom, justice, and equality in government are yet resounding throughout the earth, and they will never cease to be heard until the last shackle of privilege and tyranny is broken. Ten days before his soul took flight from his mountain home he wrote his parting words to his own countrymen and to all the races of mankind. With this great dying message before us, and in its spirit, we take new courage and go on with our work. "All eyes are open, or opening," he said, "to the rights of man. The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth, that the mass of mankind has not been born with saddles on their backs, nor a favored few booted and spurred, ready to ride them legitimately by the grace of God." Hail, mighty message, and hail its speedy and certain fulfillment! All hail the counsels of Thomas Jefferson in this hour of caste based on wealth, of privilege granted by law, and of monopoly fastened on the slavery of labor! [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind the occupants of the galleries that any demonstrations of approbation or disapprobation are in violation of the rules of the Senate and will not be permitted. If the offense is repeated the Chair will feel compelled to order the galleries to be cleared.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa if it will be agreeable to him to give way to me that I may move an executive session?

Mr. ALLISON. It will be agreeable to me to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. CALL. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GRAY. Before that motion is put, I should like unanimous consent to remind the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is not now in his seat, had asked unanimous consent to bring to the attention of the Senate an important matter at this hour.

Mr. MORGAN entered the Chamber.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Alabama is now here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida withdraw his motion?

Mr. CALL. I will withdraw the motion if the Senator from Alabama desires me to do so.

Mr. MORGAN. I am informed by the clerks that the bill which was reported this morning by me from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and partly acted upon, will be printed and delivered here in the course of probably ten minutes. If the executive session desired by the Senator from Florida is to be a brief one, of course it will make no difference.

I understand that the order of the Senate this morning, by unanimous consent, was that the Bering Sea bill should be taken up at this hour. I am willing to yield, however, for a few moments of executive session if that will answer the purposes of the Senator from Florida. How much time will the Senator desire?

Mr. CALL. I can not tell how long the executive session will last, but I suppose there will be time enough after its conclusion for the Senator's bill to come up and be disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. I am ready to go on with the bill, and I ask that it be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Has the bill come from the Printer?

Mr. MORGAN. I understand it will be here in a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Alabama that the bill was sent to the Printing Office to be printed and has not yet been returned.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose we shall be compelled to await the arrival of the bill, and so I yield to the Senator from Florida for an executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 3, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 2, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ELECTION CONTEST—O'NEILL VS. JOY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will submit several executive communications.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the putting in of these executive communications?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, sir.

Mr. REED. If we are going to have the regular order, we may as well have it regularly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the contested election case of O'Neill against Joy. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] moved to reconsider the vote by which the House disagreed to the first substitute resolution. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moved to lay the motion on the table; and on that the yeas and nays were ordered. The question now before the House is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider entered by the gentleman from Michigan. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS. A parliamentary inquiry before the roll call commences. Is it in order for members to have their names entered on this roll call or any roll call, unless they actually answer during the call, or unless, being present, they fail to hear their names called?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The rule is very clear that no gentleman can have his name entered as voting upon a pending proposition unless he votes in the open House. Under a call of the House members, in accordance with the rule, may have their names entered by the Clerk after the roll call. But that is an entirely different case from this. Sometimes, perhaps, there has been some want of distinction in the minds of some members in regard to these two cases. But on a roll call on a pending proposition a member is only entitled to have his name recorded when he votes in the House at the time his name is called, or when, after the roll call, he states that he was present during the call and failed to hear his name. The Chair has given direction to the clerks that they shall not in any instance violate this rule, because it is a rule that every member is entitled to have strictly observed. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. REED. If I may say so without disrespect, such has not been the custom of the clerks at the desk; and it was precisely that which I was trying to prevent when the Speaker acted as he did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not informed of any violation of this rule. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 12 not voting 193; as follows:

No quorum voting.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. COBB of Alabama with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. BRATTAN with Mr. ADAMS of Kentucky.

Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. HOOKER of New York.

Mr. PAGE with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. LIVINGSTON with Mr. STORER.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. MADDOX with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. FORMAN with Mr. LUCAS.

Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. STRONG.

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. STEVENS with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. LEFEVER.

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois with Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. LISLE with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of Ohio, with Mr. PEARSON.

Mr. SOMERS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. LINTON.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER with Mr. WRIGHT of Massachusetts.

Mr. MUTCHLER with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. CABANISS with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. GILLET of New York.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am paired, but with the distinct understanding that I have the right to vote to make a quorum. I have accordingly voted on this question with that understanding.

Mr. STEVENS. I am also paired under the same circumstances.

Mr. ENLOE. I was detained at the Department and did not get into the Hall in time to vote on this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My colleague, Mr. WASHINGTON, is detained from the Hall by reason of sickness, and asks indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has several requests for leaves of absence, and before the announcement of this vote will submit them to the House.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted accordingly as follows:

To Mr. WASHINGTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. TARSNEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GILLET of New York, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HOOKER of New York, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LACEY. I make the point of order on that motion.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order the gentleman makes?

Mr. LACEY. That the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. LACEY. Because the Speaker has heretofore held, under similar circumstances that the motion could not be received.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not seem to understand the distinction in the rules of the House. A House for the transaction of business means a quorum of the House. If a quorum of the House is not present on any question, there are only two things that the House can do. One is to adjourn, and the other to order a call of the House for the purpose of securing the attendance of absent members. The fact that a quorum was not present has been developed on this roll call.

There is no difficulty about the matter whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. The Speaker will remember that I undertook to submit the same motion under similar circumstances, and was refused.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker does not remember. The Speaker remembers that there was a repetition of the motion, or an attempted repetition of it, at a time when there had been no intervening business to justify it.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Speaker will remember all that occurred, he will remember that there had been intervening business.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact, which is clearly disclosed in the RECORD, that the Chair declined to entertain a motion to adjourn when there was less than a quorum present—declining to entertain the motion the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman accomplished his purpose?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have, in calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that this motion was refused under similar circumstances.

The SPEAKER. Then the business of the House will proceed.

The question is on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the House do now adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 1, nays 168, not voting 183; as follows:

So a call of the House was ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to lay that motion on the table, and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] moves to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in order, under the special order under which we are proceeding? Is not that an "intervening motion"?

The SPEAKER. But we are now without a quorum.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Still is not that an intervening motion? We have voted to have a call of the House, have we not?

The SPEAKER. That has been the vote.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Now the proposition is to reconsider that. Does not that come within the terms of the order? It is true the House is without a quorum, but this is an intervening motion. Why shall we not have a call of the House without this intervening motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that the order would affect it. Unless there is some——

Mr. PATTERSON. I withdraw my motion to lay on the table, and I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to reconsider.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves that the House do now adjourn. The vote will be taken on the latter motion.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 50.

Mr. PATTERSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee). On this question the yeas are 1, the nays 165. The nays have it, and the motion to adjourn is not agreed to. The question now is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. REED. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how I am recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the last call?

Mr. REED. Regular order.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not recorded. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. Division.

Mr. PATTERSON. The yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion was made to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] moves to lay that motion on the table, and on that the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 3, not voting 202; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 210 gentlemen have answered to their names. The doors will now be closed, and the Clerk will call the names of members who failed to respond on the first call. On this call excuses for absentees may be offered.

Mr. REED (when the name of Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] be excused.

Mr. BROWN. I object, unless some good reason is given.

Mr. REED. Objection is made. I now move that he be excused.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. REED, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 0.

Mr. REED. I ask for tellers.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, having assisted my friend from Maine as much as I desire, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. REED. But there has been a vote on the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not been completed; but if the gentleman from Maine makes the point——

Mr. REED. Oh, I leave it to the decision of the Chair. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] is very kind, and I am very much obliged to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] be excused, and if there be no objection the gentleman will be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. REED. Why? I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that we have not gone very far yet. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PATTERSON, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 4, not voting 186; as follows:

Mr. COBB of Alabama voted, but, being paired, withdrew his vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this question the yeas are 162 and the nays are 4. The ayes have it, and all further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn, and ask that that motion be voted down. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I ask for a division. I am surprised at the conduct of the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] moves that the House do now adjourn, and upon that question the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think it is generally understood in the House that the gentleman from Tennessee has asked to have his motion voted down. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker pro tempore appointed Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. REED.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 57.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has some doubt——

Mr. REED. The Chair must not make any mistake. That motion is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman upon that question.

Mr. REED. Well, if the Chair wants to go wrong I shall not undertake to prevent him, but the motion to reconsider is certainly admissible.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think that motion is in order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moved that the House adjourn, and upon that the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Tellers were requested on ordering the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays were ordered. I voted in favor of the yeas and nays, but, having thought the matter over, I now move to reconsider the vote by which they were ordered. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. That motion can be made, but we can not take the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. REED. I have no desire to embarrass the Chair, and in order to allow him full opportunity for an examination of the question I will withdraw the motion.

A MEMBER. That motion is sound.

Mr. REED. Entirely sound, but unless the Chair is quite satisfied of that I will not insist on the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would, of course, be willing to entertain the motion if it be in order, but there is some doubt in the mind of the Chair on that point.

Mr. REED. In my opinion the motion to reconsider is admissible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman to withdraw the motion.

Mr. REED. Well, I will not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then is on the motion to reconsider, if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no question that the motion is in order.

Mr. REED. None whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on the motion to reconsider). The noes seem to have it.

Mr. REED. Division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 37, noes 114.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] that the House adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 4, nays 161, not voting 187; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on the motion for a call). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. REED. Division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 96, noes 2.

Mr. REED. I shall have to ask for tellers.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 86.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A sufficient number.

Mr. REED. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, 38 voting in favor thereof; and Mr. REED and Mr. PATTERSON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 42.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. I move a reconsideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. REED)—ayes 32, noes 94.

Mr. REED. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 39 voting in favor thereof; and Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. REED were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 0.

So the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays was agreed to.

The question recurring on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 46, noes 123.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A sufficient number having voted in the affirmative, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not too late.

Tellers were ordered, 46 voting in favor thereof; and Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. REED were appointed.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—yeas 57, noes none.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 163, nays 1, not voting 183; as follows:

So a call of the House was ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the call of the House was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the gentleman from Maine vote with the majority on that question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The "gentleman from Maine" did. He knows enough to do that, strange as it may appear to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident we can not get a quorum this afternoon, and I wish to give notice that this case will be called up to-morrow——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Regular order.

Mr. PATTERSON (continuing). At the opening of the session of the House——

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. PATTERSON (continuing). And will be pressed to a conclusion, the House being asked to remain in continuous session for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I have demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman from Tennessee submit?

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, if there be no objection, will direct the Clerk to announce a committee appointment of the Speaker before submitting the motion to adjourn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker appoints Mr. STALLINGS of Alabama on the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 1919) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Caddo Lake at or near Mooringsport, La., and Cross Bayou, near Shreveport, La.; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 139) to print the Agricultural Report for 1893.

The motion of Mr. PATTERSON was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 3, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1686) granting a pension to Margaret English; and

A bill (H. R. 4606) to amend sections 5365 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 1919) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Caddo Lake at or near Mooringsport La., and Cross Bayou, near Shreveport, La.; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of W. H. Meadow, W. P. Rogers, and 20 other citizens of Waverly, Humphreys County, Tenn., praying that building and loan associations be exempted from the operation of the proposed income tax; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I present a petition of the chiefs, headmen and members of the Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians, praying the passage of the bill affecting their treaty with the United States Government for the relinquishment of their surplus land; which I move be printed as a document to accompany the bill (S. 1538) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yankton tribe of Sioux or Dakota Indians in South Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect, which is now on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented a petition of citizens of Alcester, S. Dak., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the speedy settlement of the tariff question; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 100 citizens of St. Charles, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation suppressing the lottery traffic; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Tennessee, praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PASCO presented the petition of N. Burck and 88 others, residents of White City, Fla., favoring an appropriation for improving the St. Lucie River in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL. I present a memorial signed by J. J. Sullivan, mayor; Joshua Mizell, E. P. Ault; K. B. Harvey, president of the board of trade, and A. K. Demmary and Col. Isaac H. Trabue, of the Democratic executive committee, all prominent citizens of the State of Florida, remonstrating against the trivial appropriation made for the improvement of Charlotte Harbor and Peace River, in that State, and calling attention to resolutions adopted by the Florida Pebble Phosphate Miners' Association, praying that suitable appropriations be made for the improvement of this river and harbor, since they are the natural outlet of the vast phosphate traffic of South Florida. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that it be printed as a miscellaneous document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1142) directing the parting and refining of bullion to be carried on at the United States assay office at Helena, Mont., reported it without amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MARTIN on the 29th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5276) to authorize Commander F. W. Dickens, of the United States Navy, to accept a decoration of the cross of naval merit of the third class from the King of Spain, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 166) to provide for the punishment of offenses committed in the Yellowstone National Park, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 679) to provide for the location and satisfaction of outstanding military bounty land warrants and certificates of location, under section 3 of the act approved June 2, 1858, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 512) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, reported it with amendments and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Otori: which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 1853) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, commonly known as the Bowman act; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1854) to increase the efficiency of the foreign service of the United States, and to provide for the reorganization of the Department of State and the consular and diplomatic service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. This bill was prepared by a gentleman who is and has been for some time in the employment of the State Department, and has made a very thorough study of the matter. He has accompanied it with a report. He calls it a report. It is a paper full of very valuable suggestions. I move that the bill be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the invalid pension appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To enable the ambassadors of the United States at London, Paris, and Berlin each to employ a stenographer and typewriter at an expense not exceeding $1,500 per year, $4,500.

AMENDMENTS TO THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLEN submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. VEST submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was Ordered, That George W. Hardwick have permission to withdraw the papers filed in connection with the bill to remove the charge of desertion against his military record, said charge of desertion having been removed by the War Department.

STATISTICS RELATING TO WHEAT.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the following resolutions were adopted by the Senate on February 12, 1894, to wit:

"Whereas a number of leading commercial newspapers like Bradstreets' Weekly, the Cincinnati Price Current, and many others, persistently dispute the reports of the Agricultural Department relating to the yearly wheat crops of this country and its estimates of the amount of wheat there is in this country at different periods, usually largely increasing these quantities beyond those published in the reports and estimates of said Department; and

"Whereas such printed statements from unauthorized sources largely control the market price of wheat, and thereby reduce its price to American wheat producers, to their great injury if the reports and estimates of the Agricultural Department are correct: Therefore

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate at his earliest convenience—

"First. A statement of all the wheat, including the visible and invisible, there was in this country on March 1, 1893, together with the entire wheat crop harvested in this country during that year.

"Second. The amount of wheat that has been used for food and seed purposes between March 1, 1893, and February 1, 1894, the amount of wheat that will be required for like purpose in this country between February 1 and July, 1894, together with the amount of wheat and flour as wheat that has been exported out of this country since March 1, 1893, with the surplus that will be available for export between February 1 and July 1, 1894, after deducting the above amounts from the estimated surplus on March 1, 1893, and the entire wheat crop of that year, according to the latest information and most reliable experience found in this department;" and

Whereas, Over six weeks have elapsed without eliciting any reply to said inquiries; Therefore

Be it now further resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to send his answers to said resolutions to the Senate within three days from this date.

PUBLIC LANDS IN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate at his earliest convenience a list of all public lands located in odd sections in the States of Oregon and Washington, such list to state specifically the State and land district in which such lands respectively lie, giving the number of each quarter section and township, which were included within both of the limits of the two Congressional land grants, namely, that to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent resolutions of Congress, and that to the Oregon Central Railroad Company by act of May 4, 1870, such list to include only such lands as lie within the limits of both of such grants; and, further, a separate list of so much of the above-described lands, if any, as were not affected by the forfeiture act, approved January 31, 1885, declaring forfeited so much of the lands granted to the Oregon Central Railroad Company by the act of March 4, 1870, as were adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of that company's road and not embraced within the limits of the grant to that company for the completed portions.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1686) granting a pension to Margaret English was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4606) to amend sections 5365 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 2?th ultimo approved and signed the act (S. 260) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1887.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on April 2 approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

ISSUE OF BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER March 28, 1894, as follows:

The Senate having under consideration the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to prepare and report, as soon as practicable, a bill to repeal all laws authorizing or permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government, and to prohibit any and all such issues in future without express authority by act of Congress first had and obtained"—

Mr. PEFFER. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance. I do not think we should instruct the committee, but it should be referred. The committee would no doubt report upon it. I move the reference of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will not be referred, but that it will be passed. The United States has no occasion for gold. It owes no gold, and there is no occasion to increase the national debt to buy gold. A false impression has been created by brokers and others interested in selling United States bonds that such bonds are payable in gold. Such is not the fact. The United States has no bonds, circulating notes, or other obligations payable in gold. Every obligation of the United States of any name or nature, except gold certificates, is payable in coin of either gold or silver, at the option of the Government.

In 1878 a claim was made by interested parties that United States bonds were gold obligations. All the bonds then and now outstanding, including the $50,000,000 loan of February 1, 1894, are payable in coin, not gold coin. To correct the erroneous impression then existing, the late Judge Stanley Matthews, of the Supreme Court of the United States, at that time Senator in Congress, introduced the following resolution:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas, at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

This resolution, after exhaustive debate, passed the Senate on the 25th of January, 1878, by a vote of 42 to 20.

And the resolution was concurred in by the House of Representatives on the 28th of the same month by a vote of 227 to 85. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 7, part 1, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, pages 564 and 626.)

The outstanding interest-bearing debt of the United States, according to the Treasury statement of the public debt of March 1, 1894, is as follows:

Title of loan.	Authorizing act.	Rate.	Outstanding March 1, 1894.
		Per ct.
Funded loan of 1891	July 14, 1870, and Jan. 20, 1871	4[*]	$25,364,500
Funded loan of 1907	July 14, 1870, and Jan. 20, 1871	4	559,615,250
Refunding certificates	February 26, 1879	4	61,100
Loan of 1904	January 14, 1875	5	40,831,150
Total			625,872,000

The act of July 14, 1870, provides, as stated in the foregoing resolution, for redemption in coin of the then standard value, which consisted of gold dollars containing 25.8 grains of standard gold, and silver dollars containing 412½ grains of standard silver. The act of January 20, 1871, relates to the amount of bonds to be issued under the funding act of July 14, 1870, and does not change the character of the bonds. The act of February 26, 1879, authorizes the issuance of certificates for the deposit of lawful money, not gold coin, and also provides that such certificates may be converted into 4 per cent bonds issued under the funding act of July 14, 1870. The loan of 1904, mentioned in the foregoing table, was made under the resumption act of January 14, 1875, which provides for the sale of bonds issued under the funding act of July 14, 1870.

From this statement it will be seen that the entire bonded debt of the United States is redeemable in either silver or gold coin, according to the provisions of the funding act of 1870. The coin with which the Treasury notes called "greenbacks" were to be redeemed under the resumption act was to be obtained by the sale of bonds issued under the funding act, and was therefore gold or silver coin. The Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890 are expressly redeemable in gold or silver coin. The act declares that the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem such notes in gold or silver coin at his discretion, and that "he shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for." The statutes of the United States will be searched in vain to find any provision of law authorizing the holder of any United States bond, note, or other obligation, except gold certificates, to demand payment or redemption in gold.

Congress has ex industria excluded from every provision of law any promise, express or implied, to pay gold. This is well understood in the United States, and foreign investors must not be deceived by representations of brokers and others interested in the sale of bonds or any other paper issue of the United States, that the Government has undertaken to pay gold, except for the gold certificates.

The United States has no necessity for gold to pay debts. It has an ample supply of silver coin to meet the obligations of the Government. The only danger to the credit of the country arises from official usurpation and unauthorized representations that the United States is under obligations to pay gold. Former raids on the gold in the Treasury by interested parties, with the connivance or consent of the Secretary, must not be taken as evidence that such unlawful proceedings will be tolerated in the future as they have been in the past.

Now is a very good time to consider this question. I notice in the morning press that Guatemala has refused to tax her people to pay in gold what was contracted to be paid in other money. The obligations, she says, have been doubled by the creditor nation, and the people of Guatemala must suffer. Great Britain has by her act doubled the obligations of Guatemala, and she says she can not destroy her industries for the purpose of paying that double obligation which was created by destroying silver. I notice that the patriotic and brave President of Mexico, in his message a few days ago, said that they would not destroy the industries of Mexico by burdening the people with taxes that they are unable to pay; that they would do all they could to pay their foreign debt, but it had been so increased by the action of Great Britain and Germany (and by the United States, in fact, co perating) that it made the interest on their foreign obligations a great burden, but that the industries would not be destroyed by increased taxation.

Now, it is proposed here, and the process has been pursued, to pay in gold the obligations of the United States which were contracted to be paid in silver, and that is proposed to be done by the construction of the law in the Treasury Department. At the dictation of the bondholders these obligations have been doubled, and now it is proposed to borrow gold and increase the national debt, to issue interest-bearing bonds to borrow gold to pay obligations payable in silver according to the legislation and policy of Congress.

It is time that this was stopped. If the creditors have changed the obligations so as to compel other countries to pay more than they contracted to pay, and they refuse to pay because they are unable, well may the United States, when Congress has continuously adhered to the contract to pay in either gold or silver, refuse to pay in gold contracts payable in silver.

The Congress of the United States has never been induced to consent to the change of the obligation of the United States. Congress not having changed it, it can not be changed by the unauthorized issuance of bonds now. It is time that we should pass a law to prevent the Administration from paying other than what was contracted to be paid. It is enough for the people of this country to pay their honest debts according to the contract, and it is unjust for the bondholders, if they have power to do it, to control the Government and make the people pay what they have not agreed to pay.

The borrowing of gold will double the obligations the people agreed to pay under the act of Congress. The people are honest and propose to stand on the obligation of the contract; and all that threatens the stability of our Government and of our finances is a change of the contract by administration and not by law.

It is time that the people of the United States were allowed to stand by their contracts. Those who wreck the finances are those who change contracts. There is no trouble in paying the obligations according to the contract and maintaining the stability of our finances. The only danger to the stability of finances is the changing of contracts. We have a contract with the bondholders; we have a contract with the bill-holders; and the people of the United States ought not to be taxed to pay more than the contract calls for. It is dishonest to repudiate contracts. It is honest to pay according to the contract. All I ask is honesty and fair dealing. The issuance of bonds to buy gold when the United States owes no gold is oppression. It is extorting from the people what they did not agree to pay, what in justice they ought not to pay, and what they can not pay without great detriment to their industries, which are now prostrated by the schemes of this gold combination.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

COINAGE OF STANDARD MEXICAN DOLLARS.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is a resolution which I introduced yesterday which went over until to-day, and which I had intended to call up this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Colorado that the resolution to which he has referred will be laid before the Senate after the pending resolution shall have been disposed of.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am obliged to the Chair; I so understood. It is evident, however, that the morning hour is going to be practically consumed with the pending resolution. I had desired to say something upon the subject of the resolution which I introduced, looking to some arrangement with Mexico as to the using of our mints for the coinage of Mexican dollars. There are other members of the Senate who desire to briefly speak upon the same subject. As I shall be compelled to be away to-morrow, and as the morning hour this morning will be consumed by the pending resolution, I ask that the resolution submitted by me may go over until Friday morning, when I shall call it up, if there be nothing in its way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado that the resolution named by him shall be laid before the Senate on Friday next? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TOWN SITES IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 3606) to require railroad companies operating railroads in the Territories over a right of way granted by the Government to establish stations and depots at all town sites on the lines of said roads established by the Interior Department, to report to the Senate that the conferees of the House and Senate have been unable to agree, and to move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the House bill, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. BERRY. The conference committee in regard to one of the amendments adopted to the bill have been unable to agree, and I am confident will not be able to agree. I do not think that the members of the conference committee on the part of the House of Representatives will agree to the amendment which authorizes an election to be held in the Territory of Oklahoma. A majority of the Senate conferees insist upon that amendment. My own judgment is that the Senate ought to recede from that amendment and not encumber the bill with a matter which does not belong to it, which is in no way connected with it, which is so bitterly opposed by so many citizens of the Territory, and which the governor of the Territory in a telegram to me says will cause great trouble, possibly bloodshed, and universal disturbances throughout the Territory. I therefore move that the Senate recede from that amendment. I do not know which motion would take precedence, the motion to continue the conference or to recede, but if the motion is in order, I should like the Senate to recede because I do not think it is possible to agree upon the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire simply to say in reply to what has been submitted by the Senator from Arkansas——

Mr. PEFFER. I yielded to the Senator from Kentucky for the purpose of making a report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon, a conference report is a privileged question and did not require his yielding.

Mr. PEFFER. I understand that. I was going to suggest that if there is to be any discussion upon the adoption of the report, it be delayed until after I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am very sure that the discussion upon this question will not last as long as the discussion of the resolution to which the Senator from Kansas desires to address himself.

Mr. PEFFER. I yield.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply wanted to say, Mr. President, that if it be proper and competent for a member of a conference committee to express an opinion as to what is likely to result from a conference, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has seen fit to do, I beg to dissent from his conclusions. I am quite sure that there will be an agreement and that agreement will be based upon the concession of the House to the amendment offered by the Senate. Further, I want to say that we have been flooded with telegrams by the hundred and letters more numerous for the last three months contradicting one another, the same parties signing different and conflicting telegrams as to what the effect of the Senate amendment to this bill would be. I have turned over to the Senator from Arkansas a dozen or more.

The bill as it passed the House of Representatives made certain requirements upon the railroads through that Territory as to the building of depots and the furnishing of facilities for passengers and traffic. That bill stands to-day with one amendment of the Senate on it. So far as the railroads are concerned, the bill now in conference stands precisely as it passed the House. The Senate did not alter or change or modify a single demand upon the railroad companies; that stands precisely as the House passed it and as the Secretary of the Interior and the Senator from Arkansas want it. The only change made in the bill is an amendment, put on by the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote and a positive majority, declaring that the people of that Territory in these two counties of O and L, on notice to be given within twenty days after the passage of the law and thirty days' notice to be given before the election shall be held, shall have the right by a popular vote of the bona fide citizens of those two counties to choose and locate their county seats in those two counties. That is the whole issue. There is nothing between the Senate and the House to-day upon this bill except the one question as to whether the people of those two counties shall have the right by a popular vote of the bona fide citizens of those counties to locate their respective county seats, or whether the Secretary of the Interior, by arbitrary act, shall locate them where he pleases. That is the only issue between us.

The Senator from Arkansas does not believe that the conferees will agree. I am quite sure that I have at least equally good authority for expressing the conviction that they will agree.

As to the protests and threats of bloodshed, that Territory is to be inundated with blood provided the people are allowed by popular vote to select their own county seats! I hold in my hand a petition, signed by 2,667 inhabitants and residents of those two counties, praying for the enactment of this bill with the Senate amendment attached. I have already filed at the Secretary's desk a memorial signed by more than 4,000 of the citizens of that Territory protesting against the passage of the House bill unless the right to select their county seats is given, which is covered by the amendment that the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote has put upon the bill.

Furthermore, I have here in my hand, and I shall file them, the affidavits of, I would say, 20 people, sworn to, properly acknowledged, and certified, stating that the protests against the amendment of the Senate to which the Senator from Arkansas has referred, signed by thousands of people, was gotten up after the following fashion:

That the said Goodwin—

He himself circulated the petition; was the source of these affidavits; he was one of the circulators of the remonstrance which the Senator from Arkansas refers to, and here he is, Mr. William L. Goodwin, swearing that he was one of the circulators of that paper—

That the said Goodwin did on the 21st day of February, 1894, circulate one of said petitions and secured names of taxpayers and residents, together with the names of large numbers of fictitious persons not residing in this city or Territory; that at least three-quarters of said signatures were fictitious and fraudulent and written by said residents and circulators.

And so he goes through with all of these affidavits.

I have filed with the Senator from Arkansas telegrams from gentlemen reported to us to be of the highest character and responsibility, the telegrams themselves embodying their affidavits, in which they state and swear that a mass meeting was held at the Government town itself, composed of citizens of both the rival towns, and that resolutions were adopted unanimously demanding the passage of the bill as amended by the Senate. Under this state of case it is that I move, and I am so instructed by a majority of the Senate conferees that the Senate insist, upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, there have been handed me also a number of petitions from inhabitants in County O, signed by several hundred citizens of that county, urging the Senate to permit the residents of the Territory of Oklahoma and of those counties to settle their own differences, and that we shall not assume to determine for them where their side tracks and water tanks and railroad stations shall be located. The petitions are supported by certifications from notaries public that the signers to the petitions are bona fide residents of the county. They are supported by other affidavits showing changes now going on as to the occupancy of the different towns and indicating somewhat their shifting character.

In view of the fact that the Territory of Oklahoma is fully empowered by Congress to settle this whole matter, it does seem to me astounding that Congress should assume to determine where a system of railroad shall establish its water tanks and passenger stations. Anybody familiar with the shifting character of such towns, with the short life that often attends boom settlements, knows that in these very towns where we now compel by law a railroad company to erect its station at great expense and trouble to itself, in a few months the owls and the bats will be the only inhabitants. It does seem extraordinary that we can not permit the people of Oklahoma to settle their own differences in a lawful and legitimate way. I present the petitions, to be filed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator from Colorado says, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has already correctly stated that both Houses of Congress have agreed upon a bill requiring the railroads to stop their trains. The bill has been passed. That question is not submitted to the conference committee in any way whatever. The question, as was correctly stated by the Senator from Kentucky, is whether the Senate will insist upon its amendment compelling an election to take place there in regard to the location of a county seat. The other House objects to that amendment. The Senate placed it upon the bill. The question in conference and pending before the conferees is, will the Senate recede from that amendment or will the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment? That is the question at issue.

Now, in regard to what was said by the Senator from Kentucky to the effect that parties in that section of the country have signed conflicting telegrams. I have here the telegram sent to the Senator from Kentucky, as well as those as sent to me. A telegram came to him, which I have here, purporting to come from Mr. Spaulding, who is president of the board of trade at South Enid, signed with his name, in which it is stated that they had held a meeting there and that the people of South Enid had agreed that the election should take place. I have Mr. Spaulding's sworn affidavit, certified to by the judge of a court, that that telegram is a forgery; that no such meeting was ever held, and that he sent no telegram of any character or description to the Senator from Kentucky.

Not only that, but the newspapers are here: there is affidavit after affidavit from a number of reputable citizens there that no such meeting ever took place in South Enid, and that the people were unanimous and of one voice opposed to this amendment. Mr. Spaulding's name was forged to a telegram in order to try to induce the House of Representatives to agree to the amendment. It is shown to be a forgery, and he has sworn that he never sent the telegram, and that no such meeting whatever took place.

Mr. President, the question is narrowed down merely to whether we shall force those people to have an election when the governor of the Territory and numerous petitioners, numbering thousands, say it would disturb the conditions there, and that the Legislature of Oklahoma will determine whether a vote shall be taken upon that question.

But the Senator from Kentucky says he thinks the conferees, if the matter is submitted to them, will agree. I did not know that he held that opinion. I was of the opinion that we all thought we could not agree. We have had two meetings and have failed in both, but if the Senator from Kentucky thinks the conferees will agree, then let it go back and we will try it again. If we fail then, I shall desire to have a yea-and-nay vote in the Senate to determine whether the Senate will insist upon that amendment or will recede from it. Inasmuch as the Senator from Kentucky thinks there is a chance to agree, I am perfectly willing that the matter shall go back to the conference committee, and let us try it over.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to have the Senate decide by a yea-and-nay vote right now as to whether it will recede from the amendment which, by a liberal majority on a yea-and-nay vote, it put on the bill.

So far as concerns the Senator's statement that a meeting was not held, and the denial by telegram of Spaulding's dispatch to me, I very much doubt whether among the hundreds of telegrams that have come either to him or to me, there has not been another denouncing the first one as a forgery. That the meeting was held at the Government town there can not be a question, and that the people passed resolutions unanimously insisting upon the Senate amendment can not be questioned. Among the many papers which I filed at the clerks' desk is a sworn statement of the United States commissioner bearing out that assertion.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator says there can be no question that such a meeting was held and that such resolutions were adopted. I say the evidence in my possession, to my mind, is conclusive that the telegrams were an absolute forgery, that there is not a man in South Enid to-day who is in favor of the amendment, and that no such meeting whatever was held. There is a large number of these telegrams. Since the question has been raised in this way I think it would be well to let the matter go back for the present to the conference committee. The conferees will take the question up, put the matter in shape, and we shall present the matter accurately before the Senate and see whether this is a forgery and whether any such meeting was held.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether he withdraws his motion?

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the motion and consent that the bill be recommitted to the conference committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ISSUE OF BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], on which that Senator is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. If I can get the consent of the Senator from Kansas and of the Senate also that his resolution may go over until to-morrow without losing its place or its privileges I will ask that consent in order that we may proceed with the consideration of the Bering Sea regulations bill.

Mr. PEFFER. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama, provided, of course, the resolution retains its place. I have no disposition at all to be in the way of any important proceeding of the Senate; but as a motion has been made to refer to the Committee on Finance the resolution which I introduced, I desire to be heard upon the resolution before the question is put on that motion. That is all I ask for.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to allow the Senator from Kansas to submit his remarks, I will withdraw the motion to refer, although the motion is debatable.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Alabama asks that the resolution may lie over another day, and I have no objection if it retains its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will go over, retaining its place.

BERING SEA AWARD.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senate, under the order, to proceed to consider the bill to give effect to the award of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris concerning the preservation of the fur seals.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1836) to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate, and the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the motion to reconsider is not agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I hope no Senator will refuse a reconsideration of a bill which has passed the amendable stage when it was not understood by the Senate and was hastily done. I do not understand the chairman of the committee to ask for any such thing. I am quite sure there would be no detention of the measure. It would go through very quickly, and there would be no amendment insisted upon, in all probability, that would not be agreeable to the chairman of the committee, nor probably to any member of the committee. But to have in the Senate the custom when a measure is taken up, whether Senators are in fault or not, without the attention of the Senate when it gets past the amendable stage, to insist on such a snap judgment, would turn the Senate into a legislative assembly of a character such as has never yet been supposed to belong to it.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill has got into the shape in which we find it not by the slightest pressure on my part. Senators who, of course, witnessed the progress of the bill through the Senate seemed to have no amendments to offer. Thereupon it was read the third time, and the parliamentary question rose: Shall the bill pass? Then the Senator from Massachusetts desired to offer an amendment, which I understand he does not now care to press. I have made inquiry this morning to know whether there are Senators who have amendments to offer, and I can hear of none.

I shall not be at all responsible for any informality or any impropriety in legislation upon a provision of this character, or, indeed, upon any bill. But if the Senate will sustain me in it, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading be reconsidered, in order that all the formalities of legislation may be observed in the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which the pending bill was ordered to a third reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that while I think my amendment would improve the bill a little, out of deference to the Senator from Alabama, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who has examined it and who thinks the bill is entirely sufficient without it, I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a very few moments to make a presentation of certain facts in relation to the bill and this subject which have not as yet become official in any of the archives of the United States, for the reason that the final record of the arbitration tribunal has not as yet been officially certified to the Government of the United States. Nevertheless the Government, through its agent, has been put in possession of the final decree of the tribunal and also of all of the protocols which led up to it, and even beyond that, the discussions of counsel orally at the bar of the tribunal during more than four months of the investigation.

Since the adjournment of the tribunal, and within a few days one of the most eminent of the gentlemen who comprise that body has died, Lord Hannen, whose name when mentioned in the United States will carry with it a remembrance of his illustrous history. I feel very free to speak of him as a man not only of eminent abilities, but of broad, elevated character, splendid judicial bearing and grand statesmanship. I desire to pay this little tribute to his lordship as he has just passed away from the world. In order that the Senate of the United States and the American people may understand the terms of confidence and of friendship that existed between the American arbitrators and his lordship, and indeed all the members of the tribunal, and with a view of getting before the Senate in authentic form a statement of the feeling and opinions of the several arbitrators at the close of this very anxious and long-protracted period of discussion, both before the bar of the tribunal and in their sessions with closed doors, I desire to have read the concluding proceedings on the 15th day of August, which I have handed to the Secretary. I ask him to read the matter between the places I have marked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

"At 11 o'clock the meeting with closed doors came to an end, and was immediately followed by a public meeting.

"All the arbitrators were present, also the agents of the Governments of the United States of America and of Great Britain.

"Upon the request of the president, Mr. Imbert, secretary of the tribunal, handed to the Hon. John W. Foster, agent of the Government of the United States of America, the signed copy of the award of the tribunal intended for the Government of the United States.

"Mr. Imbert then handed to the Hon. Charles H. Tupper, agent of Her Britannic Majesty, the signed copy of the award of the tribunal intended for the Government of Her Britannic Majesty.

"The two copies of the declarations of the arbitrators, signed by them and intended for the Governments of the United States of America and of Great Britain, were handed in the same form to the agents of the two Governments."

"The President then spoke as follows:

"'Gentlemen, now we have come to the end of our task. We have done our best to accomplish it, without concealing from ourselves the difficulties which complicated it, nor the heavy responsibilities which it has imposed upon us. Selected from various nationalities we have not considered ourselves the representatives of any one in particular nor of any Government or any human power, but, solely guided by our conscience and our reason, we have wished only to act as one of those councils of wise men whose duties were so carefully defined by the old capitularies of France.

"'To assist us, we have had at our disposition a library of documents, compiled with extreme care, and in order that we might not lose our way among so many sources of information, men holding a high rank among the most learned jurists and eloquent orators of which the Old or New Worlds could boast, have been willing so liberally to bestow upon us their advice.

"'During weeks and months our labors have been prolonged, and it constantly appeared that some new matter had arisen before us and that some new problem pressed upon our attention.

"'To-day, on this great holiday, we are assembled to inform you of the result of our labors, hoping with all our hearts that they may be profitable to man and conformable to the designs of Him who rules his destiny.

"'We know that our work is not perfect; we feel its defects, which must be inherent in all human efforts, and are conscious of its weakness, at least in certain points as to which we had to base our action on circumstances necessarily liable to change.

"'The declarations which we offer to-day to the two agents and which we hope will be taken into consideration by their Governments, indicate some of the causes of the necessary imperfection which we have mentioned.

"'We have felt obliged to maintain intact the fundamental principles of that august law of nations, which extends itself like the vault of heaven above all countries, and which borrows the laws of nature herself to protect the peoples of the earth one against another, by inculcating in them the dictates of mutual good will.

"'In the regulations which we were charged to draw up, we have had to decide between conflicting rights and interests which it was difficult to reconcile. The Governments of the United States of America and Great Britain have promised to accept and execute our decisions. Our desire is that this voluntary engagement may not cause regret to either of them, though we have required of both sacrifices which they may, perhaps, regard as serious. This part of our work inaugurates great innovation.

"'Hitherto the nations were agreed to leave out of special legislation the vast domain of the seas, as in times of old, according to the poets, the earth itself was common to all men, who gathered its fruits at their will, without limitation or control. You know that even to-day dreamers believe it possible to bring back humanity to that golden age. The sea, however, like the earth, has become small for men who, like the hero Alexander, and no less ardent for labor than he was for glory, feel confined in a world too narrow. Our work is a first attempt at a sharing of the products of the ocean, which has been hitherto undivided, and at applying a rule to things which escaped every other law but that of the first occupant. If this attempt succeeds it will doubtless be followed by numerous imitations, until the entire planet, until the waters as well as the continents, will have become the subject of a careful partition. Then, perhaps, the conception of property may change amongst men.

"'Before laying down the mandate which we have received in trust from two great governments, we desire to offer our gratitude to all those whose efforts had for their object to facilitate the accomplishment of our task, and especially to the agents and counsel of the two Governments of the United States of America and Great Britain.

"'And now, a Frenchman may be permitted to use a word which his ancestors employed when they sung the lay of their great Emperor, and to say to all of you, 'Gentlemen, may you retain a kind remembrance of sweet France!'

"Lord Hannen, then addressing the president, said:

"'Mr. de Courcel, on behalf of your late colleagues I have to express my great regret that the absence of the President of the French Republic and Mr. Develle from Paris prevents our waiting upon them before leaving this city, where we have been so kindly treated. We must therefore beg you, as the French member of the late Tribunal of Arbitration, to convey to the President and to the French Government the expression of our sentiments of profound gratitude for the gracious reception and generous hospitality which they have extended to us. Our thanks are specially due to Mr. Develle, who, so much to his own inconvenience, has provided us in this palace with so splendid a domicile, and we offer him our apologies for having so long, though involuntarily, trespassed on his kindness.

"'And now, Mr. de Courcel, I have to discharge a duty which gives me peculiar satisfaction. I have to express to you our high appreciation of the manner in which you have presided over our deliberations. The public has had the opportunity of witnessing the sagacity, the learning, and the courtesy with which you have guided the proceedings during the arguments. Your colleagues only can know how greatly those qualities have assisted us in our private conferences. Let me add that our intimate relations with you have taught us to regard you with the warmest esteem and affection. Permit me to say that you have won in each of us an attached friend.

"'I must not conclude without an allusion to the remarkable occasion which has brought us together. We trust that the result will prove that we have taken part in a great historical transaction, fruitful in good for the world. Two great nations, in submitting their differences to arbitration, have set an example which I doubt not will be followed from time to time by others, so that the scourge of war will be more and more repressed. Few can be so sanguine as to expect that all international quarrels will be speedily settled by arbitration instead of by the dread arbitrament of war. But each occasion on which the peaceful method is adopted will hasten the time when it will be the rule and not the exception.

"'One of our poets has said that every prayer for universal peace avails to expedite its coming.

"'We have done more than join in such a supplication; we may hope that we have been the humble instruments through whom an answer has been granted to that prayer which I doubt not ascended from the hearts of these two kindred nations that peace may for ever prevail between them.

"'I bid you heartily farewell.'

"Senator MORGAN then addressed the following remarks to express his share in the sentiments which Lord Hannen had just interpreted:

"'The arbitrators on the part of the United States most sincerely unite in the very happy expressions that have fallen from Lord Hannen of grateful appreciation of the splendid hospitality of the French Government and people. We have been their guests for many months, and have been under the shelter of their laws and in the presence of their grand and beautiful civilization, and during all that time we have felt that our welcome did not cease to be cordial.

"'If we should take a narrow view of the results of this arbitration, the United States would have a regret that the important judicial questions we have been considering were not stated in a broader form in the treaty between these great powers. The opportunity was offered when the treaty was in process of formation to have presented in a more equitable light the rights of the nations to whose islands and coasts the fur seals habitually resort for places of abode and shelter in the summer season to control and protect them under the legal rules and intendments that apply universally to the animals that are classed as domestic, or domesticated animals, because of their usefulness to men.

"'My colleague and I concurred in the view that the treaty presented this subject for consideration in its broadest aspect. Our honorable colleagues, however, did not so construe the scope of the duty prescribed to the tribunal by the treaty. They considered that these questions of the right of property and protection in respect to the fur seals were to be decided upon the existing state of the law, and, finding no existing precedent in the international law they did not feel warranted in creating one.

"'As the rights claimed by the United States could only be supported by international law in their estimation, and inasmuch as that law is silent on the subject, they felt that, under the treaty, they could find no legal foundation for the rights claimed that extended beyond the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

"'This ruling made it necessary to resort to the power conferred upon the tribunal to establish, by the authority of both Governments, regulations for the preservation and protection of the fur seals, to which the treaty relates. In this new and untried field of experiment much embarrassment was found in conflicting interests of an important character, and yet more difficulty in the uncertainty as to the facts upon which regulations could be based that would be at once just to those interests, and would afford to the fur seals proper preservation and protection.

"'The United States will fully understand and appreciate those difficulties, and will accept the final award as the best possible result under existing conditions. A very large measure of protection is secured by the regulations adopted by the tribunal to the Alaskan herd of fur seals: and the virtual repression of the use of firearms in pelagic sealing is an earnest and wise guaranty that those common interests may be pursued without putting in serious peril the peace of the two countries.

"'It is a great pleasure to the arbitrators appointed on the part of the United States that they can bear the highest testimony to the ability, integrity, patience, industry, and judicial impartiality of their colleagues in this tribunal.

"'Our labors have been arduous and protracted, but have been attended with uniform courtesy and good feeling on the part of all the members of the tribunal.

"'We hope for still broader and better results from the foundations we have laid in this new field of international agreements.

"'To the president of the tribunal we owe a debt that we gratefully acknowledge, that he has so patiently and with such distinguished ability discharged the difficult duties of his position.

"'The agents of the respective governments have prepared, at great expense of labor, and with unusual skill and industry, every available fact that would throw any light upon the matters in controversy, and the counsel have dealt with the great masses of evidence so prepared with that marked ability for which they have become renowned upon other occasions. Conscious of having done all we could to reach conclusions that are just and will be salutary, we close our labors in the hope that they will be acceptable to all nations.'

"The president thereupon said that he cheerfully accepted the mission to transmit to the President of the French Republic and to Mr. Develle the thanks of the members of the tribunal.

"He thanked personally Lord Hannen and Senator MORGAN for the sentiments which they had expressed concerning himself."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senate will see there an expression on the part of the American arbitrators of their very high appreciation of the beautiful hospitality of France toward the tribunal while we were the guests of that Republic. The Senate will also see the amicable spirit which characterized the close of that very protracted examination, differing somewhat in that respect from a former occasion of great magnitude in which the two Governments, the United States and Great Britain, had participated. We have had many arbitrations with Great Britain, and in most of them I believe the communities of both Governments have been practically satisfied.

What the judgment of the American people may be upon this award it is not for me to say. I can only state that I have been very agreeably surprised that the award has so far escaped severe criticism at the hands of publicists in the United States or in any of the American States or of Europe; from which I infer that it is reasonably satisfactory as a solution of the question that was committed to the tribunal.

I have ventured to put these facts upon the record to-day with a view of giving to the Senate and the people of the United States an authentic statement of the manner in which the award found its way into the possession of the respective Governments, and the conclusive effect of it, according to the treaty of the 29th of February, 1892, in being so delivered into the hands of the agents of the Governments. The award became operative instantly upon its being so delivered in all the breadth and scope in respect of which the tribunal had any authority to speak anything whatever. That award, however, contemplates some additional action by legislation, as I consider, and it seems that the Government of Great Britain also has the same opinion, because I am informed that at this hour perhaps a bill similar in its substance is pending in the Parliament of Great Britain. I think when this bill is passed we shall have a very firm assurance that the award will be carried out to the satisfaction of both the great Governments, and that this long existing and very irritating subject will have had its final solution and perfect repose. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BOOK-MAKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I again ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill (S. 1680) to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] objected to it yesterday, but this morning he said he would withdraw his objection. It is a short bill and will take but a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1680) to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not rise to object to the request of the Senator from Michigan for the immediate consideration of the bill, but simply to put on record the fact that on a somewhat similar bill a minority report signed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] and myself was presented and is in print. I am opposed to the proposed legislation in toto, but I shall content myself with voting against the bill with the understanding that the minority report may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the action about to be taken to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on the District of Columbia has reported an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 31st day of January, 1893, entitled "An act to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia," and also the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 24 day of March, 1891, entitled "An act to prevent book-making and pool-selling in the District of Columbia," shall not apply to book-making at the spring and fall meetings at the Bennings and Ivy City race tracks when such meetings are held by organizations duly incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia: Provided, That such meetings shall be held only between the 1st day of March and the 15th day of December in any year, and shall not exceed a period of eighteen days each: And provided further, That there shall be but one spring meeting and but one fall meeting at each of the above-named tracks in any one year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the passage of the bill will not be pressed at this moment. I have sent out for the minority report which was made on a similar bill two or three weeks ago, and I desire to have it read before the question on the passage of the bill shall be put. It will be here in a moment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the report be printed in the RECORD without being read.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill to-day. I have no objection to its going over until to-morrow, or to its being taken up then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey objects to the present consideration of the bill.

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration during the remainder of the morning hour of Senate bill 1545 for the extermination of the Russian thistle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically Salsola kali tragus.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I shall object, in the absence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. He expected to address the Senate on this subject, and left the Chamber some minutes ago with the understanding that the bill would not come up this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. Perhaps the Senator from North Dakota desires to speak upon the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall, if it is apparent that it will come to a vote before the Senator from Texas (Mr. MILLS) can be notified.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am willing that the bill shall go over on that account. I was not aware that the Senator from Texas desired to address the Senate this morning.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Texas was here and had some documents which he desired to read to the Senate, but he has left the Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire that the bill shall go over until to-morrow?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am willing it shall go over on that account, so that the Senator from Texas may address the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I suggest that the Senator from Texas may be in the cloak room. I have sent there to see.

Mr. GEORGE. No; he has gone to his committee room.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none.

ALICE K. POTTER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 491) granting a pension to Alice K. Potter, widow of Gen. Joseph H. Potter, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments: In line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "month," to insert "in lieu of that she is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Alice K. Potter, widow of the late Gen. Joseph H. Potter, United States Army, subject to the provisions and limitations of existing laws, and pay her a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, will be called.

Mr. HARRIS. Before proceeding to the Calendar I wish to give notice that after the consideration of the bill for the extermination of the Russian thistle, which the Senate has consented to consider during the morning hour to-morrow, I shall ask the Senate to consent from day to day to the consideration of the tariff bill immediately after the routine business of the morning hour. I simply wish to give the notice now, so that the Senate may understand that after the disposition of the bill in charge of the Senator from North Dakota I shall ask the Senate to consider the tariff bill each day immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

VOLUNTEERS IN INDIAN WAR.

The bill (S. 743) for the relief of the citizens of the States of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington who served with the United States troops in the war against the Nez Perces and Bannock and Shoshone Indians, and for the relief of the heirs of those killed in such service, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of some one why these State troops, as I suppose they were, are to be paid any more than United States troops? I do not know who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] reported the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. During the absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who is entirely familiar with it, I reported the bill for him. The bill might be passed over temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska make that request?

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the bill may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection.

SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The bill (H. R. 3246) for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act the sealer of weights and measures shall receive a salary of $2,500 per annum in lieu of fees. Such officer shall be appointed by, and shall be under the direction and control of, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. He shall have the custody and control of such standard weights and measures of the United States as now are, or as shall hereafter be, provided by the District of Columbia, which shall be the only standards for weights and measures in said District.

SEC. 2. That the sealer of weights and measures shall give bond to the United States in the penalty of $5,000, with two sureties, or with the guarantee of a company incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, to be approved by the Commissioners, conditioned on the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, and shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before the Commissioners that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office, which bond or guarantee and oath shall be deposited with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the sealer of weights and measures, be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint one assistant sealer of weights and measures, at a salary of $1,200 per annum. The said Commissioners shall appoint such asditional employés as may be, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, temporarily required for operations of the sealer of weights and measures at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $600 in any one year. The said Commissioners shall provide for use of the sealer and the assistant sealer of weights and measures a suitable room or rooms to be used for an office; and the said Commissioners shall also provide a horse and wagon for the use of the sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures at such times as the business of their office shall require.

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby empowered and directed to prescribe a schedule of fees to be charged by the sealer of weights and measures for his services, in lieu of the fees now charged, which schedu e shall be printed and conspicuously displayed in the office of the sealer of weights and measures. Such schedule of fees shall be so arranged as to provide as nearly as may be for all the salaries and expenses connected with the office of the sealer of weights and measures, and no more. All fees collected by the sealer or assistant sealer of weights and measures shall be paid over to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be covered into the Treasury of the United States as other revenues of the District are now.

SEC. 5. The assistant sealer of weights and measures shall take the same oath his principal is required to take, and may, during the continuance of his office, discharge and perform any of the official duties of his principal, and any default or misfeasance in office by the assistant surveyor, or other assistant or helper of the sealer of weights and measures, shall be deemed a breach of the official bond of his principal.

SEC. 6. The sealer of weights and measures and, under his direction, the assistant sealer of weights and measures shall have the exclusive power to perform all the duties of their office. They shall from time to time try and prove all scales, weights, beams, and measures of every kind whatsoever used in the District of Columbia for the purpose of buying and selling, and such as shall be found to conform to the standards kept in their office they, or either of them, shall stamp with the word "approved," or with the letter "W," and the year in which said inspection is made; and such as are found not to conform to the standards in their office they, or either of them, shall stamp with the word "condemned" and the year in which the inspection is made. Upon the written request of any resident of the District of Columbia the sealer of weights and measures shall test, or cause to be tested, within a reasonable time after the receipt of such request the weights, scales, beams, or other instruments used in buying or selling by the person, firm, or corporation designated in such request: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any manufacturer or other person from keeping for sale scales, beams, weights, or measures; but on the written request of such manufacturer or other person the sealer of weights and measures shall test, or cause to be tested, and shall stamp as herein provided all such scales, beams, weights, or measures offered for sale: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to require or to authorize the sealer of weights and measures to test any scales belonging to the United States.

SEC. 7. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish the sealer of weights and measures a book to be kept in his office, in which book he shall register, in alphabetical order, the name of each person whose measures, scales, beams, or other instruments he or his assistant has inspected, together with the number and size of the same, and what number of each was approved and what condemned, with the time of inspection; and such book shall be open to the inspection and examination of the public at all reasonable times.

SEC. 8. No person shall neglect or refuse to exhibit any weights, scales, measures, beams, or other instruments used by him or her in weighing or measuring to the sealer or assistant sealer of weights and measures when and whenever demanded by them, or either of them, for the purposes of inspection and stamping: Provided, That no fees shall be collected for examinations made in excess of the number of examinations prescribed in the schedule of fees hereinbefore provided for.

SEC. 9. No person shall use, for buying or selling, any weights, measures, scales, beams, or other instruments, unless the same has been inspected and stamped "approved," or with the letter "W," by the sealer or assistant sealer of weights and measures.

SEC. 10. No person shall sell, or offer for sale, in any market, or in the public streets or alleys, or anywhere in the District of Columbia, any fruits, vegetables, or berries, in crates, baskets, or other measures, or any butter in prints, or any ice or coal, at or for a greater weight or measure than the true weight or measure thereof; and all ice, coal, meats, poultry, and provisions (excepting vegetables sold by the head or bunch) of every kind sold in the markets, streets, alleys, or elsewhere in the District of Columbia, shall be weighed or measured by scales, weights, or balances, or in measures duly tested and stamped by the sealer or assistant sealer of weights and measures: Provided, That poultry may be offered for sale and sold in other manner than by weight; but, in all cases where the person intending to purchase shall so desire and request, poultry shall be weighed as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 11. Any person who shall neglect or refuse to exhibit his weights, measures, scales, beams, or other instruments used for the purpose of weighing or measuring to the sealer or assistant sealer of weights and measures; or any person who shall use, in buying or selling, any weights, measures, scales, beams, or other instruments used for weighing or measuring, which shall have been inspected and condemned by the sealer of weights and measures, or which, upon examination, shall not be conformable to the standards in the office of the sealer of weights and measures; or any person who shall violate, or fail to comply with, any of the foregoing provisions of this act, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $100 and costs of prosecution; and the court may make a further sentence that the offender be imprisoned in the district jail till the payment of such fine and costs: Provided, That such imprisonment shall not exceed the period of six months.

SEC. 12. That no person shall sell or deliver any coal within the limits of the District of Columbia unless there shall be delivered to the person in charge of the wagon or conveyance used in delivering such coal a certificate duly signed by the person selling the same and showing the weight of the coal purporting to be delivered, the weight of the wagon or conveyance used in such delivery, the total weight of coal and conveyance, and the name of the purchaser.

SEC. 13. That no person in charge of the wagon or conveyance used in delivering coal, to whom the certificate mentioned in section 6 of this act has been delivered, shall neglect or refuse to exhibit such certificate to the sealer or the assistant sealer of weights and measures, or to any person designated by them, or to the purchaser or intended purchaser of the coal being delivered; and when said officers, person so designated, or such purchaser or intended purchaser shall demand that the weight shown by such certificate be verified, it shall be the duty of the person delivering such coal to convey the same forthwith to some public scale of the District, or to any private scale the owner whereof shall consent to such use, and to permit the verifying of the weight shown, and shall after the delivery of such coal, return forthwith, with the wagon or conveyance used, to the same scale and verify the weight of the wagon or conveyance.

SEC. 14. That it shall be the duty of the sealer of weights and measures to inspect, or cause to be inspected and tested, the weight of coal sold or delivered as aforesaid within the District of Columbia, and to take the proceedings necessary to enforce the provisions of this act.

SEC. 15. That any person who shall violate or who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of sections 6, 7, and 8 of this act, or any person who shall deliver or attempt to deliver coal of less weight than that set down in the certificate hereinbefore mentioned, shall be punished with a fine not to exceed $100 and costs of prosecution; and the court may make a further sentence that the offender be imprisoned in the District jail until the payment of such fine and costs: Provided, That the term of such imprisonment shall not exceed six months.

SEC. 16. That all laws and ordinances inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 971) to open, widen, and extend alleys in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. I object to the consideration of that bill at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator want the bill to go over under Rule IX or to go over without prejudice?

Mr. QUAY. It may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

FORM OF DEEDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that the same order be made in reference to the next bill on the Calendar, being the bill (S. 832) to simplify the form of deeds of conveyance, trust, and releases of land in the District of Columbia. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who has charge of the bill, is not in the Chamber at present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PENITENTIARY IN NORTH DAKOTA.

The joint resolution (S. R. 41) relative to the erection of a penitentiary in the State of North Dakota, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is in the Chamber, and I wish to have his attention called to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over until the attention of the Senator can be called to it, and in the mean time we can go to something else.

Mr. PLATT. I think that the bill had better be passed over, for when it was last under consideration the Senator from North Dakota asked that it might lie over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, and the next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1305) to amend "An act relating to the incorporation of certain corporations within the District of Columbia," approved October 1, 1890, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PUGH. Let that bill go over. The Senator who has it in charge is not present, and the main subject is before the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under the objection of the Senator from Alabama.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BATE. That bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. I see that two or three members of the committee who feel an interest in the bill are absent, and I suggest that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1655) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and to regulate proceedings before them, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in section 23, line 8, after the word "claim," to strike out "and shall also notify the plaintiff in such writ, or his agent or attorney, of such claim;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That when personal property is taken on execution or attachment issued by a justice of the peace, and such property is claimed by a person other than a defendant therein, or is claimed by the defendant to be property exempt from execution, and such claimant shall give notice in writing to the constable of his claim to such property, or that it is exempt as aforesaid, the constable shall notify the plaintiff in such writ, or his agent or attorney, of such claim, and shall also notify such plaintiff and the claimant before what justice and at what time and place a trial of the right of property shall be had.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERING SEA AWARD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith report from the Secretary of State, inclosing the final report of the agent of the United States before the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration; also the protocols thus far received, and certain other papers relating to that arbitration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, April 3, 1894.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next at 2 o'clock, after the close of the morning business, with the indulgence of the Senate, I shall submit some remarks on the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON addressed the Senate over two hours, when he was interrupted by Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa if it will be entirely agreeable to him to yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will proceed and conclude his remarks this evening if he can do so with personal convenience to himself.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope that the convenience of the Senator from Iowa will be consulted in the matter.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Rhode Island certainly did not hear my remarks or he would not have volunteered the remark he has made.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did understand the remark of the Senator from Tennessee, I think, perfectly well.

Mr. HARRIS. That remark submitted the matter to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALDRICH. And I have never heard any remarks of a similar nature when a Senator was addressing the Senate and a question of that kind has been asked him by a brother Senator.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to know from the Senator from Iowa if it is entirely agreeable to him to yield?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, after the intimation of Senators I think I shall conclude what I have to say to-night.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Iowa evidently indicates that he would prefer not going on longer to-night. As the Senator from Iowa has been speaking for two or three hours, I hope Senators on the other side will not object to laying the bill aside and allowing the Senator to finish his remarks to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I am perfectly satisfied that the Senator from Iowa can speak for himself, and I shall, so far as I am concerned, be glad to accommodate any wish of his in respect to the matter; but if entirely convenient to the Senator, I think it important that we should proceed with the consideration of this bill as rapidly as we conveniently may.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say that it was my purpose to consult the convenience of the Senator from Iowa. If it is entirely agreeable to him I shall make the motion indicated, but not otherwise.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad, of course, in the near future to have the Senate adjourn or attend to other business and finish my remarks to-morrow, but I do not wish to do so if it is distasteful to those who are in charge of the bill, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee.

[The speech of Mr. ALLISON is withheld for revision. It will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HARRIS. In view of the statement of the Senator from Iowa, I am sure that it is the wish on this side of the Chamber to accommodate as far as possible every Senator on this floor in respect to such matters; but believing, as I do, that it is vitally important that the business interests of the country should be informed at the earliest moment possible as to what the import duties are to be in the future, I shall hereafter insist upon proceeding as rapidly as possible. In deference, however, to the expressed wish of the Senator from Iowa, I consent that the Senator from Florida may make his motion.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have never known in my service in the Senate in the discussion of any measure, however important, on the second day of general debate, when a Senator had spoken earnestly and forcibly for two hours, as the Senator from Iowa has—not reading listlessly from manuscript, and 4 o'clock had been reached and a suggestion had been made by a Senator on either side that the Senator speaking suspend in order that an executive session be had—any such suggestion made as that which was made a few minutes ago by the Senator from Tennessee, thereby thrusting upon the Senator from Iowa the imputation that he would be consenting to an adjournment when the other side desired him to go on whether he would or not. I do not believe that that kind of moral duress will prevail if it is attempted hereafter.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Maine allow me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask him if he thinks he finds cause of complaint when I left the whole question to the convenience of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HALE. The whole thing was left in the most courteous manner to the convenience of the Senator from Iowa by the suggestion which the Senator from Florida made, that he desired to interpose a motion to proceed to other business if the Senator from Iowa would yield: and the Senator from Tennessee, not content with that, sought to spur on the Senator from Iowa, and, as any Senator would naturally feel hesitation about giving up when it was said that he might as well go on——

Mr. HARRIS. I must ask the Senator to yield again for a second.

Mr. HALE. Certainly I shall.

Mr. HARRIS. The object and purpose of my suggestion was that, as a mere matter of courtesy to the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Iowa should not yield the floor if he proposed or preferred to proceed with his argument: and therefore I referred the whole question to his convenience. The Senator can make whatever complaint he pleases of the course I have pursued in respect to the matter. I am indifferent as to his criticism.

Mr. HALE. Might it not have been well in the well-conceded and well-understood courtesy of the Senate if that suggestion had been left to the Senator from Iowa to make himself? The proposition was made by the Senator from Florida, as it is made every day before Senators have spoken two hours, that we should have an executive session, which it is known is desired by some Senators, and why could not the Senator from Tennessee have left the Senator from Iowa to say, if he preferred to go on, that he should go on?

If, Mr. President, this is a sample of the way in which the Senator from Tennessee proposes to railroad this bill through the Senate, not granting the customary courtesies, we shall take notice of that here and now.

Mr. HARRIS. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Maine for the lecture he habitually has to deliver about once a week, and I am glad that he has got it off this early in the week, as possibly we may have no occasion to have another during the week.

I shall not be found wanting in courtesy to any Senator upon this floor now or hereafter, and I should a great deal rather submit the question as to the propriety of my conduct to the Senator from Iowa than to the strained construction the Senator from Maine chooses to put upon it.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that whether or not he shall be submitted to what he is pleased to call a lecture from me—and I fancy I speak for other Republican Senators—will depend greatly upon the course that is pursued by the other side with reference to this bill.

Here is a bill of the greatest importance of any that has come before the country for many years. We have just opened the general debate upon it; it has not been proceeded with in a dilatory fashion for weeks and weeks as debate has proceeded in matters years ago on other subjects in the Senate; but on the second day of debate we are twice during the day notified by the Senator from Tennessee that extraordinary motions and methods will be resorted to to drive this bill through.

It is no lecture, I can tell the Senator from Tennessee, whatever he may term it, to be informed that this side is aware of its rights on this subject and will endeavor to maintain them.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 4, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 3, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, there were certain very interesting public telegrams in the newspapers this morning, and I rise to inquire whether a motion would be in order to have them read at the Clerk's desk for the information of the House? They relate to the elections which took place on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House certain executive and other communications

ELECTION CONTEST—O'NEILL VS. JOY.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands the regular order. The regular order is the further continuation of the contested-election case of O'Neill against Joy.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, the House adjourned a few evenings ago after having adopted a resolution for the arrest of absent members. Is that not the first business in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. No report has been made.

The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to reconsider the vote by which the House rejected the first substitute resolution of the minority of the committee. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 12, not voting 174; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote. The House will please be in order, so that gentlemen may hear how they are recorded.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the Speaker, who voted in the affirmative.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. COBB of Alabama with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. BRATTAN with Mr. ADAMS of Kentucky.

Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. HOOKER of New York.

Mr. PAGE with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. LIVINGSTON with Mr. STORER.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. MADDOX with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. FORMAN with Mr. LUCAS.

Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. STRONG.

Mr. STEVENS with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. LEFEVER.

Mr. SICKLES with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois with Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. LISLE with Mr. RANDALL.

Until April 9:

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of Ohio with Mr. PEARSON.

For this day:

Mr. SOMERS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. LINTON.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER with Mr. WRIGHT of Massachusetts.

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. GILLET of New York.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], but with the understanding that I may vote to make a quorum. The question of a quorum is involved in this call, and I therefore have voted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is laid on the table. The Clerk will now report the second resolution of the majority, for which there is pending a substitute. The Clerk will first report the second resolution offered by the majority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER. The minority of the committee offer a substitute for that, on which the vote will first be taken. The Clerk will now report the substitute for what has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was not legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. That is the resolution upon which the vote will now be taken.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. Division.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a sufficient number——

Mr. REED. Tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

The House divided; and the tellers reported, on the demand for the yeas and nays, 107 in the affirmative.

Accordingly the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If this vote is decided in the negative, will there be another vote upon the question of the right of Mr. O'Neill to the seat.

The SPEAKER. There will.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—O'NEILL VS. JOY.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the minority of the committee, which has just been read, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 23, nays 160, not voting 168; as follows:

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. TRACEY with Mr. POWERS, for the rest of the day.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 23, nays 160. The nays have it, and the substitute is not agreed to.

The Clerk will now report the resolutions of the majority.

Mr. WEVER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order that the motion to reconsider is not in order under the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. How did the gentleman vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that the motion to reconsider is not in order under the special order. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this order the House proceed to consider the contested-election case of O'Neill against Joy from Missouri; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee.

That immediately after said case is disposed of the House shall proceed to consider the contested-election case of English vs. Hilborn from California; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may then be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee. This order to continue from day to day until both cases therein mentioned are disposed of.

Mr. REED. We have already had one vote upon a motion to reconsider.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No point of order was made against it.

Mr. REED. And the rules——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The point of order was not made.

Mr. REED. The rules of the House show very clearly that the right to a motion to reconsider exists.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They do not override a special order which provides just what votes shall be taken.

Mr. REED. The rules of the House do not seem to override anything.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Chair will indulge me a moment.

Under the very terms of the special order, while it restricts the vote to the resolutions and the substitute, I contend that all legitimate motions relating to the substitute would be in order; and therefore a motion to reconsider would be in order. Any "intervening motion" not connected with the subject-matter of the resolution would clearly not be in order; but any legitimate motion in connection with the substitute or with the main proposition would be in order, like this motion to reconsider.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The very same might be said equally of a motion to adjourn or a motion to take a recess.

Mr. BURROWS. Not at all. This is a legitimate motion, arising under the rules, upon a vote upon the substitute, and is as much in order as the vote on the substitute itself. The House certainly is not to be deprived of its legitimate right to reconsider the vote by which this resolution was rejected. It is one of the motions permitted under the order. Suppose the House voted under a mistake or misunderstanding of the resolution, is it contended the vote could not be reconsidered with a view of correcting the error?

Mr. REED. If these rules are made——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The rule is very explicit, clear, and distinct. It leaves no room for doubt, it seems to me. The language of the resolution not only presents the subject-matter that shall be considered, but presents distinctly and definitely what votes shall be taken upon that subject-matter, and goes so far, in addition to that, as to say—no intervening motions shall be entertained.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (continuing). And the point of order would be well taken if the gentleman from Michigan made the motion immediately on the motion to lay on the table, but we have passed beyond that.

Mr. BURROWS. And does the gentleman believe that this would be an intervening motion within the meaning of the order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Any motion between two others is an intervening motion, if I understand the English language.

Mr. BURROWS. Then the motion to agree to this last resolution would be an intervening motion. Any vote on the substitute, whether upon its passage or to reconsider, is certainly within the terms of the special order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Any such motion as provided for in the special order.

Mr. BURROWS. A motion to take a recess, or to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn, would be an intervening motion, and not in order under the special order; but under the special order it seems to me that any motion connected with the subject-matter would be in order, and a motion to reconsider that vote also in order under the special order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then a motion to recommit this subject to the Committee on Elections would also be in order.

Mr. REED. It would depend upon who made the motion whether it would be admissible or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the objection; and the Clerk will report the resolutions of the majority.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was not elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress——

Mr. LACEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order as to that, too. [Cries of "Too late!" on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk proceeded to read the resolutions:

from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to the seat.

Mr. REED (during the reading). The House ought to be allowed to express its opinion on a matter like this. I respectfully addressed the Chair. I think——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman addressed the Chair while the Clerk was reading a matter before the House.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Iowa has appealed from the decision of the Chair; and it seems to me, on a question like this, a proposition to refuse the House the right of reconsideration, a point which has never been decided before, that the opinion of the House ought to be taken, especially as the rules guarantee to us the right of appeal. I will read the rule that I refer to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was not it too late? [Cries of "Too late" on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. It was too late, of course.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Iowa stood at his seat and endeavored to attract the attention of the Chair at once.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Iowa came in about two minutes late.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. REED. Here is the fourth clause of Rule I:

4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of, the House, and decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any member.

The language is absolutely explicit and conclusive; and the statement that a gentleman can be deprived of his right of appeal is utterly excluded by anything that has ever happened in the House.

Mr. LACEY. Will the Chair permit me to make a suggestion——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LACEY. I want to make a suggestion as to the ruling of the Chair. The Chair held that a motion to reconsider was a part of the main question, and as such could not be stopped. That the House must proceed to the end, because it was a part of the main question. This is a motion to reconsider——

The SPEAKER. The Chair intends to refer to that now.

Mr. LACEY. Now, that being the case, under the same rule why should the Chair stand up and say that the House shall not, in a question where the right of a member to his seat is involved, have the right of appeal?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is responsible to the House for whatever he does.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair has refused to accept the responsibility.

Mr. LACEY. I took the appeal as promptly as I could.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call the gentleman from Maine to order.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will take their seats. The Chair is going to decide the question, and does not desire to hear further.

The gentleman from Iowa will take his seat.

Mr. LACEY sat down.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Some days ago the House adopted a special order relating to the consideration of this contested election case. That special order particularly named what motions might be made. It took this case out of the rules of the House, and it did so for the express purpose of preventing any gentleman from obstructing a vote on the case by a majority of the House. The language of the special order is:

That immediately upon the adoption of this order the House proceed to consider the contested-election case of O'Neill against Joy from Missouri; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee.

On the demand of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] a division of the substitute was had. The first branch of it was voted upon. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] entered a motion to reconsider. No point was made against it, and the attention of the Chair was not addressed to it at the moment. There was a motion made to lay that motion on the table. Subsequently the point was raised that the motion was not in order. The Chair stated that the point not having been made at the time, it could not be entertained then, and the Chair was in some doubt as to whether the motion to reconsider was not legitimately a part of the vote.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask the Chair a question right there?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not be interrupted. The Chair was in some doubt whether the motion to reconsider was not a part of the vote upon the resolution within the spirit of the rule, but subsequent examination has satisfied the Chair that that motion is no part of the vote. It is a distinct privilege which is granted to the House under the rules whereby they may review a vote, whereby a member may again invite the opinion of the House upon the question, and, if the special order did not prevent it, the motion would be in order now. But the motion to reconsider is distinctly, in the opinion of the Chair, an intervening motion. It intervenes between the motion which has just been disposed of and the next resolution which comes before the House. Therefore, the Chair submits to the House the other question provided for in the special order, and the Clerk will report the resolutions reported by the majority of the Committee on Elections.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I again appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again declines to entertain the appeal, because that, too, is an intervening motion. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was not elected a member of the House of Representatives to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS. Is not the question divisible, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a division?

Mr. BURROWS. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. The question was already put to the House, and the House was voting upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands a division. The Clerk will report the first resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles F. Joy was not elected a member of the House of Representatives to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to the seat.

Mr. PATTERSON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The question being taken by count, the Speaker declared that there was a sufficient number.

Mr. REED. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker appointed Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee and Mr. REED.

The House divided, and the tellers reported 100 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. REED. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion.

Mr. REED. That is an intervening motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion, and the Chair has heretofore stated that unless he chose to give reasons for a decision at the time he makes it he would not give them. The yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 24, not voting 172; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER at the conclusion of the roll call, having directed the Clerk to call his name, voted in the affirmative.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired, but have voted to make a quorum. I would like to withdraw my vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection if there is a quorum without the gentleman's vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks consent to withdraw his vote.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will it interfere with a quorum?

The SPEAKER. One hundred and eighty members have voted. In the absence of objection the gentleman from New York will be permitted to withdraw his vote.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. On this question——

Mr. REED. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The vote having been recapitulated—

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I wish my vote recorded in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The change will be made.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John J. O'Neill was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Missouri, and that he is entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to this resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question having been taken on ordering the yeas and nays—

The SPEAKER. Evidently a sufficient number.

Mr. REED. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. REED were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes, 82.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. REED. I move a reconsideration of the vote just taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion. The yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 155, nays 28, not voting 168; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. COCKRAN (when his name was called). Mr. Speaker, if it be in order, I ask to be excused from voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee). The Chair can not entertain that request now. The roll call can not be interrupted. The gentleman must vote or not vote.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then I vote "no."

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MCALEER with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WADSWORTH. I voted to make a quorum, having reserved that right.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCCALL), with whom I am paired, if present would vote "no," and would vote for the contestee on all these questions. I voted simply to make a quorum, having that understanding with him.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will come forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. O'Neill of Missouri, having appeared at the bar of the House, was duly qualified, taking the oath of office prescribed by law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 139) to print Agricultural Report for 1893; when the Speaker signed the same.

CONTESTED ELECTION, ENGLISH VS. HILBORN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the second part of the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That immediately after said case is disposed of the House shall proceed to consider the contested-election case of English vs. Hilborn from California; that after two hours' debate thereon the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections and on any substitute that may then be pending therefor; that then, without intervening motion, the vote be taken first on the substitute and then on the resolution reported from the committee. This order to continue from day to day until both cases therein mentioned are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions recommended by the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel G. Hilborn was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress from the Third Congressional district of California, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Warren B. English was elected a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress from the Third Congressional district of California, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a substitute for the resolutions just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(1) Resolved, That Samuel G. Hilborn was legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Third Congressional district of California, and entitled to retain his seat in this House.

(2) Resolved, That Warren B. English was not legally elected to a seat in the Fifty-third Congress from the Third Congressional district of California, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] to control the hour in support of the report of the committee, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH] in support of the minority resolutions.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the debate be extended in this case.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. For an additional hour on each side.

Mr. REED. Is that satisfactory to the members of the committee on this side?

Mr. BROWN. It will be satisfactory if members on that side will vote on this case all the way through.

Mr. REED. Well, this side is not prepared to enter into any such conditional agreement as that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose we have the regular order.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is there objection to my request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has objected, and the matter is not before the House.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, this case comes from the Third Congressional district of California. The district is composed of seven counties. On the face of the returns, certified to the secretary of state under the law of California, it appears that the contestant received 13,138 votes at the election in controversy and the contestee received 13,163 votes, giving the contestee on the face of the returns a plurality of 25 votes.

Clarksburg precinct, in the county of Yolo, was not included in the returns. That precinct gave contestee 8 plurality.

The law of California requires that as soon as the polls are closed some one selected by the election board must carry the returns to the county seat and file them with the county clerk. When the board of election meets at the county seat it must canvass the returns if they are all in. If they are not all in the board must adjourn from day to day until all of the election returns are received or six adjournments are had, and then the county board makes up the returns for the county and the county clerk forwards them to the secretary of state. In the case of Clarksburg precinct, Yolo County, there was no such adjournment of the board as the law required. There was but one adjournment, and the vote of Yolo County forwarded to the secretary of state did not include the vote of Clarksburg precinct.

The committee thought, in view of the fact that the law had not been complied with respecting Clarksburg precinct, and that the contestee had received a plurality of 8 at that precinct that this plurality should be counted for him, and in the report made by the committee that was accordingly done, which increased his plurality from 25 to 33, making it incumbent upon the contestant to overcome the contestee's plurality of 33 votes before he can be entitled to a seat on the floor of the House of Representatives.

This case is in a very narrow compass. It is agreed by all connected with it, the parties to it and their attorneys, and by all the members of the Committee on Elections, that the Altamont precinct, in Alameda County, is the only precinct to be considered in the determination of the case. That precinct is a small one, there being but 70 votes in all cast in it, and but 51 of these votes were cast for the parties to this contest. On the face of the returns at Altamont precinct it appears that the contestant had received but 15 votes, while the contestee had received 37. This created a great surprise in the mind of the contestant and all his friends, for the reason that that precinct is composed of an unchanging population almost exclusively of farmers, with a few laborers. There is not a town within the boundaries of the precinct. It had invariably given a Democratic majority, not only for Democratic candidates to Congress, but for all who were candidates on the Democratic ticket until the last election.

In 1876 the Democratic candidate for Congress received 4 majority. In 1880 he received 5 majority; in 1884, 8 majority; in 1888, 27 majority; while in 1892 the unaccountable thing occurred and there was returned for the Republican candidate a majority of 22.

The contestant immediately proceeded to take affidavits touching the validity of the returns from this precinct, and the honesty of the conduct of the election there. As before said, but 70 votes in all were polled, and but 51 of these votes were cast for the contestant and contestee. Thirty-five of these voters made affidavits that they had voted for the contestant. That led to the commencement of this contest, and during the taking of the testimony in support of it 47 out of the 51 electors who voted for contestant and contestee at that election came forward and testified as to how they had voted. Thirty-seven of them testified that they had voted for the contestant; 6 for J. L. Lyons, People's candidate; 2 for L. B. Scranton, Prohibition candidate; and 2 for no candidate at all.

This left but 23 of the 70 voters of the precinct unaccounted for. How they voted no one knows. If you take the testimony of the voters who testified for whom they had voted, the returned plurality for the contestee in the entire district is overthrown and a plurality of 3 for the contestant is made to appear.

This statement is made on the hypothesis, however, or rather the presumption that all the voters of the precinct who did not come forward and testify as to how they had voted are counted as having voted for the contestee, a presumption which ought not to be indulged, for it is the duty of persons claiming votes in a contest to prove their votes before they are entitled to receive them.

Mr. PENCE. Did they have the Australian ballot system there?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. PENCE. How long ago was that system adopted there?

Mr. BROWN. Only a short time. Perhaps this election was the first one held under the Australian system of voting. My friend from California knows all about that and need not ask me.

Mr. PENCE. I am not from California; I am from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. You are out in that Western country and know all about it.

Mr. PENCE. I am about as far from California as I am from Indiana, and that is a long distance.

Mr. BROWN. In the case of Langston vs. Venable, a contested-election case heard and determined by the Fifty-first Congress, it was declared in the report and affirmed by the House that—

> Where the returns were rejected for fraud, and the only votes proved aside from the returns were for contestant, held, that no others could be counted, for it is evident that giving to contestee the vote not accounted for would be a direct encouragement to election frauds, as it would give him the benefit of every fraudulent vote which his friends made it impossible for the opposition to expose, even after the proof clearly established fraud to such an extent as to destroy absolutely the integrity of the official returns. In no case has such a rule been adopted.

And again, in Featherstone vs. Cate, the House decided as follows (Contested-election cases Fifty-first Congress, page 75):

> Where the evidence shows a return to be false and not a true statement of the votes cast, such return is impeached and destroyed as evidence. But the rejection of a return does not necessarily leave the votes actually cast at a precinct uncounted. The return being shown to be false, the parties are thrown back on such evidence as it may be in their power to produce, to show how many votes were cast, and for whom. All the votes may thus be proved and counted, but if only a part is proved those proved are to be counted and the rest disregarded.

In the same case it is also said:

> The return having been overthrown, and the contestee having failed to prove any vote in the township, is not allowed the 61 returned for him.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow a question there?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In this case, as I understand, they had the Australian system.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And the ballots were preserved?

Mr. BROWN. I am coming to that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And counted?

Mr. BROWN. I am coming to that point.

Mr. LACEY. In the case of Langston vs. Venable did not the Democrats all disagree with this report?

Mr. BROWN. I am not yielding to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BROWN. To overcome this testimony the contestee applied to one of the judges of the county court of Alameda County, the judge before whom the testimony was being taken, for a recount of the ballots. The recount was had, and the result of the recount was that the contestant had received 29 votes and the contestee but 22 votes, a striking difference between the returns made by the board and the result ascertained by the clerk who made the recount upon the application of the contestee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Were the officers of the election Democrats or Republicans?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. BROWN. I do not. [Laughter.]

This recount gives the contestant a plurality at this precinct of 7; and if the recount stands and governs the case the contestee is elected by 4 plurality. That is all the contention that the contestee, his counsel, and his friends on the committee make for him.

The contestee concedes that the returns made by the Altamont precinct board of election are false, worthless, and wholly unreliable. He stakes his case exclusively upon the result of the recount, and insists that the law is that the ballot is the best evidence; that it is the primary and controlling evidence, and that it must be heard in opposition to the testimony of the voters as well as all other testimony in the case, and govern and control. To some extent the contention of the contestee is true, but not in the broad sense he claims. In connection with the claim that the ballot is the primary and best evidence, a duty is imposed upon him who makes this claim, and that duty is to show that the ballots have been safely and securely kept; that there has not been tampering with the ballots, nor has there been an opportunity afforded by which tampering with them could have taken place.

When the rule grew up that the ballot was the best evidence, the present system of voting, which now prevails in almost every State of the Union, did not exist. An entirely different system of voting existed then, as I will show presently. The committee reached the conclusion, on consideration of all of the evidence given, and all circumstances connected with the case, that the ballots were evidence, proper and legitimate evidence, and should be taken and considered honestly and fairly with all the other evidence, surroundings, and circumstances connected with the case, but that they should not arbitrarily overthrow all the other evidence and absolutely dictate the decision of the case.

A word in reference as to whether the ballots in question had been safely and securely kept, as to whether they had been tampered with, and whether opportunity had been afforded by which they might have been tampered with, and whether if they are the identical ballots cast, whether they are in the same condition they were when cast. They were not safely kept; they were not securely kept. No man of common sense, in the light of the testimony in this case, will affirm that they were safely kept. They were sent in a package to the Clerk's office in Alameda County, and loosely thrown, along with a large number of other packages of the same kind, on the floor in one of the rooms of the public office, and there they lay and remained for several days, until after the question of inquiry into the validity of the election at Altamont precinct was fully known throughout the entire district.

Then they were gathered up and carried into the recorder's office, and there they were hermetically sealed in the safe of that office; I venture to say no case can be found where election returns were so safely and securely sealed up and kept as were these in the recorder's office after it was known that an inquiry respecting their integrity was to be made. But for more than a week or ten days before, they had been subject to the inspection and risk of being improperly interfered with by everybody about the clerk's office who chose so to do. A registration of voters had taken place, and several young men had been employed to assist the clerk of Alameda County in making the registration; and these young men came forward, or at least several of them did, and testified that they had kept guard watch over the packet containing the ballots by day and by night, and that it was in the precise condition when the recorder's safe was opened and it was put into it that it was when received by the county clerk and filed with him in the manner in which I have stated.

But the testimony makes it plainly appear that at least on one night the packet containing the Altamont ballots was left without this remarkable guard of young gentlemen who styled themselves deputy clerks, watching over it, and that the packet of ballots was left on the floor of the room all day and all night in the manner I have stated. No one will controvert but that I have stated the testimony correctly as to the manner in which this packet of ballots was kept.

"No opportunity," says the law, "shall be given for the ballot to be tampered with."

The board of Altamont precinct was called and every member of it save one, Mr. Udy, the Republican clerk, came forward and testified. Why that gentleman did not testify is unknown to the committee, and will remain a mystery in the minds of all except those who are closely connected with him. They testified that when the packet of ballots was opened it was in the precise condition it was when it was received by the county clerk, and two members of the board testified that these ballots had their initials on them; that they had put their initials on the ballots as the voters came in to get the ballots. Why were these initials put on the ballots by these worthy members of the board? The law of California did not require it to be done. Nothing required it to be done. There was too much method, precision, and arrangement, in guarding this packet by the deputy clerks and in the preparation of these ballots by that board of election which stands confessed as having made a false, fraudulent, and worthless return, to give much value to their testimony concerning the matter. I have, in brief, stated all that I care to say at this time, and perhaps at any time, concerning the keeping of these ballots.

Referring to what I said a moment ago as to the system of voting which prevailed when the rule was established that the ballot, if properly, safely, and securely kept, was the best evidence, I desire to call attention to the fact that at that time there was no such thing known as an official ballot. Every man who desired to cast his vote voluntarily procured his ballot and prepared it or had it prepared by his own voluntary action.

There was nothing compulsory upon him in respect to obtaining a special or official ticket, or as to how it should be made out. The tickets were furnished by the political parties, and were distributed to the voters outside of the polls. If the voter was an illiterate person he received his ticket outside of the precinct, away from the polls, and he could give it to any person in whom he had confidence, or to any number of persons in whom he had confidence, to be prepared for him to vote. It was prepared according to the directions which he voluntarily gave for its preparation, and if he had the slightest doubt as to whether his directions had been correctly followed, he could make further inquiry, and when fully satisfied that no imposition had been practiced upon him, he carried his ballot to the polls and saw it deposited in the box. That freedom of choice is not accorded to the illiterate voter now in any State, and especially in the State of California. There an official ballot is prepared for the voter. All the ballots are kept inside the polling place. The illiterate voter goes inside the polling place, and if he votes at all he must take the official ballot, which he receives from the hands of some officer or officers of the board, with the selection of whom he has not had the slightest thing to do. He must submit to have his ballot made out, not by the man of his choice, but by the man the law has chosen for him; who may be a man in whom he has confidence, or may be a man in whom he has no confidence. He has no opportunity to inquire and ascertain whether the ballot has been prepared as he directed. He must vote it as the officer has prepared it or not vote at all. Such was the case at Altamont precinct at this election, where some 10 or 12 illiterate voters voted. They went into the voting place, and from this board, which stands confessed as having made a false, fraudulent, and spurious return, they were compelled to receive their ballots and have them made out by members of that board. Well may we come to the conclusion, as the committee did, that the rule that the ballots are the best evidence, whatever force it may formerly have had, should now be relaxed to some extent at least.

In opposition to these ballots, which were kept in the manner I have described, and passed through the hands and custody of a board whose official conduct stands stamped with falsehood and uncertainty, the contestant puts the testimony of the voters at Altamont precinct. As I have already said, they are a class of voters not shifting and changing from place to place, but they are people who have lived there for many years, and if you will look at the record of this case and ascertain from it the places of their nativity, you will find that they belong to the better classes of population. It was an easy matter to ascertain how 51 men voted. Thirty-seven of them came forward, those who made out the ballots for themselves and those who had had them made out by some of the members of this board, and swore that they had voted for the contestant.

In view of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case the committee reached the conclusion, and I think wisely and justly, that these ballots, passing through the hands of such a board as the contestee admits this board to have been, and afterwards kept in the manner in which they were, ought not to be permitted to brand the brows of these voters with falsehood and perjury and condemn their souls to perdition. If the voters who voted at Altamont precinct are to be believed, there is no question but that the contestant has been elected to this Congress by a majority of 26.

A moment or two upon the subject of the admissibility of the testimony of the voters, and then I am done. There never was a time, so far as my limited information concerning the law is concerned, but that where the integrity of the ballot itself was called in question, where the question was whether it was the ballot which the voter had cast, and if so, whether it was still in the condition in which it was when he cast it—there never was a time, I say, when that was the question that the law did not say that the voter was a competent witness to testify as to how and for whom he had voted. So, in any view of this case, the testimony of these men, unimpeached and unimpeachable, is admissible, and should be given the value the House may deem it entitled to in connection with all the other facts and circumstances of the case.

In the case of Bisbee vs. Finley (in the Forty-seventh Congress, I think) it was held that—

Where the evidence shows a return to be false and not a true statement of the votes cast, such return is impeached and destroyed as evidence, and the true vote may be proven by calling the electors whose names are on the poll books as voting at such poll, and no votes not otherwise proven should be counted. (6 Congressional Election Cases, page 62.)

This case was affirmed by the Fifty-first Congress in the case of Featherstone vs. Cate, and that Congress has gone into history to the great gratification and glory of the gentleman from Maine who presided over it with such grace and beauty.

In that case the testimony of the voters who testified as to how they had voted overthrew all ballots and everything else, and seated the contestant.

Mr. REED. Were the ballots in that case preserved?

Mr. BROWN. I can only suppose that they were, from the fact that the law required them to be preserved. I know nothing about it.

Mr. REED. Were they produced here in evidence?

Mr. BROWN. I can not say. My friend from Maine had more to do with that Congress than I had.

Mr. REED. But I did not have much to do with the elections.

Mr. BROWN. Perhaps not; but you had much to do with the seating of contestants during that Congress.

Mr. REED. Now, will my friend from Indiana reply to me on that point—because that is the vital point here—were the ballots preserved?

Mr. BROWN. I was not on the Committee on Elections in that Congress, and, speaking truthfully and sincerely, I do not know whether they were or not. But I am now informed by the gentleman from Arkansas now representing that district that the ballots in that case were kept.

Mr. REED. Now, if the gentleman will allow me another question, is not that the vital point? Is not the issue here between the ballots which were absolutely produced and the testimony of the voters, while in the Featherstone case that was not the point?

Mr. BROWN. I do not agree with the gentleman from Maine that that is the vital point in this case. I agree that it is a point to be considered, and I have referred to it; but in view of the fact that under our present system of voting the illiterate voter is compelled to take some one not of his own choosing to prepare his ballot for him, or not vote at all—in view of the fact that he does not and can not now exercise that freedom of action and voluntary conduct connected with his vote that he could formerly—the ballots should not be so strongly held to be the best evidence as they formerly were.

Mr. REED. That is not apropos to the St. Louis case?

Mr. BROWN. We have, thank Providence, got through with that case.

Mr. REED. I would not say "thank Providence." I would say thanks to the "intervening motion" theory! [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. That was an instrument of Providence by which we got through with the case.

Mr. REED. In the nature of a "special Providence."

Mr. BROWN. McCrary on Elections, section 539, says:

If an officer of the election is detected in a willful and deliberate fraud upon the ballot box, the better opinion is that this will destroy the integrity of his official acts, even though the fraud discovered is not of itself sufficient to affect the result.

Again, in the case of McDuffie vs. Turpin, in the Fifty-first Congress, it was stated:

If these officers would falsify the returns, it follows that no reliance could be placed in the contents of the ballot boxes left in their hands after the election.

Payne on Elections, 596, says:

When the proceedings are so tarnished by fraudulent, negligent, or improper conduct on the part of the officers that the result of the election is rendered unreliable, the entire returns will be rejected, and the parties left to make such proof as they may of the votes legally cast for them.

The action and conduct of the Fifty-first Congress answers, it seems to me, the question which my friend from Maine has suggested.

In the contested election case of McGinnis vs. Alderson, in the Fifty-first Congress—in which case my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] made the report, the report which was not acted upon by the House, though undoubtedly it would have been if it had ever been brought in—it was held:

The recount in Kenawha County showed a change of 9 votes in Alum Creek precinct, and 25 votes in Charleston precinct.

In the West Virginia election cases in the present Congress, and in the famous case in the gubernatorial contest between Fleming and Goff, we have had striking illustrations of the dangers of a recount of the ballots where a change of a few tickets may affect the result. The law of West Virginia, whilst it provides for such recount, attempts to throw around the recount such elements of safety as will prevent a fraudulent change of the ballots. Such recount is always viewed with suspicion, and is full of danger.

I subscribe to that, and that is the contention here. I say to my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] that I am not one of those who kick, cuff, and condemn everything the Fifty-first Congress did. Here is one thing it did which I approve.

I now refer to the case of Clayton vs. Breckinridge—another contested-election case in the Fifty-first Congress—in which case also my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] made the report, which however, was not voted on in the House.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes it was.

Mr. BROWN. So it was. I thank my friend for correcting me.

Mr. STOCKDALE. And Mr. BRECKINRIDGE was unseated.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] voted against the correctness of that report, and now he is citing it.

Mr. BROWN. Well, "the light of experience" ought to be worth something, ought it not?

Mr. LACEY. "While the lamp holds out to burn."

Mr. BROWN. While, perhaps, I did not agree with my friend from Iowa at that time, yet under the rules of the Fifty first Congress I was compelled to surrender while he carried the flag to victory. Here is what that report said, and it is well said:

> If the returns have been falsified by the election officers, it a well-settled rule of law that they cease to have any prima facie effect, and each party can only be credited with such votes at the box in question as he may show by other evidence. This rule is one of long standing. It works no hardship upon contestee which does not fall as heavily on the contestant. The contestant is required, in the first instance, to show the fraud in the return, and then must follow that up by proving his vote: or, in some instances, the proof of the fraud is connected with the proof of his vote.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman from Indiana notice the words used there—"falsified" and "fraud"?

Mr. BROWN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REED. Is there any such thing charged here?

Mr. BROWN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REED. Against whom?

Mr. BROWN. If fraud is shown, it is immaterial who committed it. No one knows that better than the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. Then nobody is charged with this fraud?

Mr. BROWN. I am not charging any particular individual with the fraud.

Mr. REED. On what basis do you make the charge of fraud?

Mr. BROWN. My friend well knows——

Mr. REED. Do not tell me what I know; I am trying to find out what I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. Very well, I will tell the gentleman from Maine what he does not know——

Mr. REED. Thank you.

Mr. BROWN. But what he ought to know; and if he will listen to me, he will know hereafter.

Mr. REED. Well, perhaps the gentleman had better not listen to the suggestions of some of those quite near him.

Mr. BROWN. Now, my friend ought to know that fraud lies in circumstantiality always.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not always.

Mr. BROWN. Well, nearly always. It is as difficult to prove a fact counted on as fraud as it is to prove that someone saw the felon sneak into the house at night to steal. Yet circumstantial evidence may prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. So it is with the question of fraud. The article in this contest referring to Altamont precinct declares against the validity of the conduct of the election at that precinct and the truth of the returns. It questions the honesty of the election and all connected with it; and whether it is mistake, inadvertence, fraud, or anything else, if the returns are impeached for any of these causes in such way as to call in question the integrity of the conduct of the men who made the returns—the men who constituted the election board—in that event I say that all that went through the hands of this election board is spurious and fraudulent, and of no value.

Mr. REED. But that——

Mr. BROWN. Let me continue. And I put the testimony of the honest and incorruptible voters of that precinct against the testimony and conduct of this election board, which, the contestee admits, made a false, unreliable, and worthless return. Against this election return, and the ballots which passed through the hands and custody of this disreputable election board, I put the unimpeached testimony of the voters, and leave it for this House to say whether it will put most confidence in the testimony of these voters or in the oath and conduct of this impeached election board.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman accepts these men as voters.

Mr. BROWN. And now, to weaken the credibility of most of the men composing this election board in the mind of the gentleman from Maine, I will say that to give force and effect to their testimony they swore that they voted for the contestant.

Mr. REED. That is precisely the point I wanted to get at.

Mr. BROWN. It is a fact that they so swore.

Mr. REED. That is what I wanted to ask, whether they were not all opposed to Mr. Hilborn?

Mr. BROWN. That was their statement. They said so, but I would no more believe them on their oaths as to who they voted for than I would believe them on their oaths respecting a return that is confessed by all to be false and fraudulent, so admitted by the contestee.

Mr. REED. Still, you count them to make a plurality.

Mr. BROWN. Not at all. We can dispense with them and still have the plurality.

Mr. REED. But you indorse them in your report.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman from Maine knows that an impeached witness is always counted, unless the opposite party calls him in question.

Mr. REED. But in order to reduce the plurality of the contestee you proceed to say these men are scoundrels, and then count their votes, although you attack them from your side on account of this election.

Mr. BROWN. It is immaterial whether they are counted or not. They can be cast out of the count and the contestant will have a plurality of 19.

And as much as I admire the skill and adroitness of my friend from Maine in attempting to draw the attention of the House away from the actual question, I again say that the question, and the only question here is, will the House rely upon a return which is false and made false by the same men who had the custody and control of the ballots, and also in view of the further fact that ten or twelve illiterate voters were compelled to have their ballots made out by this board or some member of it, or will the House take the testimony of thirty-seven gentlemen who voted for contestant at the precinct, and against whom not a word of suspicion has ever been uttered?

Now, with all due deference to my friend [Mr. REED], I must decline to yield further. I have done an injustice to our side by having taken all the time but fifteen minutes in opening the case.

Mr. REED. The gentleman has a right to decline, of course.

Mr. BROWN. I decline from the want of time only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. BROWN. I reserve that.

Mr. WAUGH. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, right here I venture to ask the attention of the House, because the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] was kind enough to permit a sufficient amount of interruption to get before the House in a general way a proposition which is very astonishing to me.

The House will recollect that at this precinct there were only two men out of the election board who were favorable to Mr. HILBORN, the sitting member. The other six were against him; two for him and six against him. A return was made, not a false return as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] says, but an incorrect and mistaken return was made. This return was made by this election board, six of whom were against the sitting member and two of whom were for him. Apparently there was no element of fraud there. When fraud is committed it is by partisans of the same side, and not by partisans upon the opposite side. There is an utter absence of any proof of misconduct on the part of these men, except what arises from the error in the returns.

Now fraud, notwithstanding the very luminous description which was given of it by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN], notwithstanding the haziness of fraud, it must be proved. Fraud is one of the things which the law never infers. It must be proven. Now, the sole proof that is offered here is the fact of a mistaken return. When that was discovered, and it was apparent from the other votes that there had been a mistaken return, recourse was had to the next best evidence. What is that? It is the ballots themselves, which were preserved, which could not have been falsified: for everybody testifies to facts which show that they could not have been falsified. When those ballots were counted, a sufficient vote was given and found there to elect Mr. Hilborn, and above all things the ballots as counted were perfectly congruous with all the rest of the votes.

That is, the vote for Mr. Hilborn and the vote for the gentleman who is contesting his seat was of normal size, compared with other party votes, thus plainly negativing the idea of fraud, and showing simply that a mistake was made, and that a mistake was made in favor of Mr. Hilborn by his opponents. Now, you are asked to regard that as evidence of fraud. You are asked to infer fraud when the absence of fraud is absolutely proved. Now, let me tell you what was done——

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. Let me finish my point and then I will answer the gentleman. The majority of the committee absolutely take the testimony of five of these fellows whom they charge with fraud. They take their testimony that they voted for this contestant and give full credit to that testimony, and count their votes in favor of the contestant. They were scoundrels when they testified that nothing had been done to stuff the ballot boxes, but they are honest citizens when they testify that they voted against Mr. Hilborn. This committee have given them a certificate of good character by counting their votes; and at the same time they ask you to reject their testimony that nothing dishonest was done. They ask you to reject the fact that they were partisans against Mr. Hilborn. And why? Simply because Mr. Hilborn is only elected by 4 votes. That is the only reason on earth that can be given.

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend explain this matter: The record shows that there were two Congressional elections held at that time, one for the short term and one for the long term, and this same falsity respecting the returns occurred exactly the same in each of the elections, the one for the long term and the one for the short term.

Mr. REED. Now, you will perceive very plainly that this is a charge made that the partisans of the contestant have done something wrong; and it is simply a mere inference, nothing else. There is no proof of fraud, such as will enable you to go back of the ballots. There is no testimony to show that the ballots are not there just as they were cast. On the contrary, the evidence is plenary that the ballots were in the pouches just as they were cast, and you are asked to go back, under the Australian system, or a system similiar to that, and take the testimony of voters as to their votes, when you have the votes themselves. In other words, you are substituting oral testimony for written, you are to substitute the word of mouth for a deed which proves itself.

As I said as to the last case, my belief that this injustice will be perpetrated is going to be reluctant. If it had not been for the doctrine of the "intervening motion," I have no doubt it would have been as reluctant as it has been on the previous case; but you can not afford to discredit yourselves twice. The news from outside would not encourage this method of election.

I reserve whatever time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used seven minutes.

Mr. WAUGH. Yield me the remainder of the time that you have not consumed.

Mr. REED. I yield to the gentleman such time as I have not consumed.

Mr. WAUGH. Does any gentleman on the other side desire to address the House at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, the whole question in this case turns upon the vote of Altamont precinct. It has narrowed down to the legal question. There is no question of fraud in this case; but there was a mistake made, and I believe honestly made, by the election officers of Altamont precinct. It is conceded on both sides that there was a mistake in the count of the vote and the return of the vote between the contestant and the contestee at the Altamont precinct. Now, let us see the situation we are in from a legal standpoint. The contestant brings before us the testimony of thirty-seven persons who he claims voted for him. This he asks the House to take in correction of the mistake in the returns, and to determine the state of the ballot between him and the contestee. Upon the other hand, the contestee brings into the House the ballots that were actually cast by the electors at that precinct, properly preserved as I will show further on, and asks that the ballots cast by the electors, the voters, be accepted in correction of the mistake in the returns made by the election board of Altamont precinct as determining the correct state of the vote between him and the contestant.

Now, at this point I desire to read so much of the California statutes, together with a decision, or an extract from a decision of the supreme court of California, giving the interpretation and meaning to the sections that I will read, so that as we go along in the history of the case we may bring the facts and the law up face to face and see the application of the facts to the law and the law to the facts in the case at hand.

The law provides that at the close of the balloting the ballots shall be counted in the presence of the bystanders.

The law also provides by section 1259 that the ballots as they are counted shall be handed to one of the members of the election board, who shall string them upon a string. The law further provides when they are thus strung upon a string they shall be securely placed in a cloth envelope, which shall be sealed securely, and the names of the election officers shall be written across this sack or envelope, up against the seal of the package; that this sealed package shall be delivered to one of the members of the board, and that he shall deliver it to the clerk of the circuit court. Now, upon the subject of the preservation of the ballots I want to read, so that we may get the idea the supreme court of California has as to the meaning of the preservation of the ballots and the intent of their preservation.

The question is not the "opportunity" to meddle with them. That is a circumstance, I will admit; but the controlling question is, was that opportunity "improved," and were the ballots meddled with? That is the question. Why, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] says the question was whether there was an "opportunity." That is only a circumstance, but does not go to the essence of this case. The question is, was that opportunity improved, and the ballots tampered with? The law of California requires the ballots to be sealed up in a package and returned to the county clerk, whose duty is prescribed by the code of California:

> Upon the receipt of the packages the clerk must file the one containing ballots, and must keep it unopened and unaltered for twelve months, after which time, if there is not a contest commenced in some tribunal having jurisdiction about such election, he must burn the package, without opening or examining its contents. (Cal. Political Code, sec. 1265.)
> If within twelve months there is such a contest commenced, he must keep the package unopened and unaltered until it is finally determined, when he must, as provided in the preceding section, destroy it.

Now, I call attention to the following extract from the opinion of the supreme court of California upon the proper interpretation and meaning to be given to the two sections I have read:

> The Legislature could have had no other design in thus providing for the preservation of the ballots than to make them evidence of their own contents and a test of the correctness of the returns made up from them by the officers of the election.
> * * * Thus they are recognized by the law not only as a part of the election returns, and therefore evidence of what transpired at the election, but as evidence of a higher and more satisfactory grade than the tally paper. Intrinsically considered, it must be conceded by all that the ballots themselves are more reliable, and therefore better evidence than a mere summary made from them. Into the latter errors may find their way; but with the former this can not happen. The relation between the two is at least analogous to that of primary and secondary evidence.

I read from California, on page 306:

> In case of a contest the ballots are the primary and best evidence of the number of votes received by any candidate, provided they have not in any way been tampered with; and the burden is upon the contestant to show that fact.

Now, I desire to call attention for a short time to the facts in the case. The Third district of California is Republican. The county of Alameda is Republican. Altamont precinct is slightly Democratic. It cast but 70 votes at the last election, only 51 votes as between candidates for Congress. The evidence shows conclusively that there was no general interest taken at Altamont precinct in the election for Congressman. The evidence shows conclusively that there was not a voter who cast his ballot at Altamont who even knew Hilborn. Hilborn was not in that precinct during that entire canvass; neither did he have anyone looking after his interests on the election day or the day preceding the election.

The election board at this precinct consisted of Edward Gunn, inspector, John Campbell, judge, W. H. Donohoe, clerk, and Timothy Ryder, clerk, all Democrats; W. R. Thomas, judge, Prohibitionist, William B. Faulkner, clerk, Independent, T. M. Shaffer, inspector, Republican, and Henry Udy, clerk, Republican.

There was not a Republican who touched a single ballot that was cast at that precinct except Shaffer, and he touched them only for the purpose of writing his name upon the back of them along with Gunn's. After the close of the voting the count proceeded, Thomas reading the ballots. He voted against Hilborn. Mr. Gunn, who voted against Hilborn and for English, was looking over over his shoulder to see that he read them right. Campbell, a Democrat, who voted for English, strung them on a string and Gunn and Shaffer indorsed their names upon the backs of the ballots. The clerks who kept the tally were Donohoe and Faulkner, both of whom voted for English. Mr. Campbell was the member of the board who was selected to transmit the packages, after they were sealed, to the county clerk. He was a Democrat. Every one of these six men voted against Hilborn and five of them voted for English, Mr. Thomas, the Prohibitionist, voting for his Prohibition candidate; and every one of them swore that the ballots put into the envelope at the close of the election were the identical ballots that were cast on that occasion.

The ballots were sealed up in the cloth envelope, and the Democratic clerk of that election, in the presence of all the members of the board, did the sealing. Every member of that board said that the election there was conducted upon that occasion in such a way that those ballots could not have been tampered with or even touched by any outside hand. They were put in an envelope and sealed up. Every member of the election board proper—I mean the judges and inspectors, there being two of each—wrote their names across the lapel of the envelope. The packages thus sealed up were handed to Mr. Campbell on the evening of the 8th of November, at the close of the election, and were taken to the clerk's office on the 9th day of November, and the canvassing board did not meet until the 14th of November.

These ballots were placed in a pile with all the other ballots of the county. This was the first election held under the Australian system, and the ballots and other election papers made such an immense pile that they could not be put in the safe, but they were piled up in a corner, under the eye of a clerk, were guarded every night by two election officers, and were never out of sight of a Democratic officer. On the 16th of November the canvass had concluded, and on the 17th the package to which I have called attention, inclosing the ballots cast at the precinct in question, was put into another sack in the presence of quite a number of parties, including the secretary of the Democratic board of Alameda County, and put into the safe and securely sealed. All the persons watching this second wrapping and sealing, together with the Democratic clerk, signed their names upon the outer wrapper. When the contest was had, and the ballots were brought into court, the secretary of the Democratic committee of that county, and all the gentlemen who had indorsed their names on the outer wrapper, came into court and identified their signatures and swore that the package had not been tampered with.

The outside wrapper had been torn off and it disclosed the envelope which had been sealed up at Altamont precinct. The members of that board, the inspectors and judges, were present and they identified their signatures on the back of the envelope as genuine. They testified that the package was in the same condition that it was in when it left their hands after Donahoe had completed his work of sealing it up. The little sack was opened and it disclosed 70 ballots strung upon a string, the same number that was cast at Altamont precinct. Shafer and Gunn and Campbell and Thomas were there, the two inspectors and the two judges, and Gunn and Shafer identified their signatures on the back of the 70 ballots and identified them as the ballots cast at that precinct. The ballots were then opened and read, and the result was 29 votes for English and 22 for Hilborn, which would give Mr. Hilborn the election by 4 majority.

Of the men who swore as to the integrity of the ballots and the preservation of the ballots in the sack, all except one voted against Hilborn.

Mr. EVERETT. I wish to ask a question for information. The gentleman says there were 70 votes, and that 29 were for one candidate and 22 for the other. What became of the remaining votes?

Mr. WAUGH. There were 11 voters who did not vote at all for Congressman.

Mr. STOCKDALE. What mistake is it that the gentleman says it is admitted the committee made?

Mr. WAUGH. Well, I will give the facts. The official return shows 37 votes for Hilborn and 15 for English. The recount shows 29 for English and 22 for Hilborn. In my judgment there can be no question about these being the ballots counted. I might almost challenge any man to show any state of facts more positive and convincing as to the preservation of the ballots than we have in this case.

Now, let me call attention to another thing which is very strange. The majority of the committee ask that these votes be impeached because they come from an impeached custody. Who had the custody of these ballots, let me ask? Why, the six men who voted against Hilborn had. And who is it we are now asked to believe in order to impeach those ballots? The six men who swore that those ballots were preserved, although they voted against Mr. Hilborn.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. WAUGH. Very well; be quick, please.

Mr. COX. I will be. I understand the gentleman's argument in regard to the ballots. Now, how does he account for the mistake which the officers made in making the returns? How is that explained?

Mr. WAUGH. That is unexplained in this testimony except by two witnesses; the testimony of those two witnesses furnishes the only explanation of the mistake. This was a farming community. I intimate nothing against the intelligence of the farmers of the country; but these men were voting for the first time under a new system—the Australian voting system. The entire vote was cast by farmers except the vote of the young man who put these ballots into the sealed package; he was the schoolteacher. Upon cross-examination one witness was asked, "Can you account for the mistake?" This witness was Mr. Faulkner, one of the clerks. He answered, "Yes, we clerks made mistakes. In counting those 37 votes we got behind one another, so that there was a difference between us of as much as 2 votes." "Well, how did you do?" "Why, we stopped until the other fellows caught up."

Now, I want to call attention to another matter as accounting for the mistake which was made. When the Democratic clerk was on the stand he was asked, on cross-examination by Mr. Hilborn, "Did you see anything wrong that day, or anything that might cast a doubt upon the result of your count?" "Well," replied he, "I do not know what you might call a doubt." "Well, what occurs to your mind as a matter which might raise some doubt or some question?" "I do not think," said he, "that Mr. Thomas was a competent man to read those ballots; for he could not see."

What motive was there for those five men to perpetrate a fraud in connection with those ballots and render themselves liable to be sent to the penitentiary? Instead of perpetrating a crime and running the hazard of punishment, why in the world should they not have cast their five votes for Hilborn? What was the inducement for them to tamper with the ballots and try to change the vote? This district was Republican by 2,000 majority.

Could it occur to any mortal man that a change of 5 or 6 votes at that precinct would elect English. Was there any inducement in the world for them to perpetrate a fraud? None at all.

Mr. PENCE. After the recount showing a vote of 29 on the one side and 22 on the other, did that still leave a majority for Hilborn?

Mr. WAUGH. Yes, sir, a majority of 4, and the majority of this committee has not the courage to contradict it. Gentlemen on the other side will not deny what is shown upon the testimony of Democratic witnesses, that the votes counted were the ballots cast. They ask this House to act upon a sheer suspicion as against positive unmistakable evidence. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee). Twenty-three minutes. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAUGH. Does the other side want to occupy any time at this point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The other side has only fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. WAUGH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, Judge DANIELS.

[Mr. DANIELS addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH] yield?

Mr. WAUGH. Does not some gentleman upon the other side desire to address the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are only fifteen minutes remaining on the opposite side, while the gentleman's side has twenty-five minutes.

Mr. WAUGH. I yield to the gentleman from California, Mr. HILBORN.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, the result of the vote on this resolution is not of supreme importance to the country or to myself. The addition of one to the majority of this House and the subtraction of one from the minority will not seriously change the current of legislation.

It is desirable, however, that no bad precedent be here established which may rise up to trouble the House hereafter, that no wrong and dangerous principle be engrafted upon this branch of the law, which is already unsightly enough. As for myself, the disagreeable ordeal through which I am now passing will soon be over, and its ill effect will be as transient as the passing cloud.

But there are members on both sides of this House who have honored me with their friendship and their confidence, and I desire to call their attention to the facts of this case, which will tend to show the honesty of my claim to this seat, and that I am not an intruder in this House.

I invite your attention particularly to one feature of this case. If any fraud was committed at any precinct in that district at the last election, no one has charged or intimated that it was with my knowledge or connivance. I might go further and say that no one has charged that any friend of mine, personal or political, participated in any fraud upon the ballot box at that election.

The contestant bases his claim to my seat on this startling proposition, that certain of his political friends and associates, after working for his election and voting for him, committed a felony by falsifying the election returns of that precinct in my favor, and therefore he ought to have my seat; that certain officers of that election board who counted and canvassed the votes of the precinct, all but one of whom voted for him, and not one of whom voted for me, stuffed the ballot box in my favor, without my knowledge or connivance, or that of my friends, and therefore I ought to be unseated.

I submit, it is hard enough to be held responsible for the acts of one's political friends; but it is the refinement of cruelty to make him suffer for the acts of his political enemies. [Laughter and applause.]

If there was fraud at the election in that precinct, it was not committed by my supporters, for no man who voted for me was in a position to miscount a vote or to change a ballot. Of the eight election officers of that precinct, only two voted for me. Six of them swear they voted against me, and five of them swear that they voted for the contestant. And yet the contestant bases his claim to this seat upon the charge that his Democratic friends and supporters deliberately and intentionally returned a fraudulent tally sheet, committed a felony, braved the terrors of the penitentiary in my interest.

If his contention is correct, all the members of that board, including his Democratic friends, were in the conspiracy. They were all ballot-box stuffers and perjurers, whose oaths are to be rejected except when they swear that they voted for him, and then they are to be believed. The committee, in order to make up the 37 votes which they say they find for the contestant in that precinct, are compelled to include these five men. They can not get the 37 votes without them, and they are compelled to include them.

In their report the committee say:

> Thirty-seven of these electors swore unmistakably that they voted for the contestant. * * * The character of these voters has much to do in determining the confidence to be placed in their testimony.
> They are unimpeached and unimpeachable. * * *
> The committee believes that they spoke the truth, and that their testimony ought to be relied on.

The Democratic members of that board are made in this case to play the double part of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde; an official character which is satanic, and a private character which is saintly. As officers of the election they committed crimes against the ballot so flagrant, and perjuries so rank, that the ballots themselves are tainted with their leprous touch and must be rejected; but the scene changes when their votes are necessary to make up the plurality for the contestant, and then they appear, cleansed of all their sins, with their faces glowing with such a halo of virtue that is an affront to doubt their veracity.

As officers they are felons; as Democratic affidavit makers they are saints. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The crime committed by these Democratic officials must be sternly and severely rebuked; and the way to do that is to turn out a Republican Congressman and put in a Democrat.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I ask for inormation.

Mr. HILBORN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If I understand the gentleman, it is alleged that these five election officers committed perjury, to say the least?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In falsifying the returns, so that the ballots are rejected?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And then these same five men go on the stand and swear that they voted for the contestant?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. So they reject them as officers and take their evidence as individuals, and their evidence is necessary to seat the contestant?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

But these men are not perjurers, are not ballot-box stuffers. They are good citizens of that community, who have the respect of their neighbors. Every one of them, Democrats, Prohibitionists, Republicans, and Independents alike swear that that ballot box was not stuffed and that there was no opportunity to commit such a crime.

This contest hinges upon the vote of Altamont precinct. The contestant relies entirely upon the oaths of the voters. I rely entirely upon the ballots themselves.

The question is whether the ballots, which have been carefully kept, according to law, in the hands of the proper custodian, and are perfectly identified as the ballots cast in the precinct on that day, shall be received as the best evidence of the vote of that precinct, or whether the uncertain depositions of the voters shall be accepted as the best evidence of the vote.

The law governing the case is well established and has been unquestioned for years. It is that the ballots are the primary and best evidence; that the deposition of the voter is secondary evidence, and can not overcome the force of the ballot.

This rule is so well established and the reasons for the rule so evident that it seems unnecessary to discuss it.

It can not be better stated than by Mr. O'Ferrall, in the case of Greevy vs. Scull. It is proper here to state that the contestant relied upon the testimony of the voters' oaths to show for whom they cast their ballots.

In that case Mr. O'Ferrall says:

> It is a well-established principle that the ballot of a voter which has been safely preserved by some authorized custodian is the best evidence as to how or for whom he voted and must be produced, and that the testimony of the voter himself is secondary and inadmissible.

And again:

> The ballots were papers pertaining to the election; * * * they were the best evidence; they were mute witnesses, yet they told their own story and were unimpeachable; they could not be bribed nor corrupted.

This rule is long established. In Otero vs. Gallegos (1 Bartlett, 177), decided in 1856, the committee say:

> It would be productive of unending frauds and perjuries to permit parties to come forward, after an election by ballot, and swear they voted differently from what the ballots themselves exhibit. * * * The only proof which ought to be admitted to establish a fraud, such as that charged in this case, would be to show by affirmative testimony that the judges, clerks, or some other persons actually withdrew the tickets given by the voters and substituted others for them; the oath of the voters should not be received to contradict the record and the ballots themselves. The very nature of the ballot renders this principle a necessity; otherwise, every election might be tried over a second time by the oath of the voters instead of the ballots deposited in the boxes.

I invoke another rule of law which is also well settled, and may be stated as follows:

> The ballots are the primary and best evidence. The tally list is only secondary evidence, and the mere fact that it is incorrect does not destroy the weight of the ballots as the best and primary evidence.
> When the statute expressly provides for the preservation of the ballots by a particular officer for the specific purpose of determining the right to a public office, the ballots are the highest and best evidence for that purpose, and, if preserved as the law requires, are the only conclusive evidence of the result of the election. The certified statement and declaration of the officers of election are prima facie evidence only. (Paine on Elections, section 780, citing Reynolds vs. State, 61 Indiana, 392; Hudson vs. Solomon, 19 Kansas, 177.)

In California the ballots are preserved for the very purpose of correcting the tally sheets.

> Upon the receipt of the packages the clerk must file the one containing ballots, and must keep it unopened and unaltered for twelve months, after which time, if there is not a contest commenced in some tribunal having jurisdiction about such election, he must burn the package, without opening or examining its contents. (California Political Code, section 1265.)
> If within twelve months there is such a contest commenced, he must keep the package unopened and unaltered until it is finally determined, when he must, as provided in the preceding section, destroy it, unless such package is, by virtue of an order of the tribunal in which the contest is pending, brought and opened before it, to the end that evidence may be had of its contents, in which event the package and contents are in the custody of such tribunal. (California Political Code, section 1266.)

These sections have been construed by the Supreme Court of California in the case of People vs. Holden, 28 California, 136, in which case the court says:

> The Legislature could have had no other design in thus providing for the preservation of the ballots than to make them evidence of their own contents and a test of the correctness of the returns made up from them by the officers of the election.
> * * * Thus they are recognized by the law not only as a part of the election returns, and therefore evidence of what transpired at the election but as evidence of a higher and more satisfactory grade than the tally paper. Intrinsically considered, it must be conceded by all that the ballots themselves are more reliable and therefore better evidence than a mere summary made from them. Into the latter errors may find their way, but with the former this can not happen. The relation between the two is at least analogous to that of primary and secondary evidence.

In the case of Hudson vs. Solomon, 19 Kansas, 177, Judge Brewer, now justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking for the court said:

> As between the ballots cast at an election, and a canvass of those ballots by the election officers, the former are the primary, the controlling evidence.

In this case there was a difference of 23 votes between the ballots and the tally list, and it was not considered that the returns or election officers were impeached thereby.

The same rule is again laid down in the same court in Dory vs. Lynn, 31 Kansas, 753; and Reynolds vs. State, 61 Indiana, 392; and State vs. Judge, 13 Alabama, 805.

In a very late case (Ex-parte Brown, 97 California, 83) decided in December, 1892, the supreme court of California discussed the question of the ballots as evidence in a case where a fraudulent tally list had been made by the election officers, and said the ballots were still the best evidence. That the fact that some member or members of the board had been able to return a fraudulent tally list did not impeach the board or the ballots, but the latter were preserved to be resorted to in just such a case.

In that case Napthaly, one of the election officers, was on trial, charged with having intentionally committed a fraud in counting the ballots, so that the tally list returned was false and fraudulent. The magistrate examining the criminal case ordered the registrar, the legal custodian of the ballots, to produce them before him to prove the crime. The registrar refused to obey the order on the ground that the law required the ballots to be preserved for evidence in contested-election cases only, and that he could not give them up even to be used in criminal proceedings. The supreme court sustained this contention, and in the decision the court said:

> Ever since the system of voting by ballot came into use it has, of course, been possible for election officers to commit frauds in counting, the best evidence of which would be furnished by an inspection of the ballots themselves. * * * It was to preserve the best evidence of the actual vote for the trial of contested elections, and to protect it by all the safeguards that could be conveniently thrown around it. * * * The object of the law being to afford the means of impeaching the returns of the election officers, not only all candidates, but the entire public, is interested in preserving the integrity of the sealed packages of ballots.

Bear in mind that this language is used by the court in a case wherein some of the officers of election had intentionally counted the ballots incorrectly and returned a fraudulent tally list, and the court holds that the ballots are still the best evidence.

The law does not impeach an entire election board of eight members because some one or two of their number, unintentionally or even intentionally, returned what is admitted to be an incorrect tally list.

I claim the ballots are fully identified, are the best evidence, and the recount should be taken as showing the correct vote of the precinct, giving English 29 and Hilborn 22 therein.

On the taking of testimony on the part of contestant in this precinct he called 47 witnesses, which included all those who were opposed to me, and took their depositions as to whom they voted for.

On cross-examination my attorney, in order to find out about the fairness of the election and the credit to be given the ballots, questioned each of the six members of the election board who were opposed to me, as to those matters. All six of the officers—five of whom had just testified that they voted for English and one for the Prohibition candidate—testified that the election was fair and legal, and the ballots could not have been changed or tampered with.

All the officers questioned on the subject swore that the ballots taken from the ballot box, read, tallied, sealed up by the board, and delivered to John Campbell, Democratic judge, to be by him delivered to the county clerk, were the identical ballots cast in that precinct that day, and were, when so sealed up and delivered, in the same condition as when cast. There is not anywhere the slightest contradiction of this testimony. All the witnesses agreed perfectly as to that. Nowhere in all the testimony does any witness intimate that the ballots were in any way changed or tampered with, but all the witnesses, of all parties, testify that there was no opportunity for any changing or tampering with them.

John Campbell, Democratic judge of election, on cross-examination testified as follows (page 11 of testimony):

Q. Did anybody at that election have an opportunity of stuffing that ballot box?
A. None whatever; it would have taken a smarter man than I know to do it.
Q. Then you don't believe, Mr. Campbell, that the ballot box in this case was stuffed?
A. No; I don't believe it was.
Q. Then, Mr. Campbell, you believe that the ballots that you counted when you canvassed the election returns were the ballots that were cast by the voters at that election?
A. It could not be any other.
Q. The ballots were duly sealed up, were they not, as soon as counted, in an envelope, and placed in your custody?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And by you delivered in the same condition to the county clerk of Alameda County?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you believe that the ballots delivered by you to the county clerk were the identical ballots cast by the voters of Altamont precinct?
A. Yes, sir.

Again, on pages 97 and 98, Campbell testifies to the same thing in stronger language; and to the question, "Mr. Campbell, did you deliver to the county clerk in that envelope, on November 9, the very same ballots that were cast by the electors at the election in Altamont precinct on November 8?" answers, "They must have been the same ballots, because they were in there. I could not see that they could change themselves. They could not turn over in their coffin. They were all sealed up."

To the same effect is the testimony of W. H. Donohue, election clerk (page 23).

W. R. Thomas, election judge, testifies to the same effect as fully and completely as Mr. Campbell (page 30):

Q. Was there any opportunity for any person to change those ballots or any of them from the time they were cast until they were sealed up in the envelope and placed in the hands of Mr. John Campbell to be delivered to the county clerk?
A. No, sir.

The above was on cross-examination, and afterwards when called as a witness by contestee (page 94) he reiterates the same thing.

Edward Gunn, Democratic inspector of election (page 32), testifies on cross-examination:

Q. Do you believe, Mr. Gunn, that the ballots which were counted, canvassed by the election board in the evening, were the same ballots cast by the electors?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was there any opportunity for those ballots to be changed from the time they were cast to the time they were placed in an envelope and sealed up by the board?
A. No, sir.

And again (page 95), when called by contestee, he testifies to the same effect.

W. B. Faulkner, clerk (page 39), saw nothing illegal or unfair about the election, but saw two irregularities: First, that Mr. Thomas, who called off the ballots, was an incompetent reader; and, second, that Mr. Campbell was selected by lot to take the returns to the county clerk.

Timothy Ryder, clerk (page 46), says he saw nothing irregular or illegal, and there was no opportunity for any person to stuff the ballot box.

All the above are witnesses called and examined by English. All but Thomas swear they voted for English, and none for me; and on the testimony of each and every one of them contestant relies for the vote he claims.

Afterwards, on the opening of the ballots, my attorney called T. M. Shaeffer, Republican inspector on the board, who corroborated the other officers (page 96):

Q. Do you know, Mr. Shaeffer, whether the ballots which were cast at that election are the same ballots which were sealed up in that envelope that evening?
A. The same ballots.
Q. Was there any opportunity of their being changed during the day?
A. None whatever.

In short, contestant complains in his brief on page 8 that contestee "surfeited the record with this kind of evidence," and then complains that we did not call Udy, Republican clerk, to testify he did not change the ballots, when Udy is shown by good Democratic witnesses to have had nothing to do with the ballot box and no opportunity to change the ballots.

All the election officers were present when the ballot box was opened after the polls closed. The box was opened publicly on a long table around which the election officers sat. As soon as the ballots were taken out of the ballot box they were first counted and numbered on the back from 1 to 70 by the inspectors, and the Republican and Democratic inspectors both wrote their initials thereon.

The ballots were then canvassed upon the long table spoken of, Thomas calling them all off, Gunn looking at each ballot to see they were called correctly, Donohue and Faulkner acting as tally clerks and Campbell stringing the ballots. All these men were opposed to and swear they voted against me.

When the ballots had been canvassed they were strung upon a string, placed in an envelope, the envelope sealed with sealing wax, and each member wrote his name against the seal. The sealed package of ballots and the other election papers were then delivered to John Campbell, Democratic judge, selected by lot to deliver them to the county clerk. From the time this package went into the hands of Campbell, the Democratic judge, to the time the package of ballots was opened in the court room in Oakland, and the ballots counted in this contest in the presence of contestant and contestee, it is carefully and completely traced by the evidence.

Campbell delivered the sealed package in the same condition he received it to the county clerk of Alameda County, the proper custodian, on the next day, the 9th of November, 1892 (page 97, 98, 99). This package, with the packages from the other precincts, remained in the custody of the county clerk, guarded by deputies, until the supervisors of the county examined the tally lists and declared the official result, when they were sealed up in a vault, and remained in a vault, of which the county clerk held the combination, until produced in the court room and recounted (testimony pages 99, 100, 101). Before the package of Altamont ballots was placed in the vault by the county clerk, it was inclosed in an additional wrapper, which outer wrapper was securely tied and sealed by representatives of the Republican and Democratic parties, including the secretary of the Democratic county committee.

When the package was produced in court to be opened these witnesses were present and testified the package was in the same condition as when the outer wrapper was put on and sealed up, all the wrappings, fastenings, and seals being intact (testimony, pages 103, 104). Afterward the outer wrapper was taken off and the inspectors and judges of election—Gunn, Shaeffer, Campbell, and Thomas, the four principal election officers—were produced and testified the package was in the same condition as when sealed up at Altamont, the seals and signatures being intact, so that it could not have been opened (testimony, page 112 to question 30, page 113, page 114 to question 23, page 115). The envelope containing the ballots, being a strong cloth bag covered with paper, was then opened and the ballots of Altamont precinct, 70 in number, found folded up, strung upon a string at both ends, the strings being tied so as to hold the ballots together (testimony, page 107). The ballots were then counted in the presence of the parties and their attorneys and 29 found to be for English, 22 for Hilborn, 6 for Lyon, 2 for Scranton, and 11 blank (testimony, pages 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, and 112). Each ballot was found to be numbered on the back and to bear the initials

"T. M. S." and "E. G.," being the initials of T. M. Shaeffer and Edward Gunn, the Republican and Democratic inspectors of election in the precinct, placed thereon in the presence of the election board as soon as the ballots were taken out of the ballot box on the evening of the election, and before they were read, as before stated. In doing this the inspectors had followed a requirement of the law which is only considered compulsory in San Francisco. Being recalled, after the ballots had been taken from the envelope and recounted, they identified their initials and the number in their respective handwritings on the back of each and every one of the 70 ballots (testimony, pages 112, 115), conclusively identifying the ballots, if we believe their testimony.

Contestant did not attempt by any direct testimony to show the ballots produced in court and recounted were not the identical ballots voted at Altamont, or that they were not in the same condition they were in when cast by the electors. He offered no direct evidence at all upon the subject, and he could not well do so, for all his supporters and witnesses who were in a position to know the facts, testified to the integrity of the ballots. Their identity and integrity was demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt by seven of the eight members of the election board (all but one of them opposed me), by the county officers, the secretary of the Democratic county committee, and others.

I claim that the testimony proves this: That the ballots counted were the identical ballots cast at Altamont precinct; that there had been no opportunity for tampering with them; that they had been properly preserved by the proper custodian, as required by law. And therefore they are the best evidence for whom the vote of the precinct was cast.

IMPOSSIBILITY OF CHANGING THE BALLOTS.

I want to call your attention to the impossibility of changing the ballots in this election. Suppose one of the officers of the election had attempted it. How could he have carried it out? In the first place, he would have had to open the ballot box, which was always in sight of the eight election officers and the bystanders. He would have had to pick out and open the ballots until he got one of the kind he wanted. Then the difficulty would just commence, because he could not change the ballot, as the cross is stamped opposite the name of the person voted for. There would have to be an entirely new ballot. He could not change the cross from one name to another. There would have to be a change in the paper itself.

Now, there is only one place where he could get a ballot and that is from the ballot clerk. He has got to get the new ballot from the ballot clerk, and it must be torn from his book of ballots when they are bound and numbered. He must stamp the ballot opposite the names of the candidates, and fold it and place it in the ballot box without being discovered. I say that that would be a feat of legerdemain more wonderful than has ever been seen on the stage.

Another difficulty would occur when the ballots were returned to the county clerk, for all the tickets missing from the ballot book must be accounted for. Fraud or mistakes in counting those ballots was possible, but a change of the ballots of that precinct was impossible.

There was no intentional fraud practiced in that precinct. The high character of the election officers negatives that. The fact that six of the eight election officers were opposed to me adds to the improbability. If the ballots were changed in the interest of Mr. English they would have been made to correspond with the affidavits of the voters. If they had been tampered with in my interest they would have been changed to correspond with the tally sheet.

Mr. COX. With the returns.

Mr. HILBORN. With the returns. The ballots as recounted show just the normal vote for that precinct for Congressman. We both get just the vote which might naturally be expected. Here is the proof of it. The Democratic candidates for the county officers in that precinct, got an average of 29 votes, and Mr. English gets 29 votes in this recount. The average of the Republican votes for county officers was 26 votes and I got 22, 4 less. Do you suppose that if that had been done in my interest they would have allowed me to fall 4 ballots behind all the local candidates? This was the first election held under the Australian ballot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILBORN. Have I consumed all the time allotted to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed all the time allotted to him. There are ten minutes remaining to that side.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have ten minutes. He is the contestee, and he should be allowed further time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes more, and that it be extra time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that ten minutes' additional time be given to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the same for the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And that it be given to him without being charged to the minority side.

Mr. BROWN. I object to that.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask that the debate be extended ten minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the time be extended ten minutes on each side. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILBORN. In that district and all over the State of California, it being the first time that we had voted under the Australian ballot, it seems that thousands of men, not understanding it, went into the booths and got confused and voted only for the head of the ticket. In this one district there were forty-five hundred voters who voted for the Presidential electors and for nobody else. The local county officers suffered in the same way, and in the country precincts in Alameda county, adjoining and abutting upon Altamont, Mr. English ran behind the Cleveland electors 17 per cent. Now, Mr. Cleveland received at that precinct 36 votes, and deducting 17 per cent from that, it leaves a fraction over 29.

There is another thing about this to which I ask your attention. I was never in Altamont precinct in my life until after that election. I had never heard of it. My district is a Republican district and I and everybody else thought there was no danger of my election. I went through that canvass without asking a single man to vote for me. In all the speeches that I made I never, with one exception, mentioned the fact that I was a candidate for office, so certain was I that I was to be elected. Now, is it probable that under such conditions I would go up into that Democratic precinct where there were Democratic election officers and try to perpetrate a fraud for the sake of 70 votes? Why if they had offered me the 70 votes I don't think I would have accepted them. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I never was in that precinct until this contest commenced. On the day of the election there was not a man in Altamont precinct who knew me or whom I knew. If there was anything wrong in the election there it was the gratuitous act of men who were strangers to me and of a different political party. Now, ought I to suffer under those circumstances?

It is just possible that the smallness of my plurality may have invited this contest, but I can not think that will weigh with this House. I believe this House has too much respect for the genius of our institutions to disregard a majority, no matter how small it may be.

I believe, gentlemen, that you will not ruthlessly unseat a member of this House who has been lawfully elected, even though it be by the small plurality of 4 votes. The smallness of the plurality does not palliate the wrong. I am not here asking favors. All I want is justice. I have done nothing in this matter of which I am ashamed. I hope every member of this House will be able to say the same thing after this vote is taken.

I would not change places with the man who would do an injustice to another because he had him in his power. I pity the position of the honest man who feels constrained by party fealty to do an unworthy act, the recollection of which will bring to his cheeks the blush of shame. I thank you, gentlemen, for your kind attention. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH]. [Applause.]

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on the other side have twenty-five minutes remaining, and they ought to occupy some of that time now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are twenty-five minutes remaining on the side of the majority, and fifteen on the side of the minority.

Mr. BROWN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE].

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, this contest has been practically reduced to a single simple question of fact, namely: Were the ballots offered in evidence by contestee as the ballots cast in Altamont precinct, Alameda County, so far discredited as to justify a resort to the parol evidence of the voters to determine the vote cast for member of Congress in that precinct? All other questions are practically eliminated.

Contestant concedes Mr. Hilborn is entitled to have the 8 votes claimed in Clarksburg precinct counted for him, and the returns from all other precincts, except Altamont, are accepted by both parties.

The official returns from Altamont precinct showing the vote of Mr. Hilborn to be 37 and Mr. English 15 are admitted by contestee to be incorrect.

Contestee claims that the ballots produced on this contest should be received as conclusive evidence of the vote cast for Representative in Congress in that precinct, while the contestant claims that the ballots so produced have been so far discredited that the vote ought not to be determined by them, but should be determined by the testimony of the voters of the precinct.

If the ballots produced are to be received as conclusive evidence of the vote, then contestee is shown to have been elected by a plurality of 4 votes. If the ballots are rejected, and the vote proved by the testimony of the voters, then contestant is shown to have been elected by a plurality of 26 votes. There are 23 votes cast in the precinct that are unaccounted for in the testimony. If it be conceded that they were all cast in favor of Mr. Hilborn, Mr. English would still have a plurality of 3 according to the testimony. But under the uniform decisions of this House, when resort is had to the testimony of electors to determine how they voted at the election in question, votes not proved can not be considered. There is no presumption that they were cast for the sitting member. I refer to the cases of Featherstone vs. Cate, Fifty-first Congress, page 103; and Bisbee vs. Finley, 6 Congressional Election Cases, page 62.

THE BALLOTS WERE DISCREDITED.

Were the ballots produced and offered in evidence by contestee as the ballots cast at Altamont precinct so far discredited as to justify their rejection and a resort to parol evidence to show how the electors voted for Representative in Congress? It seems to me that the ballots were overwhelmingly discredited. In the first place it must be remembered that the burden of proof is upon the party offering the ballots as evidence to satisfactorily prove that they are the identical ballots cast at the election in question, and that they are, when produced, in the same condition in which they were when cast and counted.

How was that proof made in this case? Contestee called all of the election officers in the precinct, except Mr. Henry Udy, the Republican clerk of the board of election, who could not be found or subpœnaed by either contestant or contestee, as appears from the record. The officers of election identified the ballots produced as those cast at Altamont precinct, basing their identification of the ballots upon their recognition of the initials of two members of the election board on the back of each ballot, these initials having been placed on the back of the ballot without any requirement or authority of law. The officers also testified that the package containing the ballots was in the same condition when produced as evidence that it was in when sealed up by the board at Altamont.

Contestee also introduced the testimony of officers connected with the county clerk's office to prove that the package containing the ballots had been safely kept, after delivery to that officer by the representatives of the election board conveying the ballots from the precinct polling place to the county clerk's office. But it appeared from their testimony that the package containing the ballots was thrown upon the floor of one of the rooms of the county clerk's office with other similar packages, and remained on the floor of that room, which was open to the public during the day and to a number of deputy clerks during the night, for several days after the election, when the package was placed in another cover, sealed up, and deposited in a safe.

The evidence of safe-keeping from the time of this final sealing and deposit in the safe is fairly satisfactory. But the evidence of safe-keeping from the time the ballots were cast until they were put in the safe of the county clerk is most inconclusive and very unsatisfactory. The proof of safe-keeping required by the laws of California as the condition precedent for the introduction of ballots in evidence to prove the vote cast was insufficient under the laws of California to entitle the ballots to be received in evidence, even if they were not otherwise discredited. But they were otherwise positively discredited by evidence both direct and circumstantial.

In the first place, sir, the evidence shows that there were two elections for Representative in Congress held on the same day in that district and voted upon in the precinct of Altamont. One election was for Representative in Congress for the short term, made vacant by the resignation of Hon. Joseph McKenna, and the other for Representative in Congress for the full term, commencing March 4, 1893. Mr. English and Mr. Hilborn were respectively the Democratic and Republican candidates for both terms. Under the Australian ballot law of California, the elections were not only held on the same day, but the candidates, both for the short term and the full term, were voted for on the same official ballot. They were, however, separate elections as truly as if they had been held on different days.

Now, it appears conclusively and confessedly that the election officers, who were the first custodians of the ballots in question, not only defrauded contestant out of 29 votes, by mistake or otherwise, for the long term, but that they also defrauded contestant out of 31 votes for the short term, giving contestee the benefit and advantage in both cases of every vote taken from the contestant. The mistake in the returns concerning one election only might be accounted for upon the theory that the election officers, or some of them, had honestly blundered, but it is absolutely impossible to conceive that the mistake against contestant and in favor of contestee in both elections could have been honest, or could have been otherwise than willfully fraudulent.

It is impossible to explain both of those wrongs against the contestant upon any theory consistent with the honesty of all members of the election board. Yet the ballots, if received as evidence, must depend for their value upon the testimony of the very men who confessedly defrauded contestant out of 29 votes in one election and 31 votes in the other election upon the same day.

Another circumstance is that Altamont is a small precinct, in which but 70 ballots were cast altogether, and easily accessible to the county seat of Alameda county by rail. The ballots could have been easily counted within a short time after midnight of election day, but the returns were among the last to be delivered at the county clerk's office.

Mr. HILBORN. Where does the gentleman find evidence of that? They were not the last returns that came in. The returns from Altamont were in the open court-house at 5 o'clock.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Well, I do not mean to say that the evidence shows that they were the last to come in; but it does show that, considering the small number of ballots to be counted, they were very tardy in coming in, and several hours before they did come in it was well known that the vote for the full term at least was very close in the district. The returns should have been in the county clerk's office by 9 o'clock on the morning after the election at latest, and they were not delivered there until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. In the meantime there was ample opportunity for men who had confessedly certified and presented false and worthless returns in both elections to tamper with the ballots if they were so disposed and if they deemed it necessary to the accomplishment of their ends.

Mr. HILBORN. I am sure the gentleman does not want to misrepresent.

Mr. MAGUIRE. No, sir; but I have only ten minutes in which to present my views and I wish you would wait and answer what I say in your own time. I do not wish to be abrupt in refusing to answer the gentleman from California [Mr. Hilborn], but I must have more time, Mr. Speaker, or I must not be interrupted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The ballots, when opened, disclosed another peculiar condition. They purported to show a vote very widely at variance not only with the returns, but with the testimony of the voters as to how they had voted. The testimony of 37 voters was positive and direct that they had voted for the contestant, while the ballots produced showed only 29 votes for the contestant, and the returns made by the election officers, upon whose testimony the value of the ballots as evidence must rest, showed that contestant had received only 15 votes.

Again, it appears from the evidence that there were several illiterate voters in the precinct who were obliged to rely in the marking of their ballots upon members of the very board of election who had made such glaring and inexplicable mistakes against the contestant and in favor of the contestee in counting the votes for them respectively in the matter of both elections. The presumption may well be indulged from all the evidence on this subject, that some of the election officers in marking the ballots of these illiterate voters falsified them. I do not claim that the testimony of the voter, standing alone, without any other circumstance to discredit the ballots, ought to be taken to overturn the showing made by the ballots, even when marked by an election officer for illiterate voters under the law.

I am not prepared to go so far as the majority of the committee has gone in the matter of discrediting the ballots as evidence of the votes cast by illiterate voters. But it is wholly unnecessary to discuss the question thus raised by the committee, because in this case the substitution of parol evidence for the ballots does not rest upon the mere oath of the voter against the ballot as found in the box, but upon overwhelming evidence of fraud committed by the election officers, upon whose official oaths the presumption ordinarily arises that they have done their duty, and that the ballots truly represent the will of the voters as expressed in writing at the election.

It is urged that five of the election officers testified that they had voted for Mr. English and against Mr. Hilborn; and gentlemen on the other side seem to attach great importance to this testimony given by the election officers. Indeed, no circumstance appearing in the evidence seems to be given so much weight by the gentlemen on the other side as this testimony of the election officers that they voted for Mr. English; and they speak of our allegations of fraud as an attempt to prove that Democratic election officers had defrauded a Democratic candidate for Congress. Some of these election officers were appointed as Democrats and some of them were appointed as representatives of other parties; but the so-called Democrats were selected by a Republican board of supervisors to represent the Democratic party in that precinct.

But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says we are playing hot and cold in this matter; that we are asking the members of this House to discredit the ballots, because of willful fraud committed by the election officers against the contestant and in favor of the contestee, while in the same breath we are asking the House to accept the testimony of these same election officers that they voted for Mr. English and that we counted the votes of those election officers for Mr. English upon their testimony. The criticism is unjust. We are not bound to reject the testimony of these men in so far as it bears in our favor, simply because we charge some of them with having committed a great fraud, involving a violation of their oath of office, against contestant in another matter.

I do admit, however, that the gentlemen on the other side have a right to ask that the testimony of these witnesses to the effect that they voted for English be discredited or even rejected, upon the ground that the testimony concerning their conduct in the count and in the keeping of the ballots absolutely discredits them. Yet, if their votes for Mr. English, as shown by their testimony, be thrown out entirely, Mr. English would still appear to be elected by a plurality of 21 votes.

Mr. HULICK. What motive had those election officers to commit a fraud?

Mr. MAGUIRE. What motive prompts any election officer to commit a fraud? I do not know, nor is it necessary that we should know.

Mr. BROWN. To get their party in.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not charge that Mr. Hilborn was a party to this fraud. I have known him for twenty years as an honorable and upright man, incapable of engaging in any such fraud. But he had interests behind him in that election in which I have not the same faith that I have in Mr. Hilborn personally. Behind Mr. Hilborn was the Republican party, and behind the Republican party there was the most powerful and corrupt combination of specially privileged interests that ever sought to pervert or subvert the popular will anywhere in the world. Those interests had built up for themselves, through the Republican party, a protective system of special privileges, for the enrichment of classes by the robbery of the masses, and they relied upon the Republican representatives in Congress to sustain their special privileges by sustaining that system.

Those interests have in every national election spent millions of dollars in support of the Republican party by means and methods which Mr. English asserts were resorted to in order to deprive him of the right accorded him by the votes of his fellow-citizens of the Third district of California. Those beneficiaries of the Republican protective system were a thousand times more interested in the election of Mr. Hilborn than Mr. Hilborn was himself, and the fact as stated by Mr. Hilborn (and I accept his statement), that he was practically unacquainted with the precinct and did no canvassing there, cuts but little figure.

Mr. HULICK. Then you charge that those election officers were bribed to commit fraud?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not charge anything. I state the facts as they appear from the evidence now before the House. If to your mind those facts show that the officers in question were bribed, draw your own conclusions. You have drawn that conclusion from the facts which I have stated without any statement from me of the conclusions which I have drawn.

One of the judges of election at Altamont, Mr. John Campbell, seems to have been inclined to reach the same conclusion. On page 11 of the testimony I find the following questions and answers. In the course of his examination contestee's attorney asked:

Q. Do you think that any of them would stuff a ballot box or make a false return of an election?
A. There is a shadow of a doubt in my mind as to that question, and I can not answer it.
Q. What is that shadow of a doubt?
A. That is as far as I want to answer the question.

Mr. HULICK. That is the conclusion you wish us to come to, that they were bribed.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It is not necessary for me to state what I desire you to conclude. I have stated the facts; you have suggested the conclusion. That is your affair.

Mr. LACEY. Were there two sets of tickets?

Mr. MAGUIRE. No; one set. The names of the candidates for the long and the short terms were separately printed on a single ballot, but the counting was as separate as it would have been if there had been two sets of ballots.

There is a sample ballot of reduced size attached to the testimony here, the part relating to both Congressional elections being in the following form:

Representative in Congress.		Vote for one.
46	Warren B. English.....Democrat
47	Samuel G. Hilborn.....Republican
48	J. L. Lyon.....People's party
49	L. B. Scranton.....Prohibition
50

Representative in Congress (to fill unexpired term).		Vote for one.
51	Warren B. English.....Democrat
52	Samuel G. Hilborn.....Republican
53	J. L. Lyon.....People's party
54

Mr. MARSHALL. How many votes did Cleveland get in that precinct?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Thirty-six.

Mr. MARSHALL. How many did Harrison?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Twenty-two.

This reminds me of another circumstance—the circumstance, in fact, that first discredited the returns from the precinct and which also discredits the ballots. Neither the ballots nor the returns conform at all to the known political views of the voters of that precinct. The precinct is made up of citizens who are permanent residents, conservative farmers whose political views are not subject to the sudden changes that frequently appear in communities having a floating or comparatively transient population.

In 1888 the Democratic vote for President in that precinct, with the same population, was for Cleveland, 48; for Harrison, 19; and for Representatives in Congress: Democratic, 47; Republican, 20. This, I take it, is also a circumstance against the ballots, as it was a most striking circumstance to discredit the returns when they were publicly announced.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWN. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I thank the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] for this courtesy, and will avail myself of this opportunity to sum up my statement.

I have practically said all that I desire to say upon the question.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Who handed out those tickets?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Two of the election clerks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the unquestioned circumstances which I have detailed, and which are fully supported by the evidence, in connection with the direct testimony of the 37 voters of Altamont precinct, who upon the stand as witnesses, with the full right of the contestee to cross-examine them, testified that they voted for the contestant, Mr. English, are entirely sufficient to absolutely discredit the ballots produced as evidence of the votes cast for contestant and contestee at the election in November, 1892.

I can not imagine how in the nature of things, considering the conditions under which elections must be conducted and the absolute control which election officers must be given of the ballots until they are delivered to the county clerk, or other depositary designated by law, the ballots can ever be more completely discredited than they have been in this case. There is no dispute about these circumstances, and there is no denial that 37 voters testified that they voted for Mr. English. It is simply denied that the circumstances which I have stated, and which are conclusively proved, are sufficient, in connection with the testimony of the voters, to justify the rejection of the ballots.

But these circumstances, in connection with the legal requirement that the party seeking to introduce the ballots in evidence shall make satisfactory proof of their identity and safe-keeping, and the striking circumstance that the election officers who had the custody of these ballots made a false return of the votes cast
